No man was ever more distinctively an artist. Blake lived, and lived to express his own individual sense of beauty, for just seventy years. The mere quantity of work he accomplished is most remarkable. Yet it is a bare seventy-nine other years since his death, and the work he left behind him is all dispersed, scattered over half the English-speaking world. Some of it is safe and jealously guarded in our museums; some of it exists in private collections; much, and of the best, is held in those United States which were but the rebellious colonies of Blake's abstracted young manhood. For in judging the value and the originality of his poetical achievement one should never forget that William Blake dates back as far as 1757, and grew up in the very midst of Dr. Johnson's formal and exclusive and aristocratic and periwigged England. It is astonishing to remember what changes this one man lived to see—and how little they disturbed or affected him. The American Revolution, the French Revolution, shook and tested and strained the whole fabric of civilization. England staggered and righted herself. Nelson, Wellington, Napoleon, went and came. The Peninsular War was fought, and Waterloo. A new generation arose and dreamt new dreams and preached very new doctrines. Burns was only two years Blake's junior. The Lake Poets were yet to appear, and Shelley and Walter Scott, and Keats and Byron.

⁂

Our modern world itself was born out of those stormy years, and awoke and passed before Blake's eyes without ever interrupting his close absorption, his intent preoccupation. Kings were restored and acclaimed and beheaded; kingdoms rose and fell; a new world shone like a star at the horizon—and still the artist who was Blake pursued his unremitting art, and lived, remote, withdrawn in a vast alien world of visions, unshaken by rumors of war, or sounds of defeat, or paeans of triumph, or the clash of ringing changes. His letters contain no single allusion to the political events of his time. And this is the less to be wondered at, since Blake was probably the most naturally and intrinsically unworldly man of the modern world. He has been repeatedly accused of actual madness. Wordsworth (who did not know him) speaks of his "insane genius." Southey, the incessant and uninspired Southey, dubs him "great, but insane," and it has always been the custom of the lesser biographers—the men with "Spirits too Flat for Phrensy"—to apologise for Blake's powers of poignant and painful vision by calling him a madman. Yet it is certain that this was never the opinion of those who knew him most familiarly. Butts, with whom he corresponded and was associated for more than half a lifetime, Fusell, Flaxman, Johnson, his publisher, Hayley, near whom he lived for some three years in closest, most intimate companionship, never doubted his fundamental sanity.

His letters, of which there are a vast number, bear every evidence of being written by a man of burning enthusiasms, and an idealist, and a visionary; but each individual letter shows, too, indisputable marks of common sense, and sober, and shrewd, and unaffected reasoning. When we remember that all his life long Blake was probably one of the most persistently industrious artists who ever lived—that he habitually worked twelve and fourteen hours a day at his engraving and coloring by hand of his own drawings—it is difficult to reconcile this sober and persistent mastery of one of the most delicate forms of the manual arts with any known aspect of insanity. And Blake was at all times a prodigious worker. "I don't understand what you mean by the want of a holiday," he would say to a friend. As Mrs. Blake described him, "Day and night Blake was always reading, writing, or designing." It is certain that at the age of 67 he began the study of Italian (in order to understand the Dante he was about to illustrate) and taught himself enough of the language to read it easily, as in other years he had taught himself Latin and French and even a certain amount of Greek. He was ever an affirmer; an asserter; a born partisan. "Negations are not merely contraries. Negations exist not," he writes somewhere. And again,

He who Doubts from what he sees
Will ne'er Believe, do what you Please,
If the Sun and Moon should Doubt
They'd immediately Go Out.

It is not difficult to imagine with what impatience, what scornful wonder, a man of such temperament must have met the obvious objections of conventional and literal minds.

And undoubtedly as he grew older in a society which made no place for him Blake fell at times into a habit of talking extravagantly and of set purpose to the more persistently inquisitive among his associates. The (very doubtful) story repeated by Leigh Hunt on hearsay about how Blake once took off his hat to the prophet Elijah in the Strand, the story of his seeing a fairy funeral, the story of his walking on the seashore with Moses, Homer, Dante, and Milton—"all majestic shadows, gray but luminous, and superior to the common height of men"—above all, the hundred-times repeated anecdote how Blake and Mrs. Blake were found on one occasion sitting naked in a summer-house in a small suburban back garden, and of how Blake encouraged the hesitating Mr. Butts to come in, "since we are only Adam and Eve, you know"—these and a score of similar legends, generally repeated at second and third hand, might easily mean little more than that Blake, too, took a childish delight in playing like a serious child with his untroubled imagination.

William Blake was born in London, in Golden Square, on Nov. 28, 1757, (the year of Canova's birth,) and was the son of a small and not very prosperous hosier. Before he was five years old he had fallen into a fit of screaming at seeing "God put His head in at the window." He is also, perhaps, the only person who ever saw angels sitting in a tree at Peckham Rye; indeed the tree was full of them, "bright angelic wings bespangling every bough like stars." Another time, on a Summer morning, the boy, strolling along, sees haymakers in a field and the same bright-winged visitants moving composedly among them. He was 9 years old or more when he used to return from his country walks wild with delight at seeing such sweet wonders, and the hosier, his father, used to beat him soundly and soberly to teach him the real aspect of life. At 10 Blake was "put to Mr. Par's drawing school in the Strand," where he learned to draw from plaster casts and began to frequent print shops and auction rooms, and showed his usual detachment from the taste of his day by collecting cheap and despised reproductions of pictures after Michael Angelo, Raphael, and Albert Durer—all things utterly out of the fashion and condemned as "mechanical" by the cognoscenti of the eighteenth century. "I cannot say that Raffaele ever was from my earliest childhood hidden from me," Blake writes (in his MS. notes to Reynolds) many years later. When he was about 12 he began writing verses. One of his best-known songs, was certainly composed before he was 14, and it was about the same time that he was apprenticed for seven years to Basire, official engraver to the Royal as well as the Antiquarian Society, who had a shop in Lincoln's Inn Fields.

How sweet I roam'd from Field to Field

One day (as Blake used to tell the story) Goldsmith himself walked into that shop, and the little 'prentice stared at him and admired him hugely, and wished he might have a head like his when he grew up to be a man, and never afterward forgot him. At that time Johnson, too, might have been seen rolling through those same streets, counting the posts as he walked along, and there was also a thin, very old, very foreign gentleman of nearly 81 who wore a full-bottomed wig, a pair of long ruffles, and a curious hilted sword, who carried a great gold-headed cane as well, and whose name was Emmanuel Swedenborg. Twenty years later we find Blake eagerly reading him. But in 1772, and for several years later, Blake was quite otherwise occupied. Nearly all the time of his apprenticeship he spent making drawings from the monuments and tombs in Westminster Abbey and the various old churches in and near London, Basire, his master, having commissions to engrave many of these for Gough, the antiquary. So that, by happiest chance, Blake may be said to have passed the most formative years of his early youth brooding over old, solemn, half-forgotten and beautiful things.

All he ever knew of English history he learned in those long, lonely brooding hours in Westminster Abbey. Very soon, too, we find him beginning to draw and engrave imaginary portraits of the great dead among whose graves he was chiefly living. In 1783, when he was still in his seventeenth year, Blake published (with the help of friends) his first collection of verses. This is a thin octavo volume, "Poetical Sketches, by W. B.," and so rare that until a few years ago there was not a copy of it to be found even in the British Museum. Yet it contains the "Mad Song," the "Song of the Old Shepherds," the lines beginning "I love the jocund dance," and that lovely, that enchanted and wandering echo of the Elizabethan Muse, "My silks and fine array." And this, it should be remembered, was the work, the invention, of an obscure little engraver's 'prentice lad in the dead middle of the prosaic eighteenth century, years before Burns, years before Wordsworth or Coleridge had written, a burst of the sweetest, the most artless, the most miraculously perfect English song that men had heard since Shakespeare.

The "Songs of Innocence" did not begin to appear until 1788. In the meantime many experiences had happened to their author. He had exhibited at the new Royal Academy, he had engraved some of his best-known plates, and, for another thing, he was married. His wife was a humble and beautiful and ignorant young girl, daughter of Catherine and William Bourchier of Battersea—too illiterate to write her own name down in the parish register at the time of their marriage, but who lived to become Blake's right-hand and cherished comrade, working by his side, at his own trade, for more than five and forty years, helping to copy his poems and print and color his drawings until their work became at times hardly distinguishable. How Blake came to adopt the mixture of verse and design—the system of engraved copper plates, often highly finished and colored by hand—can never be known precisely. The method was absolutely original. Blake himself believed it had been revealed to him in a dream by the spirit of a favorite dead brother. But, from this time onward, all his poems were produced and beautified in this same fashion. And because of the curious and particular form in which the most personal expression of his art reached its limited public, Blake's work differs enormously, both in significance and beauty, according to the special example of it under consideration.

No reproduction can give any but the coarsest hint of what Blake's color can be in the best of his "illuminated printings." "Much," says Dante Rossetti, "which seems unaccountably rugged and incomplete is softened by the sweet, liquid rainbow tints of the colored copies into mysterious brilliancy." And Gilchrist, Blake's first and most impassioned biographer, speaks of turning over the leaves of Lord Crewe's copy of "The America" until "it is like an increase of daylight in the retina, so fair and open is the effect of particular pages."

On "The Songs of Innocence" followed the first of the prophetic books, "The Book of Thel," and the still more mystical "Marriage of Heaven and Hell," which includes some of the wisest philosophy ("The Proverbs of Hell") ever beaten out of man's experience. "A fool sees not the same tree that a wise man sees," and again, "Truth can never be told so as to be understood and not be believed," writes Blake, and the ten strenuous years that follow—years of passionate effort, of a passionate continuous outpouring of poem and picture, and scores and hundreds of commissioned engravings, illustrations, original compositions, hard work hardly paid for, and mystical prophecies paid for not at all—are like a commentary and a living testimony to his burning faith in his own brave, wise words.

The "Songs of Experience" were put forth in 1794, printed and colored in the same loving fashion. For these plates Blake used to receive (from his friends) the sum of one, sometimes two, guineas. He had one constant and faithful patron, the Mr. Butts of the Adam and Eve episode, and with that and his work he lived in a secret world of deep content. Blake could be violent and indignant (as he was in his epigrams on Cronck and Hayley and the Venetian masters) or violent and unjust and coarsely vituperative, (as with Reynolds,) but he was one of the few men who have treated all questions of gain with sincere and unshakable indifference. Blake, poor and obscure and ignored, treated all questions of money with a princely indifference quite unknown to Princes. On at least two or three occasions he might have done work which, rightly or wrongly, he despised and which would have lifted him out of the cruelest poverty. He was capable of rejecting such opportunity without even the shortest pang of temptation.

In 1800, and for the first time in his life, Blake left London for the country in Sussex, where he stayed for three years. He went at the invitation of his friend Hayley—himself a poet in a mild and elegant and perfectly gentlemanly fashion—a busy, kindly, fussy sort of man, amateurish even in his gravest deficiencies, and lived in a condition of divine ecstasy (and in a very damp cottage) at Felpham by the sea. Nothing could exceed the joy with which he looked forward to this humble migration. "My wife is like a flame of many colors of precious jewels whenever she hears it mentioned," he writes of the country while still in London. "Heaven opens here on all sides her golden gates: * * * voices of celestial inhabitants are more distinctly heard and their forms more distinctly seen, and my cottage is also a shadow of their houses," he writes again while still in the first ardor of possession. while the journey from town, "in seven different chaises," is still an amusing reminiscence. But three mortal years of Hayley's unrelieved companionship, of Hayley's patronage, and Hayley's insect-like activities, and Hayley's advice, and criticism, and fine friends, his literary aspirations, and his measureless, bottomless, unfathomable, incalculable accumulations of information, were too much even for the most magnanimous of mystics to ignore. Even the Unseen and the Voices were affected and afflicted by Hayley. "Naked we came here—naked of natural things—and naked we shall return," writes Blake to his faithful Butts, and sighs for that familiar London where alone he could "see visions, dream dreams, and prophesy and speak parables unobserved, and at liberty from the doubts of other mortals." Doubts are always pernicious, adds the poor weary Prophet, "pestered by three years of genteel ignorance and polite disapprobation." Mrs. Blake had contracted acute rheumatism and "the Voices were angry at Felpham." It was a disastrous experiment.

Still more prophetic books, the "Milton" and the "Jerusalem," and those designs for Blair's "Grave," (which by the accident of their being actually published are the best-known of Blake's drawings,) followed upon the Sussex episode. To the next years belong those "Inventions to the Book of Job" which Ruskin praised as work "of the highest rank," and recorded his belief that "in expressing conditions of glaring and flickering light Blake is greater than Rembrandt." Blake was in his sixty-fourth year when, in his only known woodcuts in illustration of Virgil's "Pastorals," in an edition specially designed for the use of schools, he recaptured (in another medium) all the lyric grace and charm and sweet profound mystery of his boyhood's songs. For Blake's genius was ever a purely lyric genius. His best designs are as lyric in character as his loveliest verses. All good gifts in life and in art were to him in a literal sense gifts of the Spirit: life to Blake meant just seventy years of conscious and rapturously grateful inspiration.

The bridge which crosses from the visible to the invisible world was always firm and sure in his sight. All his life he trod it alone, but with unhesitating feet. As a poet he is often nearer perfection than as a designer. His pictorial work at its best has, indeed, "nobility and dignity of outline, a grave solemnity, and a keen feeling for little tendernesses of attitude and incident," as Mr. Raleigh justly says. But his work suffered constantly from ignorance of anatomy. It is frequently violent in treatment, frequently exaggerated; at its worst it is perilously capable of bordering upon the grotesque. Yet, as in the wildest of the Prophetic Books, in Blake's loosest work we are always conscious of underlying substance. He wanders into lonely twilight lands, where form grows obscure, and shape and size endure strange, monstrous transfiguration; a land where there is horror born of the night, and beauty unknown by day. Blake died on the 17th August, 1827. His last effort was a portrait of his wife, "who had ever been an angel to him." He was working on it till within a few hours of his calmly radiant death. The only reproach that gentle wife was ever heard to make to him was when she complained that "Mr. Blake was so little with her, though in the body they were never separated: for he was incessantly away in Paradise." That is the summing up of all Blake's art and life.

Justin H. McCarthy's Novel.

"The Flower of France" is the sufficiently characteristic title of a forthcoming novel by Justin Huntley McCarthy, author of "If I Were King," and "The Proud Prince." The book is described as a "semi-historical romance of great dramatic interest" constructed around the story of Joan of Arc. Mr. McCarthy has, of course, made a play of the same material while he was making the novel—a play which, it is reported, will be given next season by E. H. Sothern and Julia Marlowe. The book will be published by the Harpers early in May.

INDIA WITH PEN AND PENCIL.

A VERY pleasing book on India has been put together by Mr. A. H. Hallam-Murray in "The Highroad of Empire." (New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $5.) This is not a guidebook to India; it gives no advice as to what to wear, what to eat, where to stop, what medicines to carry; but it describes in word and picture much of the better-known scenery of Hindustan, and so indirectly suggests to the reader what to see, and directly what to look for when he sees it.

The book differs from a series of illustrated books on various parts of the world. In those the illustrations are the thing; the text is merely subsidiary to the pictures—so to speak, it illustrates the paintings. In Mr. Hallam-Murray's book, however, pencil, paint brush, and pen stand on an equality. The text is sufficiently full, and by one who knows whereof he speaks; and the pictures, by the author, are good to look at as pictures, and also as illustrations of the text. The highway of empire, as picked out on the map, is by no means a straight road. It begins at Bombay, goes south, north, west, and east, and then, from Jodhpur on the west, jumps to Ceylon. Historically, the road was not so roundabout, and began, not at Bombay on the west, but near Madras on the east. The highroad, however, makes an interesting track to travel in a book; if the author-artist traveled it as indicated in the book, his added miles and greater fatigue do not interfere with our pleasure.

Among the illustrations, the landscapes are the most successful; those with figures are not nearly so well done. Two of the former must be mentioned—the Taj from the fort at Agra and a tropical shower. The black-and-white sketches are also effective. It seems almost treasonable for Mr. Hallam-Murray to show Gibraltar as it is—with the head of "the lion" looking toward Spain and the tail turned toward the Straits, which it is usually but fraudulently represented as guarding with wide-open eyes.

The British Whigs.

The volume of "Further Memoirs of the Whig Party, (1807-1821,) With Some Miscellaneous Reminiscences," by Henry Richard Vassall, the third Lord Holland, edited by Lord Stavordale, (8vo. Pp. 500. Illustrated. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $5 net,) completes the memoirs of Lord Holland. There are four chapters under consideration. Full details are given of the Prince Regent's negotiations with the Whigs in 1809 and 1812, and a rapid sketch of the principal events and incidents of the last decade of George III.'s reign. But, says Lord Holland, his object was to record only such incidents, anecdotes, or intrigues which were not generally known at the time, and which were not likely to be found in the recognized histories, periodicals, or journals. The additional chapter is a series of tales and recollections of the literary celebrities and scientists of note with some of whom Lord Holland was "intimate, with many others familiarly acquainted."

At the end of the first chapter, dealing with the events in England between 1807 and 1810, Lord Holland sums up the character of George III. as follows:

> He was a man of principle, honest, and anxious in forming his rule of action, sagacious in the application and steady in the observance of it; but then his views were narrow and mischievous, his judgments warped, and his feelings illiberal. * * * He was, too, a stranger to every generous affection which renders a Prince either amiable or benevolent. There was nothing great, nothing kind, nothing open, nothing graceful in his character or manner.

The frontispiece is a portrait of Lord Holland, and the other seven pictures in the book are photogravure reproductions of portraits of noted men referred to by Lord Holland.

Women and Things

Those who have read "Men and Things" know what perfection of fun this succeeding volume of Mark Twain's Library of Humor must contain. All the world's greatest humorists have contributed to it. It is illustrated by the best artists—Newell, Frost, Kemble, etc.—and is undoubtedly the most notable work of humor ever published. Mark Twain has made two laughs grow where none grew before.

The Princess Olga

Ervin Wardman's new novel recalls The Prisoner of Zenda. The hero is a plucky young American engineer whose adventures in Crevonia, a little independent kingdom of Europe, which proves to be a nest of plots and intrigues, are thrilling indeed. It is the most absorbing kind of modern romance.

Silas Strong

"A stronger character than Eben Holden."—Utica Observer.

"By all odds the best story Irving Bacheller has written."—Portland Advertiser.

"A modern Leatherstocking. Brings to the city dweller the aroma of the pine and the music of the wind in its branches."—San Francisco Chronicle.

The Spoilers

"A tornado of a novel."—N. Y. Globe.

"Nobody who reads The Spoilers will waste breath asking whether or not Rex Beach has 'arrived.' This novel places the author among the chosen few who can tell a story of sustained power and breathless interest. There will be more sleep lost over this book than over any other since The Masquerader."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Miss Primrose

"There are delightful pictures of country life, rare touches of nature and sympathetic delineation of child life in this latest of Roy Rolfe Gilson's books. It possesses the same charm, the same fidelity to human emotions and the same underlying spirit of humor that made When Love Is Young and In the Morning Glow teem with life and love and human sympathy."—Philadelphia Record.

NEW YORK, APRIL 21, 1906.

TOPICS OF THE WEEK.

MR. WILLIAM DEAN HOWELLS contributes to the May Harper's in the historic department of the Editor's Easy Chair a singularly suggestive, new, and readable little essay, one of the best of his recent utterances in these always stimulating pages of mature reflection delightfully expressed. Mr. Howells has been reading the published letters of Henrik Ibsen. The reading has inspired him to put into words his doubt whether the development of a man's talent or genius "can be profitably made his sole, or even his chief, business in life." After reading the letters Ibsen interests him as "an extreme case of the literary consciousness." Mr. Howells does not undertake definitely to say what men are here for, but he ventures the opinion that they are here to "be" as well as to "do," and not merely "to get the most literature, sculpture, music, architecture, or painting out of themselves, or to try for circumstances and experiences in which to increase their yield of the highest artistic results." This is certainly sound doctrine. The poet, for that matter, is the better poet for being a many-sided man. The traditional "type" of the man of genius is abominable. Self-worship makes no man a good citizen, and no matter how great his genius may be no man is justified in living solely for its development. One need not follow Mr. Howells quite as far as his estimate of Goethe and Carlyle in accepting the doctrine he so neatly formulates. The poet, the painter, the musician who so carry themselves in public as to satisfy a long-established and vulgar idea of the physical aspect of poets, painters, and musicians, are not often producers of much that is worth producing. Take note that in the picture we can clearly form from abundant historical data of Shakespeare we have distinctly the sane, well-balanced man, and not the so-called "type" of the poet. Perhaps this is the reason why petty natures have been fond of crying aloud so many years that Shakespeare was not Shakespeare.

THE new experiment in fiction of Mr. George Horace Lorimer, who achieved international fame and became the prey of a host of imitators with his "Letters of a Self-Made Merchant to His Son," is worth a note in passing, for the originality of its underlying idea, and the expertness of the exposition. "The False Gods," which has already done service as a serial, comes now in book from the Appletons. It cleverly mingles the traditional mystery of ancient Egypt with the bustle and humor of everyday life in contemporary New York. The principal personage is an imaginative and wide-awake reporter, a little too imaginative and wide-awake for the extraordinary situation in which he finds himself. The charm of the narrative is all in the telling, of course; the elements of it are simple, the outcome trifling. The reporter finds a "good story," and is at great pains to write it out and send it to his newspaper, only to learn that he has imagined his "facts," like the celebrated Mr. Dundas, and is the self-hypnotized victim of a splendid "idea." We can heartily commend Mr. Lorimer's book as a stirring story to read at one sitting.

WE learned from San Francisco, almost simultaneously with the news of the earthquakes, that Gertrude Atherton does not think much of Edith Wharton as a novelist. Mrs. Atherton is certainly entitled to her own opinion, and no one knows better than she how to express her opinions, both lucidly and forcibly. She says that the construction of "The House of Mirth" is "amateurish," and the personages "puppets." Mrs. Wharton, she declares, is a "non-creative novelist." That is all right. Criticism of the harshest sort never hurt anybody, and a world in which everybody agreed about everything would be a very dull world to live in. Mrs. Atherton says also that she "predicted the inevitable end of Amélie Rives and Mrs. Craigie." The first named of these, she says, "had talent without brain, and the latter brain without talent." Well, the latest book of Miss Rives, (the Princess Troubetskoy,) a dramatic poem called "Augustine the Man," has been as highly praised as anything she ever wrote, while Mrs. Craigie has lately seemed to be on the very top wave of popularity. We gather these expressions of Mrs. Atherton's opinion from a communication of hers, published in San Francisco, protesting against what she considers overpraise of Mrs. Wharton. It is all very interesting. Mrs. Atherton's is a powerful individuality. Like Edward FitzGerald, Thomas Carlyle, and others of strong minds, she is often at war with contemporary estimates of literary work. But everybody would be glad to have a new book by Mrs. Atherton. She is an imaginative, picturesque, and forcible story teller; and we sincerely hope that her personal losses have not been large in the terrible calamity on the Pacific Coast.

ALTHOUGH the reports from the publishers at the beginning of the Spring season in the book trade generally agreed that the output of fiction would be smaller than usual, the reviewers' shelves are already crowded with novels that demand careful reading and more serious notice than the ordinary novel of commerce generally gets. As a matter of fact, many of the new novels of this Spring are worth reckoning with, books that are not only well written, but have something of the logic of life in them. Eugenia Brooks Frothingham's story of Boston life, "The Evasion," for instance, is already receiving much admiring comment from readers far from Boston. It is a novel that will be talked about eagerly all Summer. In the field of spirited romance, the novel of action, we have Mr. Beach's "The Spoilers," Mr. Lancaster's "The Spur," Mr. A. H. Lewis's "The Throwback," and others that are already in great demand. "The Spur," by the way, is one of the novels reviewed this week, along with Owen Wister's "Lady Baltimore," "The Evasion," "The Throwback," and a few other novels not only worth reading, but also worth thinking about.

EXCEPTING Mr. Eden Phillpotts's "The Portreeve" there has been no English novel of the first class lately, but Mrs. Humphry Ward's "Fenwick's Career" will be published within a fortnight, while there are new books coming from the authors of "Sir Richard Calmady," "No. 5 John Street," and "Red Pottage." "The Far Horizon" is the title of the novel by Lucas Malet, (Mrs. St. Leger Harrison,) who, as most readers of fiction already know, is a daughter of Charles Kingsley. She is a painstaking writer, who works slowly, and much is expected of the book, which is her first since "Calmady" aroused a veritable storm of discussion. "Ring in the New" is the title of Richard Whiteing's novel. Its heroine is a refined, well-educated English girl, left penniless and friendless, to fight for her living. "Prisoners" Miss Cholmondely's story is called, and its action passes in England and Italy. There is a new story coming also from that vigorous and audacious English writer, Julia Frankau, who signs her books "Frank Danby." It is called "The Sphinx's Lawyer," and is dedicated, in this rather original way, to the author's brother, "Owen Hall," the author of musical plays:

> Because you "hate and loathe" my book and its subject, I dedicate it to you. For, incidentally, your harsh criticism has intensified my conviction of the righteousness of the cause I plead.

"The Sphinx's Lawyer" will be published here by the Lippincotts, who did so well by the same author's "Pigs in Clover."

POSSIBLY it is due less to Mr. Roosevelt's use of Tinker Bunyan's phrase, "the man with the muck-rake," than to accident—for in this case we do not think that cause can have followed so closely upon (alleged) effect—that there is a distinctly perceptible renewal of interest in "The Pilgrim's Progress." There was such a renewal about fifteen years ago, when a specially illustrated edition of the great allegory was published; but the present increase of interest does not depend on any one form in which the story is issued, but is really general. All editions are bought. Macaulay's article on Bunyan, contributed to the Encyclopaedia Britannica more than half a century ago, contains a brief summing up of the history of the story of Christian: "'The Pilgrim's Progress' is perhaps the only book about which, after the lapse of a hundred years, the educated minority has come over to the opinion of the common people," he says, and continues, "The attempts to improve and imitate this book are not to be numbered. It has been done into verse; it has been done into modern English. A Catholic version of the parable may be seen. It was determined to transform 'The Pilgrim's Progress' into a Tractarian book." It has been done in words of one syllable, and selections from it have appeared in "First Readers." But the story has never been utterly spoiled. Any revival of interest in the doings of Christian and Christiana, apart from any increase of devotion, means an increase of interest in a very pregnant piece of English—and that is something to be glad of in this age of slipshod and vague writing.

IT seems strange to find so well informed a literary review as The Academy of London classing Mr. Bliss Carman as an American poet and a native of the United States. Mr. Carman is a native of Canada and a loyal subject of King Edward VII. He has dwelt in London and mingled there with the lit'ry. That he prefers to live in New York does not seem as strange to New Yorkers, perhaps, as to Londoners. The Academy has been struck by the good sense and comprehension exhibited in Mr. Carman's book of prose essays, "The Poetry of Life." It does not quite agree with Mr. Carman's estimate of Swinburne, (originally contributed to THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW,) and fancies that he "places Longfellow on a higher pedestal than would be given him in Europe," but Mr. Carman's book seems to The Academy "to hold forth promise of higher criticism than we have yet received from America."

NO doubt the forthcoming biography of Andrew Jackson by Tom Watson will be full of good reading. Mr. Watson is a graphic and forcible, often an amusing, writer, who frequently impresses even the sophisticated reader with his sincerity. As in his other books, so in this, he puts forward the claim that he writes for the whole country, not for any one part of it. "The history of this Republic," says Mr. Watson, "is something more than a New England primer." Jackson the man is a good subject for Mr. Watson's pen, while the epoch offers large opportunities for his eloquence. We may not accept Mr. Watson's "Life of Andrew Jackson" as a standard textbook in American history. But we shall be delighted to read it.

THE house in which the tales of the Decameron were told seems a fabled edifice, one that it would be difficult to place geographically nowadays, like the palace of King Arthur in Caerleon, the bower of Fair Rosamond, and the home to which Theseus, "Duke of Athens," took his Amazon bride. We know, as we read, where those places are, to be sure, but we can never satisfy ourselves we have found the right location of any one of them if we go abroad and hunt. Yet the owner of the Villa Palmieri, in Fiesole, who intends to sell it by auction May 7, doubtless expects a better price because of its traditional association with Boccaccio and his world-famous work. There is not, so far as we know, one scrap of evidence that Boccaccio ever set foot in the Villa Palmieri. Probably the house and gardens and shady walks, the little lake and the water mills he describes, form a purely imaginary picture. But the Villa Palmieri and its surroundings have always resembled the picture more than any other villa and grounds near Fiesole, and the prosaic mind must ever try to find the "originals" of every place and personage in the fiction that lives.

WATSON'S LIFE OF JACKSON.

TOM WATSON, editor of Watson's Magazine, has written a "Life of Andrew Jackson," which will be published serially in his magazine, and then issued in book form. Mr. Watson was a schoolmaster, and later a practicing lawyer, in Georgia, and was candidate for Vice President on the Populist ticket in 1896. He has written "The Story of France," "The Life of Napoleon," and "The Life and Time of Thomas Jefferson." His manner of writing is fluent and picturesque, and his books have had many readers. Here is an extract from his new biography:

> The historian, the orator, the painter have been eager in the duty of blazoning the deeds of our pioneer missionaries, lawmakers, and soldiers. The names of these heroes live, and deserve to live, in letters of light upon the records of our country. But to our pioneer farmers justice has never been done. Theirs was a combat calling for every soldierly trait of John Smith and Miles Standish. The patient courage which swung the axe, in the depth of primeval woods, was no less heroic than the bravery which made the musket conquer. The toil of the warrior's march was slight by comparison with the homely but exhausting work of preparing the soil for the sowing of seed. The arrows of the redmen were not more deadly to the soldiers than were the fevers which rose from the swamps and pulled down the settler as he struggled to open out his farm.
>
> In the South, in the East, in the West the story of the pioneer plowman of America is one of dauntless courage, of quiet heroism. He found the New World a wilderness, and he has well-nigh made it a garden. His axe, his spade, his hoe, his plow, his muscle, his brain, his very heart and soul have all been enlisted in the work; never once have his lips uttered the craven's cry of "Protection." Never once has he gone begging to the doors of legislation, asking special favors. Never once has he lied to the Government and the people for the purpose of securing a selfish advantage at the expense of his fellow-man.

An Astronomical Map.

The Barritt-Serviss Star and Planet Finder, published by Leon Barritt, 150 Nassau Street, is an ingenious combination sun, moon, star, and planet map by which it is possible to locate the position of any member of the solar system within a few degrees of its true place in the heavens at any hour in the next twenty years. A map of the heavens is provided, with movable disks of the sun, moon, and planets. The map revolves, and if on the tables around it the day of the month stands opposite the hour of the day marked on the movable portion the opening presents the stars and planets in view at that hour. By holding the map over one's head, with the top north, the stars are shown just as they appear in the heavens.

The map is accompanied by tables of the planetary positions, the moon's phases, and the sun's daily position for the next twenty years, with directions for placing the movable disks representing these bodies on the map.

THE NEW VARIORUM SEPTUAGINT

Cambridge University's Monumental Edition of the Bible—Other Religious Works of Unusual Importance.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES. [Copyright, 1906.]

LONDON, April 20.—The first volume of Part I. of the great variorum edition of the Septuagint, which the Cambridge University Press has been preparing since 1883, will be published next week. The text is the Codex Vaticanus, and the variations extend to all uncial manuscripts, to select cursive manuscripts, to all the mort important versions, and to quotations from the earlier ecclesiastical writers. The Cambridge Press has also reproduced in fac simile the only copy known to exist of Wynkyn de Worde's edition of Lydgate's "Assemblie of the Goddes," printed at Westminster about A. D. 1500.

⁂

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO. will issue next month the seventh volume of the History of the English Church. This volume treats of the Church from the accession of King George I. to the close of the eighteenth century. It was written by the late Canon Overton and the Rev. Frederic Relton. John Murray will soon publish "Empires and Emperors," by Monsignor Count Vaydevaya.

⁂

VISCOUNT ST. CYRES, son of the Earl of Iddesleigh, and grandson of the famous Sir Stafford Northcote, has written a volume on Fenelon for Methuen's series of Oxford Biographies. Richard Whiteing's new novel, called "Ring in the New," (a queer title until one remembers his Tennyson,) will be published by the Hutchinsons next week. The Methuens announce a book about the Spanish Main by John Mansfield, which contains romantic pictures of the lives of Elizabethan seamen, especially the old buccaneers.

FROM JOHN ADAMS TO JAMES MONROE.

Two New Volumes in The American Nation Series—The Jeffersonian System and the Rise of American Nationality.*

THE first twenty years of the nineteenth century is the period covered by the twelfth and thirteenth volumes of the American Nation Series. It is a period for which the source materials are abundant. It has been brilliantly exploited by the late Henry Adams, whose work, as is well known, is a historical performance of the highest class. Both the present authors have, of course, made extensive use of this work. Prof. Channing says that it was the appearance of Adams's history that dissuaded him from making a prolonged investigation of the first Administration of Jefferson. He is well equipped, nevertheless, for writing on the Jeffersonian period.

The accession of the Jeffersonians to power in 1801 constituted a revolution, and the new President recognized it as such. Yet the author of the Kentucky Resolutions did not act in so radical a manner as might have been expected. Prof. Channing shows how moderate he was in his policy of removal and appointment. The abolition of the internal revenue system, which meant the destruction of a large share of Federal patronage, was "a sacrifice of political power to which few other men than Thomas Jefferson would have consented."

This quotation indicates the author's favorable view of the character and personality of Jefferson. He has never, apparently, acquired the popular habit of sneering at the President for his "inconsistency" or his "love of peace" or his "democracy." Prof. Channing is sympathetic and evidently is attracted by Jefferson's sometimes whimsical but always human character.

The purchase of Louisiana is the event of most far-reaching importance in Jefferson's Administrations. With the ratification of the treaty of cession, "the Jeffersonian theory of strict construction was abandoned in the house of its friends." As to the various questions and disputes relating to the boundaries of the ceded territory, Prof. Channing says "the whole history of the transference of Louisiana from Spain to the United States through the medium of France is so absolutely opposed to legal and historical hypothesis that it seems quite useless to argue the matter on any such grounds."

Napoleon had no legal right to sell us Louisiana. But he did it because Spain was subject to his will. "In taking Louisiana we were the accomplices of the greatest highwayman of modern history, and the goods which we received were those which he compelled his unwilling victim to disgorge."

The acquisition of West Florida, supplementary to the Louisiana cession, is thus described by President Babcock: "[Madison] without the formality of negotiation, with scarcely a compunction at the disregard of international usages, with a speciousness bordering on recklessness, asserted jurisdiction over the Province of West Florida, still the subject of fair and friendly negotiations." Long before the days of the Mexican war the territorial expansion of the United States was fostered by means not always impeccable.

The embargo is commonly held to have been Jefferson's greatest blunder. Historians are fond of dilating upon its baneful and blighting effects on the economic welfare of the country. Prof. Channing thinks the stories of grass growing in the streets of seaports, of ships rotting at the wharves are gross exaggerations. "The truth of the matter seems to be that the Federalists seized upon this occasion to place their opponents on the defensive, and succeeded in so doing. The opposition to the embargo in New England was mainly political. * * * The speeches which were made in the House and in the Senate had more to do with politics than with the industrial situation."

The relations of the American Government with France and England during the half dozen years before the war of 1812 are described in both works. President Babcock is more severe than Prof. Channing in his criticism of the course of the Administration, which was certainly not always courageous or even dignified. Babcock speaks of Madison as being forced into war, Channing as desiring it as the only proper course. The former is certainly unjust to the Administration in speaking of its acceptance of the Russian offer of mediation in 1813. "With the same precipitation and injudicious eagerness * * * both Madison and Monroe assumed that the offer would not have been made without the consent of England." It seems to us quite natural that the President and the Secretary of State should have assumed that the Czar would not have made an offer of mediation to the enemy of his ally without having first sounded his ally on the subject. There is enough fault to be found legitimately with the United States Government at this period without indulging in captious and carping criticism.

⁂

The preparations for war, or, rather, the lack of them; the prosecution of the war by land and sea, the peace negotiations, and the results of the war are the subjects dealt with in Babcock's "Rise of American Nationality." The story, in brief, is how America, already politically free, became socially and economically independent. Viewed as a "second war for independence," the war of 1812 was successful. After 1815 Great Britain no longer assumed that maternalistic and patronizing air so galling to American pride. The United States, freed from foreign politics, was allowed to work out its domestic problems. A profound change had taken place in the strict construction Republican Party of 1801. It emerged from the war as an all-embracing National party, the only real political party in the country. It was nationalized democracy, purged of most of its impractical theories. It passed such strongly National measures in 1816 as the Tariff bill and the Second United States Bank bill, which can be held constitutional only on the principle of loose construction. President Babcock's volume fittingly closes with a chapter on "The Great Decisions of the Supreme Court," which did so much to establish broad principles for the construction of the Constitution.

"Technicalities" of War.

The technical aspects of war are the theme of a new series which the Macmillan Company has acquired. "The Special Campaign Series" it has been named, and its first volume, "Saarbruck to Paris, 1870: A Strategical Sketch," by Lieut. Col. Sisson C. Pratt, is now being published. It will shortly be followed by a description of the Russo-Turkish war of 1877 and other volumes, which will deal with those campaigns of the nineteenth century that present features of exceptional military interest. Each volume is to contain strategical and tactical comments, and is to be illustrated by numerous sketches.

There are twelve chapters in the present book. Opening with a résumé of the war of 1870, it continues with descriptions of Weissenburg, Woerth, Spicheren, Borny-Colombey, Vionville-Mars-la-Tour, Chalons, and Rheims, Sedan, Metz, and so on, down to Paris.

Thucydides's Athens.

Miss Jane Ellen Harrison, the well-known English archaeological writer, has compiled a new book on "Primitive Athens as Described by Thucydides," which the Macmillan Company is publishing. Herein Miss Harrison presents the views of Prof. Dörpfeld, the well-known archaeologist, who is at present excavating at Pergamos. These views, with which the author agrees, are "diametrically opposed" to those held by Dr. Frazer and Prof. Gardner.

In chapters on the character and limits of the ancient city of Athens, the sanctuaries in and outside the citadel, and the spring Kallirrhoë-Enneakrounos, Miss Harrison explains the description by Thucydides and shows how he has been misinterpreted. She proves her version by referring to the most recent excavations. The book has been provided with a bibliography and foot notes.

Bonaventure's New Catalogue.

A volume of 112 pages, fully illustrated, with fac similes of bindings and title pages, makes public the latest acquisitions of rare books, illuminated manuscripts and historical bindings to be found in the collection of E. F. Bonaventure.

The books are classified as follows: Miscellaneous English and French illustrated books in artistic bindings by Coverly & Hodge, David, Canape, Levasseur, &c.; eighteenth century volumes, illustrated by Eisen, Cochin, Fragonard, Gravelot, &c.; "Incunabula," early printed books, woodcuts, and rare specimens of the Aldine, Elezvir, Plantin, and other presses, historical bindings, illuminated vellum manuscripts, collections of rare autographs with portraits, and rare books of engravings and etchings by Boydell, Gallot, Salvator Rosa, Holbein, &c.

An appropriate and timely item is "La Scienza del buon Uomo Ricardo di Beniamin Franklin," published in Turin about 1790, which is a 12mo volume, bound in pearl gray silk, embroidered with gold, and having a portrait of Franklin painted on ivory in the centre of the fore cover. A reproduction of this cover is given in the catalogue. Another interesting item, of which an illustration is also given, is a copy of the 1899 edition of Rostand's "Cyrano de Bergerac," published in Paris by Magnier. It is a tall 8vo, bound by David, in new full crimson crushed levant, the sides and back gold-tooled, a doublure of green levant, with rapier ornaments at angles and red and white silk fly-leaves. It is one of a limited edition on China paper, and contains, besides a dozen original water-color drawings by Grivaz, wood-cut illustrations, in three proof states, by Thevenot, Adrian Moreau, Leandre, Laurens, Flameng, and Besnard.

The catalogue is unusually rich in rare copies from Elzevir and Aldine presses, most of which are bound by world-renowned binders.

J. W. Foley.

Mr. Foley, whose "Songs of School-days" will come from Doubleday, Page & Co. next Saturday, has been known for many years as a writer of verse. He was born in Missouri in 1874, but when quite young his family moved to the then territory of Dakota. He began newspaper work with The Daily Tribune at Bismarck, contributing a daily column of verse and humor. THE NEW YORK TIMES was the first to pay the poet for his work. He also contributed to Life. At present he is private secretary to Gov. Searles of North Dakota, and is well known throughout the State. During the war with Spain his patriotic poetical pieces were widely read and copied. Mr. Foley has served as Grand Master of the Masonic Grand Lodge of North Dakota.

FROM READERS.

Stephen Phillips's "Nero" and the Early English Play on the Same Subject.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

THE very title of Mr. Phillips's new play brings it into comparison with the Jacobean drama of the same name. Neither the anonymous author of the early "Nero" nor Mr. Phillips is a true dramatist. "The refined and scholarly poet" (as Mr. Ellis has called him) who wrote the first "Nero" failed to bring about the necessary climax to which he had conducted his play through four well-constructed acts. It is in the pitifully weak fifth act that he reveals his lack of dramatic insight.

Many critics have agreed that Mr. Phillips has been spectacular, even panoramic, in the construction of the play in question. He is capable of the conception of vivid and impassioned scenes; but scenes they remain, separate and distinct and joined together by the barest possible thread. Such faults, however, are more apparent in reading than on the stage.

The scenes of Mr. Phillips's play are laid at a slightly later date than those of the first "Nero." Its dénouement is the burning of Rome, which takes place in the third act of the early play. Mr. Phillips has made the murder of Agrippina the climax of his third act, while the same event is supposed to have occurred already when the curtain rises on the early "Nero." This later date of action of the Jacobean play gives it its one decided advantage over the other, since the death of Nero forms a fitting climax to the tragedy of his life. Mr. Phillips's fails to impress us with the sense of completion which a drama should give. His final stage direction is, "He falls in a trance, Acte runs toward him." We cannot but wonder how he will treat Acte when he returns to his so-called senses. He is capable of killing her or of asking her opinion of his singing. Which will he do?

The treatment of Poppaea—"staining the beauty of the evening sky"—is much the same in both plays. And Nero, whom Mr. Phillips makes sigh for the artist who dies in him, and who in the other play bids farewell to the theatres when about to die, is the same Nero—cold and placid one moment, and then boiling over with "artistic" fervor in the next. It is in the plays as wholes that they differ. The one is Elizabethan to the core, following "Julius Caesar" and "Valentinian" as models; the other is influenced by Keats and the early Tennyson. Might not, for instance, these lines be taken for Keats's?

"Yet hath none fairer strayed into the world
Or wandered in more witchery through the air
Since she who drew the dreaming keels of Greece
After her over the Ionian foam."

This is graceful and pretty, but it might have inspired one of Keats's "enemies" to inquire why "keels" should be "dreaming."

Mr. Phillips has impressed us with the power of Rome, but nowhere better than does the old drama in these lines:

"Great are thy fortunes, Nero, great thy power,
Thy empire limited with nature's bounds;
The day and night are thine,
Nor can the planets wander where they will,
See that proud earth that fears not Caesar's name."

Critics have declared the writers of the school of the elder "Nero" to be verbose. They are so at times. Mr. Phillips's work, on the other hand, is a crystallisation of conversation by a process of refinement which leaves the bare skeleton of that which the characters, under such circumstances, would have said.

SAMUEL C. CHEW, Jr.

Baltimore, Md., April 19, 1906.

Mr. Tabb and His Book.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Recently you published a letter from me in which I attempted to justify the spirit and the purpose of my story "The Struggle." In the letter I contended that the paramount purpose of literature should not be only to entertain, but to elevate and instruct. The letter brought a challenge to me from one of the leading critics in New York, in which he contends that the history of fiction thoroughly establishes the fact that the great writers have written to entertain rather than to instruct. I cannot concede this statement as a fact. I will concede that a great many of the writers who have written for a living only have written to entertain; but those who have written to uplift and elevate humanity have written to instruct rather than to entertain. Fielding wrote to entertain; Dickens wrote to picture the existing wrongs of his age, to elevate and instruct. Who was the greater benefactor to humanity—Fielding or Dickens? What is true as to the literature of these writers is true in the literature of our race.

Fiction, as a rule, is classified into two great divisions—that which pictures an ideal condition and that which pictures the real condition. Authors who write fiction, therefore, as a rule, are either idealists or realists. There are two other minor divisions into which fiction may be classified—namely, that which paints character and that which describes incidents. All great fiction, therefore, must come under one or the other of these divisions. Sometimes a work may partake of both; but my contention is that to picture the ideal conditions, to paint character as it should be, is non-effective, however high the standard, unless you paint the real conditions of life and its defects; you must first deal with the real conditions and their defects before you can make ideal conditions effective. The writer who is a realist and paints the real conditions of his generation and the existing wrongs that prevail, and then paints the ideal conditions—conditions as they should be—is the writer who serves well his generation, and serves both the cause of humanity and literature.

And now comes the literary editor of the San Francisco Argonaut and declares that "The Struggle" is written by "one of the mob for the mob." If to point out the real conditions and the crimes of this generation is to classify the writer as one of the mob, then I am one of the mob. There are more thieves and criminals in that little space opposite Trinity Church—Wall Street—than in any other spot on earth; more high-class thieves there than in any penitentiary or prison on this globe. If to point out their crimes and their thievery and their plunder of the people; if to declare that these are the real criminals of the land and the men whose heads should be shaven and upon whom stripes should be placed; if to point out these criminals and their crimes, which are destroying our civilization, is to classify the writer as one of the mob, then I am one of the mob; if to paint the picture of the great struggle between the masses, the wealth producers, and these criminals is to stamp the writer as one of the mob, then I am one of the mob.

SIDNEY C. TABB.

"Hawaiian Yesterdays."

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

You were kind enough to find place for a note some weeks ago concerning "A Boy's Town" and "Farmington," and I am constrained to ask for space in which to call the especial attention of lovers of books that look backward to a new work which I cannot too highly praise. "Hawaiian Yesterdays," by the late Dr. Henry Munson Lyman, belongs to the small and choice class of books which were written for the mere joy of calling back days that are past, and with little thought that other eyes than those of the most intimate friends of the writer would ever read the pages in which he had set down the memories of his childhood and youth. In this instance the childhood and youth were passed among the most unusual surroundings, and the memories are such as no one born of the present generation can ever hope to have. Dr. Lyman was born in Hilo in 1835, the child of missionary parents. With an artistic touch which has placed the sketches just published among "the books which are books," he has given an unequaled picture of a boyhood lived under tropical skies. As I read on and on through his delightful pages memories came back to me of three friends of my own childhood—"Robinson Crusoe," "The Swiss Family Robinson," and "Masterman Ready"—and I would be glad to know that all, old and young, who have enjoyed those immortal tales would take to their hearts this last idyl of an island.

American Essayists.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Some of the roll calls of our essayists remind one of the tale of a rejected and dejected suitor. To lift the half-mast expression on his countenance a cheerful friend remarked: "Oh, well, cheer up; there are other girls in the world."

"What other girls?" quoth the myopic mourner.

The trouble with almost any of the estimates of American literature is due to the fact that we do not see the trees on account of the woods. Few countries have produced more or better essayists than America, but only a few of them—and not always the best ones—are in the "plane of perpetual apparition," astronomically speaking. Others are like the maiden celebrated by Wordsworth—

A violet beside a mossy stone
Half hidden from the eye—
Fair as a star, when only one
Is shining in the sky.

In the interests of justice, as well as for the future pleasure of your readers, it were well to decoy from behind their mossy stones a few essayists who have been overlooked in the entertaining letters of your correspondents. Strangely enough, one of our most brilliant and pungent essayists—a real thinker—has been omitted on the lists so far given. If any one wishes to verify the accuracy of the adjectives I have used let him look up in The Critic of three or so years ago—the April number, if my memory serves—a paper on "The Comic View," by Mr. Benjamin De Casseres. This is one of the best essays I have ever read—the very best on its own theme. Others nearly as good by the same author have appeared in other issues of The Critic and The Bookman, as well as elsewhere, plenty enough for a good-sized volume. But one of them gives the genre. One does not need to eat a bushel of pomegranates to get the flavor.

Mrs. Martha Baker Dunn is another essayist whose piquant originality places her very near Dr. Crothers, which is an enviable position for any writer. But without going into detail, I shall simply make a list of American essayists, dead and living, for the benefit of those who cannot manage the switchkeys of memory as readily as they might wish. Of course if the works of these essayists had been issued by "The Red Canal Press" of Mars and imported by the Interplanetary Pneumatic Chute Company we should see how uncommonly good work they were. But what would you? Who can properly estimate a prophet whose mother and brethren are still with us?

However, for the benefit of some foreigner who may see our authors clothed upon with the fleecy garments of enchantment which distance weaves, I submit an approximately complete list of our best essayists, beginning with our greatest, whom death could not take from us:

1. Emerson.
2. Thoreau.
3. Lowell.
4. Holmes.
5. Lanier.
6. Curtis.
7. Warner.
8. Whipple.
9. Samuel McChord Crothers ("The Gentle Reader.")
10. Benjamin De Casseres ("The Comic View" and other essays.)
11. Martha Baker Dunn ("Cicero in Maine.")
12. Edmund Clarence Stedman ("Nature and Elements of Poetry.")
13. John Burroughs ("Ways of Nature.")
14. Miss Agnes Repplier (anything, preferably everything, she has.)
15. James ("The Question of Our Speech.")
16. Gerald Stanley Lee ("The Lost Art of Reading.")
17. Andrew Wheeler, alias Nym Crinkle, alias J. P. Mowbray ("A Journey to Nature.")
18. Lafcadio Hearn ("The Romance of the Milky Way.")
19. Elbert Hubbard ("The Little Journeys.")
20. Hamilton Mabie.
21. Prof. Sedgwick.
22. Bliss Perry.
23. Prof. Peck.
24. Prof. Matthews.
25. Prof. Lounsbury.
26. Prof. Egan.
27. Mr. Saltus.
28. Alfred Henry Lewis.
29. William Allen White.
30. Edward Sanford Martin ("Cousin Anthony and I.")
31. Charles Battell Loomis ("I've Been Thinking.")
32. Mrs. Cruger.
33. Paul Elmer More ("Shelburne Essays.")
34. Louise Imogen Guiney ("Patins.")
35. Beth Bradford Gilchrist, (a contributor to The Atlantic.)
36. W. C. Brownell.

This list might easily be doubled by a roll call of our political and historical essayists, not to mention the very fine religious essayists, whose works are commonly known as "sermons." Can any one mention an English essayist, besides Arnold, who has done work that approaches that of Emerson or Lowell?

"The Wheel of Life."

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Since you published some weeks ago Mrs. M. Gordon Pryor Rice's very able review of "The Wheel of Life" there has scarcely been any mention of the book in your columns.

Why is it that this book is so much less discussed than was "The House of Mirth"? Isn't it remarkable that two books strong and cleverly written and having such a decided family resemblance could appear within a short period of time and not call forth more comparison?

In both we find the heroine of thirty or so placed in the same social environment—two women who might have met any day in the week, say at Gertie Bridewell's, and yet they are as different as if they had been educated at opposite sides of the world. Lily Bart is beautiful and in a way refined, but without culture or ideals—you could no more praise than blame her for her standards—yet somehow you are quite fond of her and experience a strong desire to protect her. In the other story, Laura Wilde is rich in the qualities of heart and spirit so lacking in Lily. But does any one love her very much? Even when tortured, as she is, upon the wheel of life, doesn't one rest comfortably in the belief that she will not be broken, but is bound to come into her kingdom?

Among the many points in which these stories resemble each other there is a minor one which is rather haunting—it is the suggestion that life's enigma may be answered by "a word."

Selden had never been impetuous, and it took him many hours to find "the word" which had been spelled for him in the hollows of Lily's cheeks and the shadows in her eyes. It mattered nothing to Lily Bart that in time he was able to call the word. For her life's unmerry jest had ended, and a whole chapter of words could not avail. But when Gertie Bridewell breaks from her husband's detaining hand, and with love and loyalty hastens to Laura in her needful hour, she goes without "the word," wondering "what word, among all others, was there that she could speak to her."

Poet Lore and Essays.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

As regards the statement of the publishers of Poet Lore, I would like to say that I do not believe this publication is quite the sort of "all-essay" magazine Mr. Moses and his followers mean to propose. I have read Poet Lore frequently; it is, as stated, a magazine of essays. But, with the characteristic blindness of "literary" people getting up an extremely "literary" journal for a coterie of "literary" readers, the publishers of Poet Lore have contented themselves mainly with essays about literature, technical, and at times very bald and very dry. Is there nothing to write essays about except various literatures, literary characters, and authors? Give us essays along Lamb's whimsical vein, studies of street types, shops, and odd characters; give us historical essays and a few "imaginary portraits" of soldiers and statesmen; give us essays such as Kipling could write about the poetry of modern mechanics and inventions. At times when I read Poet Lore I can close my eyes and see the Ladies' Browning Club of Oskaloosa, Iowa, in full blast.

"Whitmaniacs."

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Mr. A. M. Huger, in his letter printed in your columns April 7, speaks of "Leaves of Grass" as the "apotheosis of sweat," terms its admirers "Whitmaniacs," and further says that the book suggests to him, "not the meditations of a sage, but the mouthing of a mountebank whose head—weak at the best—had been muddled and maddened by worshippers of the coarse and commonplace."

These adverse critical remarks from Mr. Huger lead me to suspect that in reading "Leaves of Grass" he has turned several pages at a time.

"Leaves of Grass," as a whole, I consider to be one of the greatest of books; but to apprehend its real greatness and profound beauty it must be taken in its entirety; it must be viewed ensemble.

Nature—judged by any one of her laws or aspects—will seem inconsistent, imperfect, sinister, repellent; but taken as a whole, viewed ensemble, she reveals a profound beauty, harmony, wisdom, and beneficence sublimely justifying herself to God and man. It is even so with "Leaves of Grass." Judged by extracts from its pages it may repel you, but to all who read it through it grandly justifies itself. It is a case wherein the whole is greater than a part—a very high compliment to pay any book, and one far too seldomly deserved. Aye, drink deeply, or not at all, of the Whitmanian fount; for he who but sips at it becomes mad, while he who drinks deeply realizes the sanity of the gods!

Whitman had a profoundly philosophical and poetic soul, but was denied the gift of song. The nearest he came to song was chanted prose; but in his book of chanted prose we find expressed or intimated ethical and spiritual truths and ideals that measure, as yet, the highest soul-reach of man!

The real greatness and beauty of Whitman's book is felt rather than seen; is apprehended of the soul rather than of our less transcendent faculties. That the book is without flaw no one will maintain—and here I am reminded that there are spots on the sun.

In conclusion, I would say to Mr. Huger: Take "Leaves of Grass" into some sylvan nook of solitude in the "Over Hills," and there deliberately read it from title page to colophon; and if then you still believe its admirers should be termed "Whitmaniacs," I shall conclude that Whitman is either below or above you, and let it go at that.

Advice as to Poetry and Prose.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

O Perplexed! Let Walt Whitman live, and die yourself if need be!

Quoting from "The Poetry of Life," by an author who is unperplexed: "Some people seem to have minds like mazes. It is next to impossible to get an idea into their heads; and, once lodged there, it never gets out. The avenues of their intelligence are all beset with barbs and thorns and prickles—a provision of nature for the self-preservation of identity, but an unfortunate endowment to bring to the appreciation of art." Quoting further, "If I do not like Walt Whitman or Monet, I ought to suppress my distaste. Why? Not because these men have been placed beyond doubt among the immortals, but because the prejudiced and carping mood is hurtful to myself."

"Folly."

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

As Ivanowski's interpretation of "Folly" is evidently causing discussion, and with good reason, too, I write to say that, in my opinion, your reviewer's judgment of the frontispiece in the book was fully justified, the owl story to the contrary notwithstanding.

To my mind, the story of "Folly" is much stronger and of more moment than the picture would lead one to believe. When reading the book, even though I objected to the theme of the two men and a woman, I nevertheless found the work so absorbing and so well written that it was quite impossible to put it aside until I had read on to the end.

It does seem to me, just as you point out, that the publishers have a better and more far-reaching book than they imagined.

Two Gorky Novels.

The Scribners are bringing out new editions of translations of two of Maxim Gorky's novels—"Foma Gordyeff" and "Orloff and His Wife." In the former the novelist gives a psychological study of two generations of the prosperous Russian tradesman type, and Georg Brandes, the well-known Danish critic, has said that "it contains the figures of one man and those of two or three women that one does not forget." In "Orloff and His Wife" the author deals with depraved creatures in wretched circumstances, who, however, as Brandes also has declared, "rise to a life of efficiency or enjoyment" for a time.

TWO HISTORIANS.

The Controversy Over the Relative Merits of J. A. Froude and Edward Freeman.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

"AFTER all," however, says Mr. Paul in his "Life of James Anthony Froude," recent, though not in the "Spring announcement," having mentioned the emphatic censure, the hostile criticism, the earliest volumes of "The History of England," received from "the reviewers," "an author depends, not upon this party nor upon that party, but upon the general public." The public took to Froude's history from the first—and not only in England. When Mr. Froude visited us, in 1871, his publishers had sold 150,000 copies of his history.

Authors do depend a great deal upon "the public"—those average persons, "general readers." And Freeman is not the only superior one who in his final "verdict"—his own word for his opinion of Froude's history—makes sarcastic reference to "the general reader and his tastes, why this thing pleases him and the other displeases him, have ever been to us the profoundest of mysteries."

One may feel like a very humble reader, yet be provoked, to put it mildly, in return. If the tastes of "the public" are easily incomprehensible to certain intellects, it is sometimes difficult for a plain reader to understand how some of the trained critics reach their conclusions—if they are not hasty or prejudiced. How could critics supposed to be familiar with standards, trained to test a literary work, assert that Froude's "History of England" was the product of "a facile ignoramus"? But no matter how. They did. And some still rate Mr. Froude thus. Nothing is more interesting—in what seems a fair and reasonable study of Mr. Froude—than the account of how certain critics persuaded not only themselves, but other members of academic circles, that Mr. Froude was a superficial sciolist whose works no educated person could read with enjoyment.

It is probable that very few persons read Mr. Paul's biography unless interested in his subject. If so, it is no news that Froude was intensely disliked in his lifetime, his history called "vicious in conception, vicious in execution." After Mr. Froude became Regius Professor at Oxford, a lecturer from that historic town gave an American audience "a course" on "The Age of Elizabeth." He mentioned Mr. Froude's history. He asked his hearers to take it from him as a fact beyond dispute that Mr. Froude could handle English rather skillfully—but he was not a historian.

There were a number of the class called "general readers" attending that course. With the disposition to be deferential to a teacher who came to us with the benevolent intention of extending knowledge to "outsiders," we could not help venturing to think that our lecturer—he was a clergyman of the Church of England—was more authoritative than just when he warned us more than once, "Read Froude, if he pleases you, for style, but as a historian he is not to be trusted."

Such admirers, though bold enough to question a decision, may not be altogether the best allies for a historian. It is hard for us to express ourselves. We may be more copious than coherent. We may not be able to see undoubted mistakes in Mr. Froude's history—not notice when a proper name is misspelled. At least, we did not see, until Mr. Paul pointed it out, that Mr. Froude seems to imply the House of Commons in the time of Henry VIII. represented the people, when, in fact, members were chosen by Sheriffs through the Crown. It was not until Mr. Lang detected the mistake in his "Mystery of Amy Robsart" that one saw how Mr. Froude, in giving the gist of several dispatches from the Spanish Ambassador in London to Philip II., inadvertently left Queen Elizabeth in a still more awkward position than she remains after Mr. Lang concentrates his attention on the episode in which her Majesty figures.

But if any one of "the public," as distinguished from historical scholars and critics, is not likely to see all of Mr. Froude's faults, a reader who cares enough to read his history probably forms some independent opinion. One may feel sure Mr. Froude is right when he contends that in the sixteenth century the Church of Rome had become the enemy of human freedom and British independence; and yet one may not be altogether persuaded that Henry VIII. thought first of England, and only next of himself, when he was charmed by Anne Boleyn.

But even if one takes Mr. Froude's work for gospel, such a person would not seem to be as completely mistaken as scholars—as our lecturer trained at Balliol—who make up their minds that Mr. Froude is not a historian.

Mr. Paul observes, "While pedants and professors insisted that opinions disqualified Mr. Froude to be the historian of Henry VIII., Mary Tudor, and Elizabeth, the public had too much sense to believe that Mr. Froude was only the author of four volumes of ingenious paradox and eight volumes of anti-ecclesiastical pamphlet." This is certainly a compliment to the public. "Plain readers" may feel gratified to-day that those of their class who took to Mr. Froude in spite of the most of "the critics," were not idiots or perverse. The truth seems to be that sense and intelligence are happily not confined to any one class. It has been argued that no book, however fast it sells at first, is popular long unless it makes for righteousness—moral, if not artistic. Mr. Froude's great "History of England" is proof of this. Though some continue to think Mr. Froude was only "a garbler," scholars able to form a really instructed and impartial opinion, while they disagree on some points—as Mr. Paul, who is no blind devotee, shows—do Mr. Froude full justice.

Their opinion is truth rather more than the average reader's. But, all the same, any reader who has the sense to see that Mr. Froude is essentially in the right, who thinks that every chapter of his "History of England," from "The Fall of Wolsey" to "The Defeat of the Armada," shows evidence of study, may have satisfaction in the thought that the verdict of the really competent confirms the preference of a class Mr. Freeman fell upon with satiric analysis and contempt.

FRENCH CLASSICS.

TWO new volumes, tastefully printed from French types in 16mo. form and bound in pliable leather covers, have been added to the French Classics Series edited by H. D. O'Connor. ("Profils Anglais," by C. A. Sainte-Beuve, and "La Mare au Diable," by George Sand. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1 net per volume.)

The material of the first volume, which is introduced by a critical, biographical, and bibliographical preface from the pen of André Turquet, comprises a series of articles which are familiar to the readers of the "Causeries du Lundi," which naturally fall within the scope of the titles—Franklin, Marie Stuart, Gibbon, Chesterfield, and Cowper, together with some original translations and imitations of the English Lake poets. As everybody knows, Sainte-Beuve was the inventor of the historico-biographic monograph which groups the chronicles of a period around the career of a famous man. At a time when French criticism was submerged by a classical moralizing in which vague signs of the coming impressionistic school were noticeable, Sainte-Beuve, with the imagination of a poet, the thought of a logician, wrote critically of history and biography with a repose, dignity, elegance, and tact which will ever remain models of French rhetoric. Whatever French author one may be reading—except, possibly, Voltaire—one takes up a volume of Sainte-Beuve with a feeling of relief and of intellectual contentment.

"The Devil's Pool" of George Sand has long been familiar to "second-year" students in French. It is the most charming pastoral novelette written by this supreme head of the idealistic French school, as it was half a century ago. More need not be said here, except to note that the preface is the work of L. Corniquet.

In conformity with the scheme of this series, each volume has a delicately engraved etched portrait of the author as a frontispiece, together with a fac simile autograph. As has already been stated in noticing other volumes in the series, the scheme is most commendable in the selections made by the editor and in the typographical and bookish form in which they are presented. Without being captious, it may be suggested that the introductory matter contains two diverse elements which appeal to separate publics, the mental equipment of which may not be found common to those who may desire to possess French classics in an inviting form. It is perhaps proper, for the benefit of students, that the "introduction" should contain data which are within the reach of any one possessing a fair French library or even a fair knowledge of French authors. But the writers and compilers of this matter have seen fit to present it in the "feuilleton French" of to-day, which is hardly in keeping with the simple theme set forth, and measurably removed from the dignified French which follows. If we are to have purely encyclopedic prefaces they should be written in simple, encyclopedic French, and not in the French of impressionistic criticism.

Mr. Williams of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Konkle has shown almost Teutonic carefulness in preparing his "Life and Speeches of Thomas Williams, 1806-1872," (Philadelphia: Campion & Co. Two volumes. $6 net.) For the life of Mr. Williams was not exciting, and at this period of time it does not seem to have been of especial interest, yet Mr. Konkle has carried his work to the end with no apparent diminution of energy and interest. Mr. Williams was a Whig in the forties, an editor, and an ardent high-tariff man; he was a member of the Pittsburg bar and one of its leaders in the fifties and until his death. Mr. Konkle's chapters show that he deserved his repute as a lawyer. After service at Harrisburg, Mr. Williams entered Congress in December, 1863. There he speedily made a name as a speaker, and won the title of "The Sumner of the Lower House." In 1868 he reached the apex of his fame, being chosen one of the seven managers of the impeachment of the President. This fact in Williams's life is of merely historic interest now; the attack on the President was so manifestly partisan that it failed dramatically, and Andrew Johnson's name endures to-day while the names of his opponents and prosecutors are forgotten. Mr. Williams died in 1872, and after a time half as long as his lifetime these volumes appear—undoubtedly memorial volumes, for his life was not of importance enough to demand them.

SPELLING OF ENGLISH.

Not Reform, but a New System Called For—Weakness of the Old and the New Methods.

I.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

THE matter of spelling reform seems to have taken a strong hold upon many intelligent people, and, together with the all-easily magazine, is quite the subject of conversation. I hear the management of THE NEW YORK TIMES, both the daily and THE BOOK REVIEW, highly commended for the encouragement it has offered to both propositions. The hope is very general that both issues, but especially THE REVIEW, will continue to keep both subjects before the people. Neither should be allowed to become merely sensations of a day. The papers are so continually forcing upon our attention so many things that we do and do not want to know that the fittest do not always survive.

Your correspondent "Englishman" has all his life made the mistake, so almost universal, and few are wholly free from it, of learning to pronounce wholly by ear; very few of us, however, ever brag of it. He says: "It was not necessary to learn English from books, for from my cradle I have been surrounded by those who spoke it with purity, * * * and always used it with a rich music of intonation, phrase, and rhythm utterly unknown in conversation here. * * * I never used a dictionary or saw one in our house." Most Americans would be ashamed to have it known that they did not own and use dictionaries. And that "rich music of intonation"; we do hear it, too much of it. I recently heard a very learned English gentleman deliver a number of lectures on an important and interesting subject; he had that "rich music of intonation"; he had it bad; it was simply dreadful; it took away the charm of what was otherwise very interesting and very instructive, for the man well knew what he was talking about; but when he used the word "church" he made it rhyme with "such"; he shortened all his first syllables and accentuated and prolonged all his second and final ones; his voice went up and down like a small boat in a rough sea, and the drums of the ears of the listeners were forced to do likewise.

But my object now is to place before your readers a somewhat comprehensive showing of the many abuses that need to be not reformed, but killed. Practically every one of the abuses that exist to-day can be attributed directly to our miserable alphabet and the confirmed habit of using the vowels indiscriminately. It is almost true that the vowels are synonymous.

The dictionaries give from five to eight sounds to "a." There are certainly five that are distinct; in addition, there are some that may be called exceptional. This letter, in its varying sounds, is written in not less than thirty-five different ways! Is it not astonishing, confusing, annoying, and disgusting? These ways follows: A-ce, p-ai-d, wh-ey, eigh-t, g-ao-l, g-au-ge, br-ea-k, v-ei-l, aye, s-ay, b-a-t, p-ar, are, l-a, ah, l-augh, al-ms, h-ear-th, p-aw, b-a-ll, h-au-l, augh-t, ough-t, a-ny, s-ai-d, wh-a-t, w-a-tch, isl-a-nd, w-ea-ther, a-bout, ere, p-ea-r, f-a-re, l-ai-r; and the list is very far from being exhausted. Besides these we have the "a" in ligament and the second "a" in altar and in a lot more of words where the sound is slurred or unaccented.

Five to seven sounds are given to "e," some of these it has in common with "a." These sounds are found in d-e-tail, C-ae-sar, oe-sophagus, gr-ie-f, g-ee-se, Portu-g-ue-se, c-ea-se, rec-ei-pt, e-nd, m-a-ny, h-e-r, f-i-r, c-u-r, ea-rnest, m-y-rrh, g-ue-rdon, w-o-rd, v-ei-n, th-e-re, b-ee-r, h-e-r-e, riv-e-r, lov-e; and as many more would be required to make a complete list. Silent "e" at the end of a word or a syllable is supposed to be there for the purpose of lengthening a preceding vowel; at times it accomplishes that purpose; but there are uncounted words where it does not; it (or something else) lengthens the "o" in move, but has no effect on the "o" in dove; it does not lengthen the "a" in are; to do that your must prefix a consonant, as in bare, care, dare, fare, hare, mare, pare, rare, tare, and ware; and we do a still more ridiculous thing; after we have lengthened a preceding vowel by annexing an "e" we proceed to shorten it again not by dropping the "e," but by adding a consonant—as from din we get dine and diner, and then by doubling the "n" get dinner; so with sup, super, supper. It is a bold man who will say that that "e" is worth retaining; let's quit it.

"I" is given five sounds, and it takes the sound at times of "h," "j," and "y," and is silent; we find these sounds written in the following ways: F-i-ve, r-ye, b-uy, n-igh, sl-eigh-t, b-y, p-i-n, pens-i-on, mill-i-on, sold-ie-r, p-i-que, wh-i-rl; in thousands of words it can be replaced by one or more of the other vowels, and no harm will result.

"O" is given as many as five sounds, and others in combinations; they are written as follows: B-o-ld, o-mit, o-rder, c-o-d, t-o-ngue, m-oo-t, h-oo-d, c-ou-ld, f-oi-l, p-ou-t, n-o-w; it also has the short "u" sound in an almost endless number of words.

"U" is given six sounds; it is unquestionably written in more ways than any of the others. The short sound is the most common in our language, and easily deserves a character all to itself; it is the only sound in our language that you cannot write if you want to; write it the way you think it should be, and then ask the next man to pronounce it; you will "kick yourself"; half the letters are used, one time and another, in the effort. I shall make no effort to try and show all of the ways in which the six sounds are written; here are some of them: F-u-se, n-ew-s, you, d-ue-s, u-nite, r-u-by, b-u-ll, t-u-b, t-ur-n, b-oo-by, w-oo-d, c-oul-d, r-oug-h, ea-rn, f-er-n, l-o-ve, pens-io-n, qu-art, err-or, cord-ia-l, pig-eo-n, naus-eou-s, virtu-ou-s, consc-iou-s, vog-ue, alt-ar, yu-le.

The confusion in the use of the vowels is so great that it is extremely difficult even to approach to a complete showing of the many ways in which they are used one for the other, or, you might almost say, the whole lot for one; it is a sort of grab-bag business, and the best way is to use the first one that comes to hand.

I pass by all of the consonants except "f" and "k," though there is plenty of room for comment on them all, enough of them that are one thing to-day and something else to-morrow. "F" really has but one sound of its own, though it takes the sound of "v" in "of." But so that the letter may have no occasion to grumble, this one sound is written seven ways; we have if, stiff, life, half, scarf, diphtheria, cough; "f" should be satisfied. But for an otherwise insignificant and little-used letter, "k" is a striking example of the unfitness of things. It is easily the "king" of them all, for, though it has but one sound, that sound is written in sixteen ways; that is all; only sixteen; at least, I do not know of any more. We find it as follows: Ha-wk, wa-lk, clo-ck, pa-rk, ba-ke, a-che, so-ak, k-ill, c-all, ch-orus, kh-edive, opa-que, li-qu-or, sa-cque, la-cqu-er, su-cc-or.

These sounds are carried out, of course, in the syllables, and we get such results as these: The sound of "ese" is written in eight ways—niece, grease, police, diocese, fleece, geese, peace, Portuguese; the sound of "eze" is also written in eight ways—bees, fleas, please, seize, squeeze, frieze, hades, these. The sound of "e" in her is written in six ways—pearl, purl, myrrh, sir, word, serf.

At the end of Volume 8 of the Century Dictionary there is a list of words and a set of rules for the guidance of those who are desirous of reform. It is recommended by both the English and the American associations. I hesitate to call the attention of "Englishman" to it; he will be severely shocked, and from now on will probably repudiate the English board. It is the most radical thing I ever knew to come from an English source, but it is all good, and if we only had the courage of our convictions and were enough in earnest to follow the rules there laid down, hundreds of these absurdities would be things of the past. But no real and enduring reform can be had with our present alphabet. New abuses will take the place of old ones just as long as "a" can be expressed in thirty-five ways.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

That spelling reform is getting an impetus and not a setback from the present commotion is made plain by the practical views about it advanced in your columns. Language is the best reflector of life, its alter ego, in fact; it mirrors both mind and body; it vitalizes biography with blood and breath. It cannot be reformed by impulse nor amended in the smallest way except by very slow degrees. The only power that can really affect it for better or worse, is that everlasting, almost invisible, evolution to which human life is subject from its natal to its nadir hour. The process goes on regardless of us; we can assist, but we must not try to supersede it.

The most useless and ludicrous activity in the cause is the out-and-out adoption of the phonetic system in print or writing. Ardent natures imbued with fonetic frenzi form themselves into societies to rescue our benighted orthography from its idiosyncrasies. When later they realize how grotesque the new style is they blush at their own simpleness. Prof. Matthews is unduly taxed if he submits to any responsibility for the society of this kind lately organized at Columbia University. The truth is that progress depends more upon individuals acting separately than upon groups; it means the doing by each one of us of something already determined by common sense as essential to his or her personal welfare. Scholarship, celebrity, wealth, can be helpful if they touch the sentiment as well as the sense of the people; not otherwise. Any people's mother tongue is vastly more inwrought with their feelings than their facts. The word "luv," for example, is simpler than "love," and yet its chances of being adopted are, it seems to me, like those of the rainy-day skirt. No one can deny that this garment is more hygienic and all that; but do our ladies want it? Again, a gentleman dare not remove his coat except in privacy, though the thermometer itself perspire, and yet from one point of view this is a greater absurdity than are the needless letters in "tough" or "beauty."

I should say that anybody willing to serve on the Universal Committee for Spelling Reform would do well to select twenty words in daily use. This number will suffice for the average lifetime. When choosing, a line should be drawn between those having basic peculiarities—as "ie" and "ei" in "sieve" and "deceive," respectively—and those with accidental or supplemental parts, like "k" after "c," or the laughable "ough." I myself would begin with that group in which the letter "o" stands for the sound of short "u"; "combat," "comfort," "ton," and "company" are specimens. There is very little resistance or risk when working in this unpresumptuous way. It wisely keeps one within the meaning of Pope's couplet:

"Be not the first by whom the new is tried, Nor yet the last to lay the old aside."

Should you ask me why I leave out "come," my answer would be: Reform aims at consistency, and though I would accept "cum," I am averse to "hum." But I must end this phase of the matter, though plenty of material is at hand that might be interesting to your readers. The most useful inquiry I know of is this: How can the simple facts of spelling reform be disseminated among the people? My answer is: Through the schools. A Board of Superintendents like New York's should have a committee to deal with this problem; in smaller towns Principals should grapple with it. The adoption of methods for the new spelling will have to be mandatory, not optional, in the course of study. Primary grades should have books with words already phonetic in form, of which enough already exist for the first two years. When this is done the foundation will really be on rock bottom; and, better still, the utterance and pronunciation of our daily speech will be immeasurably improved. Phonetic drill, I may remind you, means concerted action by ear and tongue, which are the sense factors in speech production. Not until we reach the rising generation in the classroom and win their enthusiasm by the ease and celerity of phonetic exercises, and obtain the teachers' co-operation by proving its applicability and efficiency, can there be hope for this new departure in popular education. Meanwhile, the journals may be filled with lingual research, Col. Sprague may be again reproached by some other Mr. Mitchell, (see issue of this REVIEW, April 7,) who perhaps may not know that but for the sacrifice and efforts of men like the Colonel there would be no such boon as spelling reform in existence. Simplified spelling must be grafted on the tree of knowledge beneath which our children can shelter against orthographic heresies. Judgment, courage, and composure are qualities one must have who would labor in so worthy a cause.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

You wer good enuf to publish an expreshon ov opinion from An Englishman on the speling question. May I crave a litl space for a wurd on the uther side?

My felo-cuntriman ov Waynesburg sayz that eni speling must be based upon the asertaind rezults of filoloji, and shud plainli sho to the lerned the derivashon and histori of eech wurd. Does the prezent speling fulfil those condishonz? Does the lerned need to no the derivashon and histori from the speling? Doo they not alredi no from ascertaind rezults, without consulting the garb ov a wurd, whot the histori ov a wurd iz? Iz it not esenshal and ov more importans to no whot the sound ov a wurd iz? And if its speling hidez its sound, iz not the pursuit ov filoloji frustrated? If it iz not servisabl to the filolojist, whot use iz it? Sertenli not for good to the poor comershal traveler, or the butcher, or the reporter, so sumarili dismist by "mine oan cuntriman." Just az fonetic speling wud help filolojists, so wud it help the children ov the despized traveler, butcher, and reporter. A few ourz ago I reseevd a cleer and firmli ritten fonografic leter from Mr. Henry Pitman, who iz over 80 yeers ov aje, who sayz: "Fonetic speling has been wel tested. Sixty yeerz ago my bruther Benn (ov Cincinnati) and I taut ignorant prizonerz in the Preston Hous ov Corecshon to reed the fonetic Bible in a few dayz. Bruther Benn taut poor children at Swinton scoolz, neer Manchester, and I taut pauper children in Liverpool with equal sucses." Who haz more riht or more at stake in seeking to simplify English speling than the traveler, butcher, reporter, or artizan? To save time iz to lengthen life, and Simplified Speling or, beter stil, Fonetic Speling, wil doo this. No wun deniez it. Why then cavil over it in order to foster a pedantic whim?

Perhaps my frend iz aware that the formz "theatre" and "centre," current in England, were formerli "teatre" and "center"?

Whot a suport "colour," "honour," "favour," ar to the conservativz! In time they wil be divested ov redundansi, just az a host ov utherz hav been, such az "creatour," "interiour," "warriour," &c., and neither filolojists, travelerz, butcherz, &c., will be a peni the wurst. He iz good enuf to acnoledj that "honor," &c., came to us from the Latin, but thru old French. Perhaps it did. Iz it not more wurthi to acnoledj a great-grandfather than a grandparent? If Latin woz content with "honor," why shudn't we? But reali, how did old French spel it? Waz it not "honur," "hunur," "honor," "hounor," "honnour," "onor," "ounor," "ounour," "enor," "annor," "honeur," "honneur"? If old French cud and did uze sum fourteen variant formz for "honor," then I fail to see why we shud in "honneur" be bound to spel it uther than we pleez. My frend iz veri fond ov the old cuntri and its wayz; iz he aware that Milton'z printerz printed "honor," "vapors," "favors," "rigor," "humor," "rancor"; that Spenser induljd in "neibor"; that Raphe Robynson wuns used "honor" when translating More'z "Utopia"; that W. E. Gladstone'z and Lord Salisbury'z first electoral adress containd "honor" without a "u"? Does he no that long before "crude 4th form scholarship" became famus, "savior" was adopted by the printerz ov the Scotish Covenanterz' Bible in the seventeenth senturi, and during the same period "labor" iz to be seen in the Parlementari Reports?

My frend, after expresing disaproovel ov amendashonz ov speling alredi made, at the close ov his efuzhon sayz: "No dout speling needz atenshon, perhaps reform." May I ask whot reform? Then he galantli consignz the hole task to Prof. Skeat. Does he no whot the profesor has said? I wil tel him; just this: "In the interests ov etimoloji, I wish the comon speling wer utterli smasht!" This wil carri my frend a litl further than "fourth formers" hav gon. Dr. Sweet says "our present speling is in meni particulars a far from trustwurthi gide in etimoloji, and ofen, indeed, entireli falsifies histori." Again, he declarz: "It is mainli among the clas ov haaf-taut dablerz in filoloji that etimolojical speling has found its suporterz. And tru filolojists and filolojical bodiez hav uniformli denounst it az a monstrus absurditi both from a practical and a sientific point ov vew." After this, may I ask him to pardon "fourth formerz" for their aledjd crudeness? I shud be glad if the Simplified Speling Board found a footing in England.

Poetry, Music, and Prose.

I.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

"C. H. E." and I must agree to disagree, I fear. I make no more claim than does he to the qualifications of a musical critic. But if it be true that more than 90 per cent. of refined persons of serious tastes feel as he thinks they feel, I venture to assure him his battle is won. The odds against "abnormal" taste are overwhelming. Naturally, I think that there is an error in his figures; and certainly I have not acquired my "abnormal" taste in either of the ways suggested. Nor would I, or any one not a crank, advise one who does not care for Wagner's music ("Wagner's music" being here used merely as a symbol) "to go and listen to the hurdy-gurdy." On the contrary, I would advise such a one to hear all he can of the class of music that appeals to him, trying, however, to have what he does hear the best of its class. He need not fear, I think, becoming "surfeited with all real music," and I am equally sure that for one of "C. H. E.'s" intellectual honesty there is no other danger. Should he come some day to care for the more complex forms of music he need not, on that account, lose his appreciation of the more simple forms.

My quarrel with "C. H. E." is not at all that he does not find beautiful what I find beautiful. It is that he makes the "old, familiar" assumption that those who prefer what they think "the simpler and more melodious forms" of music have a monopoly of intellectual honesty as well as of good taste.

By a singular coincidence I have tonight stumbled upon a bit from Spencer's "Study of Sociology" which perhaps explains this attitude of mind:

"You have, perhaps, in the course of your life had some musical culture; and can recall the stages through which you have passed. * * * Remembering all this, you suspect that your indifference to certain still more involved musical combinations may arise from incapacity in you, and not from faults in them. See, on the other hand, what happens with one who has undergone no such series of changes. * * * You hear him confess, or rather boast, how much he enjoys the bagpipes. While the last cadences of a sonata which a young lady has just played are still in your ears he goes up and asks whether she can play 'Polly put the kettle on' or 'Johnny comes marching home.' And then, when concerts are talked about at table, he seizes the occasion for expressing his dislike of classical music, and scarcely conceals his contempt for those who go to hear it. * * * Along with absence of ability to grasp complex musical combinations there goes no consciousness of the absence—there is no suspicion that such complex combinations exist and that other persons have faculties for appreciating them."

We seem to have strayed from our theme. If the "Sphinx" should think the straying more seeming than real, I beg that he will keep the thought to himself. What I took for a twinkle in the "perplexed" eye turns out to be something far more deadly. It is evident that "Over the Hills of Ottaray" is no safe place for "Lambkins" and "Jax" to go a-browsing, whether it be upon grass, thistles, or laurels.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

I freely credit "Jax" with intellectual honesty, but his communication implies that he, too, has observed the class to which I refer. My plea for simpler and more melodious forms is meant, not in the narrow sense in which he regards it, but as distinguished from the excessive complexity and dissonance so prevalent. To appreciate the higher forms of music is one thing; to endure all that is presented as such and endeavor to like it quite another.

"Jax" complacently believes that time will decide; I fervently hope that before many years have passed music and poetry will escape the shackles of cant and commercialism and go forth to comfort and elevate the struggling souls of humanity.

BOSTON NOTES.

Memoirs of Dr. Howe—The President in a Novel—O. B. Hayve.

SINCE the grave closed upon the casque and sword of violets laid on the coffin of Samuel Gridley Howe in memory of the violet-crowned city which he loved, many have been the inquiries as to a biography, the natural sequel of a life so picturesque and vivid at the outset, so glowingly benevolent in its later years. The two biographies of his most famous pupil, Laura Bridgman, the "Reminiscences" of Mrs. Julia Ward Howe and the recollections of his daughters, have from time to time given tantalizing glimpses of him. His daughter, Mrs. Laura E. Richards, and his friend, Mr. Frank B. Sanborn, have for some months been at work upon a formal "Life," and the first of its three volumes will be ready early in the Summer and will be published by Messrs. Dana Estes & Co.

⁂

Samuel Gridley Howe's life began with the nineteenth century, and the story of his boyhood and youth and of his adventures in Greece will occupy this opening volume. His carefully kept diary will be reprinted with such passages from his letters as may be thought necessary, and such illumination as may be furnished by contemporary journals and letters. It is not too much, therefore, to expect the most stirring record of the Greek Revolution yet published. The book will be copiously illustrated with portraits and furnished with all necessary maps and battle plans, and that younger generation which hardly knows that its hero was ever anything but the friend and benefactor of the blind will find that his story casts new lights upon the recent group of Byron novels and memoirs. The succeeding volumes will follow in due order, and for once the children must give way to their elders—for Mrs. Richards will write no juvenile story for the next holiday season.

⁂

Perhaps it will be less missed than might have been the case had not Miss Edith Frances Foster written "Marigold," a continuation of "Mary 'n' Mary." Those who borrowed that book from the children last Christmas will remember that it was illustrated by its author, and she has already made the larger pictures for the new book. For older readers there are to be new editions of the handsome "Cities" series, written by Mrs. Clement Waters and others and amply illustrated, and there will be at least one and probably two novels by the author of "Jorn Uhl."

⁂

Granting that a title is a device to conceal the contents of a book, Mr. Herbert M. Hopkins has very happily named his "The Mayor of Warwick," to be published by Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co; for, although the hero is indeed a "reform Mayor," it is with his private feelings and personal affairs that the reader is chiefly concerned. Moreover, he is partly obscured by the heroine, whose character is brilliantly sketched, but not so definitely that the reader may not indulge himself in filling the outline to suit his own theories of psychology and feminine motives. There is no doubt as to her novelty or as to her being a product of the present moment; and her father, the Bishop, is by no means like the conventional mixture of astuteness and energetic benevolence served up by some ten American authors during the last few years. Lastly, the story includes an episode showing the President in action, and behaving in an agreeably characteristic manner. Opinions as to the ending of the book will differ sharply, according to creed and to knowledge of canon law, but "The Mayor of Warwick" will be read.

⁂

Of books that have already been read Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. announce the sixteenth edition of "Jewel," and the fourth of "The Imminence of God." "Carolina Lee," Lilian Bell's Christian Science novel, is selling very well, but Mrs. Burnham, the first writer in the field, is still the most successful with unbelievers, but of course her books are not Christian Science literature. That can be written only by those for whom, in Mrs. Baker Eddy's phrase, "the waiting waves will weave * * * their winning webs of life in looms of love that line the sacred shores."

⁂

Mr. Charles F. Gettemy, the author of "The True Story of Paul Revere," was the Patriots' Day orator before the Paul Revere Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution. The chapter assembled in the "old North Church."

⁂

Real life has once again confirmed fiction in the recent success of the pool room wire tappers, whose doings were reported in the papers the same day that Messrs. Little, Brown & Co. sent Mr. Arthur Stringer's "The Wire Tappers" to press.

⁂

Mr. Jeremiah Curtin, while his latest volume of translation, "On the Field of Glory" is making its way, is preparing an original work, "The Mongols, a History." He has recently spent some months with the Buriats, a tribe among which the ancient creation myths still survive and the horse sacrifice is still offered, and this volume will therefore add something to the world's knowledge of the subject discussed in the author's earlier volumes of myth and folk lore, already on the list of Messrs. Little, Brown & Co.

⁂

Messrs. L. C. Page & Co. will anticipate the customary time for issuing their juvenile books and publish four this month: Miss Blanche McManus's "Our Little Scotch Cousin," and in the Cozy Corner Series "Alpatok," an Eskimo dog story, by Marshall Saunders, the author of "Beautiful Joe"; "Larry Hudson's Ambition," by James Otis, and "The Cruise of the Yacht Dido," by Prof. Charles G. D. Roberts.

⁂

"The Art Galleries of Europe Series" will be continued this year by "The Art of the Dresden Gallery," by Mrs. Julia De Wolfe Addison, and "The Art of the Netherlands Galleries," by Miss Esther Singleton, compiler of "Towers, Turrets, and Temples," and many another well-known volume of critical description.

⁂

Mr. David A. Curtis's "Stand Pat," which Messrs. L. C. Page & Co. have nearly ready, will contain twenty papers on poker as exemplified at Brownsville, against which village the author says that he has nothing, adding that he got away.

⁂

The American Association for the Study of Alcohol and Inebriety has transferred the publication of its magazine, The Quarterly Journal of Inebriety, to Mr. Richard G. Badger, but Dr. T. D. Crothers will continue to be editor. The annual meeting of the association will be held in Boston on June 8, and many of the papers there presented will be published in The Journal.

⁂

The Spring number of Poet Lore will contain "August Freidberg," by Mr. Francis J. Ziegler, and "The Stronger," Freidberg's one-act play, in Mr. Ziegler's translation. Mr. Badger is publishing translations of Gorky's plays, and two will appear almost immediately; the others before the end of the year.

⁂

The London Queen ranks Miss Eve Blantyre Simpson's "Stevenson" as "one of the most readable of recent Stevensoniana." It is to be followed in the Spirit of the Age Series by "Maeterlinck," by Mr. Alfred Sutro, author of "Mollentrave on Women" and "A Maker of Men," produced in London last year, and translator of "Wisdom and Destiny" and "The Life of the Bee." "Ibsen" and "Nietzsché" are to come in a few months.

⁂

The printing of Mr. Gordon Craig's "The Art of the Theatre," to come from the same publishers, Messrs. John W. Luce & Co., goes forward steadily, but its plates require great care in production, and it will not appear immediately.

⁂

"Foolish Etiquette," by O. B. Hayve, Messrs. John W. Luce & Co.'s newest "Foolish" book, to be illustrated by Mr. Wallace Goldsmith, is nearly ready. It is to be printed on pages bordered in slate color, with absurd designs in white, and it has a wicked cover upon which dance the descendants of the witches in Macbeth or folk of the same race.

STOCK GAMBLING RUSTICATED.

A TALE of Wall Street transferred, of stock gambling rusticated, is "The Other Mr. Barclay," (New York: Consolidated Book Publishers.) The author is Henry I. Dodge, and there are illustrations. The plot concerns a certain Mr. Barclay, who was a bear, and went short to such an extent that he was ruined. After that he retired to a country town called Cosburg, and filled the place with frenzy. For he got the inhabitants interested in a pool, and later admitted them all as partners with himself in a joint stock grocery concern. Every citizen who held a dollar stock certificate and made cash purchases at the company's store to the amount of a dollar got a rebate of 5 per cent. Naturally the groceries went off furiously, naturally the stock certificates were eagerly bought and sold, and naturally the older generation of grocerymen conspired to get rid of the spoiler of their trade. They undermined Mr. Barclay's credit and then organized a bear movement upon his stock —with which pétard they hoist not Mr. Barclay but themselves. Indeed but for a young woman who detested stock gambling, while she adored Mr. Barclay, all these older merchants would have gone utterly broke. The young woman relieved the tension—the town was a raging bedlam by that time—by throwing upon the market all Mr. Barclay's stock, which had been left with her for safe keeping. In this affair she has for ally a clergyman, who appears as very little better than the wicked. The clergyman was Mr. Barclay's rival for the lady's hand.

The story is designed, one guesses, to point a moral and to serve as a warning to those who would take what the knowing call "flyers." It serves as a sort of diagram, at any rate, to show in little what this jargon of the Street means. Many persons who have very dim notions of what Wall Street bears and bulls do may get a generally correct, if crude, conception of the different methods of these predacious beasts of the financial jungle. Besides which there is the love story.

TWO BOOKS ON ATHLETICS.

ROWING AND TRACK ATHLETICS. A volume in two parts: "Rowing," by Samuel Crowther, Jr., and "Track Athletics," by Arthur Ruhl. Illustrated and indexed. Edited by Caspar Whitney and published in the American Sportsman's Library. Pp. 449. 8vo. Cloth. New York: The Macmillan Company. London: Macmillan & Co., Limited. Per volume, $2.

PRACTICAL ROWING AND THE EFFECTS OF TRAINING. A volume in two parts: "Practical Rowing with Sculls and Sweeps," by Arthur W. Stevens, and "The Effects of Training," by Eugene A. Darling, M. D. Illustrated and indexed. Pp. 169. 12mo. Cloth. Boston: Little, Brown & Co. Per volume, $1.

TWO volumes devoted to rowing and athletics and the work of actual participants in the two forms of exercise are added to the literature of sport by the publication of "Rowing and Track Athletics," by Samuel Crowther, Jr., and Arthur Ruhl, and "Practical Rowing and the Effects of Training," by Arthur W. Stevens and Eugene A. Darling, M. D. Each in its sphere will no doubt serve its useful purpose, though of the two the former seems likely to have much the wider influence and to be the more lasting. The latter volume is handicapped in that its authors employ an unfortunate style that, in treating a subject on which opinions are widely diverse, is so pedantic as to be offensive to those whose views it opposes. In its effort to be a textbook it has in fact become a primer.

"Rowing and Track Athletics" forms an interesting volume, detailing the history of the two sports successively in a manner that avoids the appearance of statistical compilation, and yet contains a mass of such information and portrays the development of each form of athletic activity truly and entertainingly. Samuel Crowther, Jr., the author of that section of the book dealing with rowing, injects something of his personal prejudices, gained while rowing in the University of Pennsylvania crew which came so near winning at Henley, but he does so without being dogmatic, and one may pass over such passages and set them down to honest differences of opinion. Crowther has undoubtedly had sufficient experience in rowing to tell its story effectively, and has been out of it long enough to see the sport in proper perspective.

There is much in his story that will be new and intensely interesting to those who have followed aquatics. There will be some things in the book, where the values of different strokes and methods are estimated, with which many will disagree. There will be none, we venture to say, who follow the sport who will fail to find entertainment in its perusal.

The section of the work devoted to track athletics is if anything better reading than that on rowing. Arthur Ruhl, its author, is also an experienced athlete, who participated personally in the game, though less conspicuously than Crowther. His recitation of the advance of track athletics in this country is both correct and interesting, and his store of personal anecdote well stocked. In a few instances his information errs, but the inaccuracies are immaterial and do not affect the general value of his effort.

The book has doubtless improved through its having been edited by Caspar Whitney, whose association with amateur and college athletics has been sufficiently intimate to enable him correctly to judge its value.

"Practical Rowing" has a much harder field to cover. There can be no such thing as a self-teacher of rowing, and if Arthur W. Stevens has sought to instruct tyros in the game he has attempted the impossible. Demonstration and incessant correction are the only possible means of developing an oarsman, as the arduous training of crews attests. If the work is intended to speak to more advanced followers of the sport it has missed its mark by its labored explanations, which the man who knows the game will dismiss as too obvious to be followed if he agrees with the point made or will discard if they offend his preconceived ideas.

The portion of the book on the effects of training is a tabulation of the results of scientific study that will be interesting to those who care to measure the exact amount of energy expended in their pastimes, or wish to know just the degree that each muscular effort accelerates their circulation. The practical value of the volume as a whole is a matter on which experts may differ.

A Carolina Matron's Verses.

Walker, Evans & Cogswell Company of Charleston, S. C., are bringing out "A Book of Verses," by Mrs. Nanny Miles Durant, a daughter of the late William Porcher Miles.

Putnam's Homemaker Series.

By OLIVE GREEN.

Each, cloth, 16mo, net 90 cents.

1. What to Have for Breakfast.

Contains all that can be said on the subject of the American breakfast. It gives a great number of tried recipes conveniently classified, and 365 appropriate breakfast menus chosen for every day in the year.

"One might conscientiously use a number of enthusiastic adjectives about Olive Green's Guide to the Cheerful Life. It is a small book, but any one who looks it over can find a hundred reasons for owning it, and failing to pnblish it the Board of Home Missions lost an opportunity."—Life, N. Y.

2. Every Day Luncheons.

"Here are 365 menus, one for each day in the year, besides a variety of recipes that have a toothsome aspect in print and have not been found wanting in practice, as we are assured. There are some introductory words on Luncheons, Wise and Foolish, which contain sound philosophy with a quoting of humor. 'People who, from false notions of economy, live upon improper food, are shortly put to the greater expense of a funeral,' says Miss Green. 'It is better to spend the money on porterhouse steak, fresh vegetables, fruits and eggs, than upon wreaths and gates ajar.'"—Pittsburg Gazette.

QUERIES.

To secure attention in this department every communication must be signed with the full name and address of the inquirer, which will not be published unless the inquirer so desires. Trivial questions will not be heeded. Queries will be answered in the order of their receipt, and as the number received weekly is very large, and the pressure upon our columns is always very great, inquirers must always be prepared to await their turn.

R. T. H., New York.—In what order should Fiske's histories be read chronologically?

"The Discovery of America"; "Old Virginia and Her Neighbors"; "The Beginnings of New England"; "The Dutch and Quaker Colonies in America"; "New France and New England"; "The American Revolution"; "The Critical Period of American History."

W. B. MERRILL, New York.—In The South Place Magazine, August, 1905, Page 163, it speaks of "the essays and philosophical subjects of Charles Robert Newman, published with an introduction by G. J. Holyoake." Kindly inform me of the name of the publisher of this work.

We have no idea; Charles Newman died in 1884, and the book probably appeared shortly afterward in England. It was not published in this country.

R. B. K.—Please give me the names of several of the best books on story writing. Also names of schools teaching or giving instruction in newspaper correspondence.

"How to Write a Novel," $1; (publisher out of business.) "How to Write," C. S. Baldwin; Macmillan, 50 cents. "How to Tell Stories for Children," S. C. Bryant, $1; Houghton. Macmillan publishes a little paper book on writing. So far as we know, no school or college has a course in journalism now.

H. E. MILLER, White Plains, N. Y.—Can you give me the titles of any Greek or Roman classics in which appear comments or essays on literary style? Can you tell me where to find essays on literary style by any of the French or German writers? Did not Walter Savage Landor and Thomas De Quincey also write on this subject, likewise Milton and Macaulay?

You would better consult Gayley and Scott's "Introduction to the Methods and Materials of Literary Criticism;" Ginn & Co. $1.40 net.

D. M., Philadelphia.—Is there an English translation of E. and J. de Goncourt's "Histoire Societe Francaise Pendant la Revolution et la Directoire"?

There seems not to be.

C. C. P.—Please publish the words of "The Heart Bowed Down," by Balfe, from "The Bohemian Girl."

We cannot publish it; you will find it at some music store.

W. H. KENT, Brooklyn—Will you kindly tell me in your queries column about a book I have, entitled "An Historical Discourse of the Uniformity of the Government of England, the First Part from the first times till the Reign of Edward the Third. London: Printed for Matthew Walbauck at Gray's Inn Gate, 1647." The title page of the second part, which is bound in with the first, as as follows: "The Continuation of An Historical Discourse of the Government of England, until the end of the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, with a Preface, being a Vindication of the Ancient Way of Parliaments in England. By Nath. Bacon of Grays-Inn, Esquire. London: Printed for Matthew Walbauck and Henry Twyford, and are to be sold at Grays-Inn-Gate, and in Vine-Court, Middle Temple. 1651." Who was Nath. Bacon, and has this book any value?

Nathaniel Bacon (1593-1660) was a nephew of Francis Bacon, Lord St. Albans, generally miscalled Lord Bacon. His "Historical Discourse," a constitutional history of England, was published in 1647; the continuation in 1651; He was a Member of the two Protectorate Parliaments, sitting for Ipswich in Richard Cromwell's Parliament and in the revived Long Parliament. He was Master of Requests to both Protectors, and died in 1660. A new edition of his book appeared in 1665, and was suppressed; another, in 1676, caused the prosecution of the printer, but the edition of 1665 was reissued in 1689 after the revolution, and a fifth edition in 1760. The book has no especial value.

W. J. P., Monroe, N. C.—Can you inform me if the book entitled "Historic Doubts Concerning the Execution of Marshal Ney," by the Rev. J. A. Weston, has ever been reviewed in your columns or in those of any other New York periodical? I have read this interesting book lately and should like to know what the critics think of its statements and arguments concerning the escape of Marshal Ney to the United States.

☞ B. K., B. K., B. K., B. K., B. K., B. K., B. K., B. K., B. K.—What does it mean?

Mr. Weston's book was published in 1895, before THE SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS was started, but it was reviewed in the THE NEW YORK TIMES. Mr. Weston was unfortunate in taking for his title part of Richard Whately's "Historic Doubts Concerning the Existence of Napoleon Bonaparte," which latter book was written to show how easily one might offer circumstantial evidence against Napoleon's ever having lived, Whately's idea being that if one could practically prove the non-existence of Napoleon it was easy to prove the non-existence of Christ. Mr. Weston started handicapped; the records in France were against his theory, and the reviewers of the time pointed out that while his book might be interesting it was wholly inconclusive.

W. EMMERSON, New Rochelle, N. Y.—Can you tell me anything about the Rev. P. A. Sheehan, author of "Luke Delmege," "My New Curate," &c.?

The Rev. Patrick Augustine Sheehan was born in Mallow, County Cork, in 1852; was educated at Fermoy and Maynooth, and after serving as a missionary in England became a curate in Ireland; since 1895 he has been parish priest of Doneraile, and canon of Cloyne since 1903. Pope Leo gave him the degree of D. D. in 1902. His works are: "Geoffrey Austin, Student," "The Triumph of Failure," "My New Curate," "Luke Delmege," "Lost Angel of a Ruined Paradise," "Under the Cedars and the Stars," "Cithara Mea" (poems,) "A Spoiled Priest and Other Stories," "Mariae Corona," "Glenaar."

S. B. DOUGHTY, Englewood, N. J.—1. In an old number of The Century I read an essay by John Burroughs, "August Days." Can you tell me when it was and where I may find it? 2. I should like to know if it is possible still to obtain a copy of Emerson's "Parnassus" without additions and changes other than might have been made by the compiler?

1. It was published in Harper's for August, 1901; we don't know in which one of the naturalist's books it is to be found, or if he has republished it in book form. 2. You might try the recent edition published by Houghton, Mifflin; we doubt if it has been touched by any one since Mr. Emerson died.

F. S., Kansas City, Mo.—Where may I get a book by Mr. Swinburne on William Blake? The volume was published in England some years ago.

Swinburne's "William Blake, a Critical Essay," was published in 1867-68; there were two editions of it in a year, but it seems not to have been reissued since then. Copies of those editions have brought from $5 upward at auction. You will get a copy only by chance.

S., New York.—Are there any anthologies in Latin and German corresponding to Palgrave's "Golden Treasury" and Masson's "La Lyre Française"? In case there are such publications, will you also kindly state the publishers' names and the price?

In Latin there are Postgate's "Corpus Poetarum Latinum" (4 vols.) and Tyrrell's "Anthology of Latin Poetry," both published by Macmillan; in German, Buckheim's "Balladen und Romanzen" and "Deutsche Lyrick" (Macmillan) and many others; you should consult an importer of German books.

A. K., New York.—1. What is the pronunciation of the "i" in the Scotch dialect words licht, michty, sicht, &c.? Is it short, as in sick, or long, as in sight? 2. What is the difference between remorse and repentance?

1. It is long, as in sight. 2. Remorse is simply sorrow; repentance is sorrow and abstention from a repetition.

L. C. H., Brooklyn.—About two years ago I heard some verses recited and the end of each verse was, "If I were king, if I were king." Can you tell me where I may find them?

They are a sort of preface to Justin H. McCarthy's novel "If I Were King," but are not in the novel itself. They may be introduced into the play of the same name, which has been made out of the book.

C. H. D., Meriden, Conn.—Can you tell me who was the author of the following book, "Sayings and Doings at the Tremont House in the Year 1833, Extracted from the Note-book of Costard Sly, Edited by Dr. Zachery Philemon Vangrifter," 2 vols., Boston, Allen & Ticknor. 1833?

The anonymity of the book still exists; it is not broken by Halkett and Laing or by Cushing.

JOHN GILPIN, Newport, R. I.—Can you kindly tell me what became of the great bed at Ware, mentioned in John Gilpin's famous ride, after it was purchased by Charles Dickens in 1864?

The bed is at Rye House, two miles from Ware. It was taken there from the Saracen's Head Inn at Ware.

R. L. F., New York.—Where can I purchase a copy of "London Labor and London Poor," by Henry Mayhew? There are four volumes and supplement.

This was published in London in 1864; it is not now in print, but you may pick up a copy by chance.

E. F. F., New York.—Would you be kind enough to let me know if there is any newspaper in the United States that publishes a book review the same as THE NEW YORK TIMES?

There is not. Other papers have literary supplements, but none is like THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW.

Mrs. S. C. W., Johnson City, Tenn.—Please recommend in your "Queries" column four or five "best books" to read for a small club beginning the study of Shakespeare.

Rolfe's "Friendly Edition" of the plays; the Globe edition for the most correct text; Dowden's "Shakspere Primer" and "Shakspere, His Mind and Art"; Abbott's "Shakespearean Grammar"; Mrs. Clark's "Concordance."

L. E. H., St. Albans, Vt.—Kindly send me a list of moderately priced complete editions of Dickens's works, including miscellaneous writings some times not found in ordinary editions.

Complete editions of Dickens are published by dozens of publishers—Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Doubleday, Page & Co., Charles Scribner's Sons, Thomas Nelson & Sons, J. B. Lippincott Company—at various prices.

G. W., Salisbury, Conn.—Who wrote the poem, beginning, "Out of the night that covers me," and ending: "I am the Captain of my soul"?

William Edward Henley; the poem is "Invictus."

R. E. D.—Will you kindly inform me of some good and practical book on household medicine, how to prepare and compound remedies, &c.?

There is no such book published. Ask your family physician what book he recommends.

G. W. L., Boston—What is the proper form of address to the Woman's Educational and Industrial Union? Can you refer me to an authority?

"Mesdames," we should say. In addressing a body of men you would say "Gentlemen," not "Dear Sirs"; therefore "Mesdames" instead of "Dear Mesdames" or "Dear Madame." We know of no authority on the matter.

M. C. P., Baring Cross, Ark.—Can you give me the stanza in which this line occurs: "And Helen's lips are drifting dust," and tell me the name of the author?

This is a line from some translation of François Villon's famous "Ou sont les neiges d'antan." We do not identify the translator.

H. S. APPLEBY, Bath Beach, N. Y.—Please tell me if there was a book published with the title "Vaughan's Hours with the Mystics"? Is it still in print and where can I obtain a copy?

The book was published in England in 1856, 1860, and 1893. It was by Robert Alfred Vaughan, 1823-1857. Scribner's published an edition in 1893, and Gibbings & Co. of London an edition which they call the seventh.

OLD BOOTHOOK.—I do not know Rudolph Fitzpatrick, and cannot recall his father even by name, but must attest the accuracy of his statement, having had my own youthful ears (now dull enough) thrilled by those selfsame songs of Henry Russell. Mr. Fitzpatrick omits my favorite, "Set every stitch of canvas, boys," which made the old Cook Street Theatre (I think it was) vibrate with the swelling excitement of the "slave chase," although the concluding lines:

"And run aloft Saint George's Cross; all wanton let it wave,
The token proud that under it there never treads a slave,"

must be received "cum grano salis," being about as true as they would be of our own Stars and Stripes to-day.

The reproduction in "Dakota" twenty years later must be set down to that "unconscious celebration" whereof we have often read, and which certainly does "come in well" at times.

G. R. T., New York—In Miss Alcott's "Under the Lilacs" is a song much like that for which J. Farquhar, York, Penn., asks. I do not know if it was original with her.

INQUIRER, Norwalk, Conn.—Can you tell me the title of a child's book containing six or seven short stories, only two of which I remember—"Baby's Blue Shoes" and "Christmas Candles"? I read it about forty years ago.

G. W. H., Jersey City, N. J.—Can you give me the first stanza of a little poem published about fifty years ago, also its author, the second verse running thus:

"But Charlie replied, 'My dear friend,
You must know I've sworn and agreed
That my books I never will lend,
But you may sit by my fire and read'"?

New Art Books—Novels by New Writers — Automobile Books—Notes.

THE Scribners are importing a couple of volumes which will appeal to widely separated classes of readers. The first is Frederick Wedmore's "Whistler and Others," especially noteworthy for the essay which gives the volume its title. Other subjects included are papers on Venetian painting, print collecting, and Constable. A rare opportunity for lovers of Charles Lever, whose interest in his Irish stories goes hand in hand with curiosity to know the writer, is offered by "Charles Lever: His Life and His Letters." The epistles were chiefly written during the period of Lever's greatest literary activity, and most of them are addressed to Alexander Spencer and to Lever's publishers, the Blackwoods. All are thoroughly characteristic, brimming with rare wit, and showing the real character of the writer better than any objective biography has revealed it.

The American edition of Fogazzaro's romance, "Il Santo," already announced by the Putnams, will have an introduction by William R. Thayer. The story is also being translated into French, Spanish and German.

The forthcoming volume of Maeterlinck's plays, which will include "Joyzelle" and "Monna Vanna," is the only authorized English translation of the Belgian dramatist's work. Its publication has been postponed until the Fall by Dodd, Mead & Co.

Vol. VIII. of the large paper edition of Maurice Hewlett contains "The Fool Errant"; the Macmillan Company issues it this week. It will be followed early next month by Vol. IX., "Pan and the Young Shepherd," and in June the publishers expect to finish the publication of the set.

Little, Brown & Co. of Boston have just added to their list three of E. Phillips Oppenheim's novels formerly published by Dodd, Mead & Co. of this city—"The Traitors," "The Yellow Crayon," and "The Betrayal"—which, together with this author's "A Millionaire of Yesterday" and "The Man and His Kingdom," will shortly appear in new editions.

Prof. Forest Ray Moulton's "Introduction to Astronomy" will be brought out immediately by the Macmillan Company.

"Winged Wheels in France" is the title of the volume by Michael Myers Shoemaker, which the Putnams have down for early issue. This is the record of a motor-car trip through the Rhine Valley to Switzerland. It is illustrated with sixty pictures taken by the author, who will be remembered by his "Heart of the Orient," "Islands of the Southern Seas," "Prisons and Palaces of Mary Queen of Scots," &c.

The Macmillan Company will send out "The Sin of George Warrener," by Miss Marie Van Vorst, the talented "cosmopolitan" author of "Miss Desmond," &c., in May. The new story presents a study of life and manners in a suburban town, dealing with tempted virtue, fall, and sin.

Two new novels are announced for this season by the John C. Winston Company of Philadelphia. One is "Sim Greene," a story of the Whisky Rebellion, the scenes laid in Western Pennsylvania, by Richard T. Wiley; the other is "Deacon Babbitt," by Edgar G. Blankman, described as "a tale of fact and fiction," being the story of a young Dutchman who becomes separated from his family in Holland by the bursting of dykes.

The Fleming H. Revell Company is bringing out "The Forgotten Secret," by Dr. W. J. Dawson, which is an appeal for the reinstatement of the service and use of prayer as a practical part of life, and "Raising the Average," by Don O. Shelton, the story of a man who is "above" instead of "as good as the average."

"The Story of Brussels," by Ernest Gilliat-Smith, is the latest volume in the Mediaeval Town Series, which the Macmillan Company publishes. The book is illustrated with drawings by Katharine Kimball and Guy Gilliat-Smith, and has for frontispiece a photogravure reproduction of the portrait of the physician, George Zelle, painted by Bernard van Orley in 1510. Not only are the customs, manners, and life of the people of mediaeval Brussels described, but the painters and authors are also considered.

The Winston Company of Philadelphia has in press two new volumes by C. H. Forbes-Lindsay, which will be included in the Photogravure Illustrated Series, in which this writer's "India: Past and Present," appeared a year or two ago. The new books are: "The Philippines: Under Spanish and American Rules" and "America's Insular Possessions." The first provides an account of the history and development of the Pacific Islands since their discovery; the second takes up the Philippines, Porto Rico, Hawaii, and Guam, and also includes chapters on Panama, Cuba, Haiti, and Jamaica. Both volumes have been profusely illustrated with photogravures and maps.

The Frederick A. Stokes Company is bringing out "Alton of Somasco," by Harold Bindloss. This is a romance of the Great Northwest. In it the heroine unwillingly crosses the path of the hero, Henry Alton of Somasco Ranch, and thus finds her aristocratic standards of honor put to shame by the nice code of the rancher. The book is illustrated by R. Martine Reay.

The John C. Winston Company of Philadelphia will shortly issue from the International Press a volume of 450 pictures of "American Country Homes and Their Gardens," edited by John Cordis Baker, with an introduction by Donn Barber. The illustrations, which were selected from some 4,000 photographs and drawings, will present views of gardens and interiors of some of the handsomest homes in the United States.

The Macmillan Company is bringing out a catalogue of the etchings of William Strang, the well-known English painter, wood engraver, and etcher, who has lately won "enlarged fame and success" by his series of portraits. The volume contains reproductions of 471 examples of Mr. Strang's work, the whole introduced by an essay by Laurence Binyon.

From Doubleday, Page & Co. comes the report that Upton Sinclair's Chicago stockyards novel, "The Jungle," has been translated into "Yiddish," German, Dutch, Bohemian, and French.

The Frederick A. Stokes Company publishes this week a romance of to-day, "Huntington, Jr.," by Edward Clary Root. This is the story of a man who fights his battles alone and wins in the end by sheer force of personality, somewhat after the new type of "independent reformer" who is just now such a striking figure in American politics. The book has been illustrated.

"The English Voyages of the Sixteenth Century," by Prof. Walter Raleigh of the University of Oxford, England, is appearing here through the Macmillan Company. The book, which first appeared in the edition of "Hakluyt's Voyages" published last April, and has now been revised, contains chapters on the voyagers, Hakluyt, and "The Influence of the Voyages on Poetry and Imagination."

In a few days The Century Company will bring out "The Soul of the People." The material for the book was originally prepared by William M. Ivins, the recent candidate for Mayor of this city. It is described as an optimistic summary of the American people, their duties, and their possibilities.

The Frederick A. Stokes Company announces the immediate issue of the "Automobile Dictionary" in three languages—German, English, and French—by Sigmund Krausz. Besides the large number of technical terms and other words employed in connection with automobiles and motoring, other expressions in general use have been included.

Washington's "Farewell Address" and Webster's "Bunker Hill Oration" have been gathered into one small volume by William T. Peck, and added to the Pocket Classics series bearing the imprint of the Macmillan Company. The handy little book is supplied with introductions, brief biographies, and many notes.

Next Saturday Doubleday, Page & Co. will finally bring out "How to Buy Life Insurance," the long-delayed book by "Q. P." The volume is the first to treat of the policy as an article of merchandise, and it has been written in a popular manner. The chapters, it may be remembered, appeared in The World's Work.

The forthcoming issue of The World's Work will have a series of articles on "Selling Diseased Meat." A paper on "A Picture of Meat Inspection" has been prepared by Dr. W. K. Jaques; "The Failure of Government Inspection" is to be considered by Thomas H. McKee, a New York attorney, and the third article in the group is on "The Healthfulness of Packingtown," by Dr. Caroline Hedger, who lives at the University Settlement in Packingtown, Chicago. An important contribution to the same issue will come from Mrs. Hugh Fraser, the well-known novelist and sister of F. Marion Crawford. The article will present the first real intimate study of the Mikado, and Mrs. Fraser will describe his characteristics, working habits, &c., and include anecdotes of his private life.

A ninth edition, revised and illustrated, is being published by the Macmillan Company of the late Dr. A. M. Marshall's "The Frog: An Introduction to Anatomy, Histology, and Embryology," edited by F. W. Gamble.

"Humaniculture," by Dr. Hubert Higgins, formerly of the University of Cambridge, England, is about to appear through the Frederick A. Stokes Company. It presents the results of the author's investigations and experiments in "Fletcherism." The book has been written for the layman as well as the professional.

The Right Price
For Coal

You pay only 10 to 20 per cent too much for coal except in strike times. And yet that extra 50 cents or $1 has added $400,000,000 to the value of the coal-carrying railroads in seven years—to say nothing of the millions it has put into the pockets of the few.

But when a strike comes! Oh, that's different! One hundred million dollars more for each strike—and the people pay it.

PAGES IN WAITING.

E. A. ARMSTRONG has provided characteristic examples of the work of the eminent Swedish painter, etcher, and draughtsman, well known for his designs of French, English, Italian, and Spanish churches, Axel Herman Haig, and described them, besides giving a full sketch of the career of the artist, in the large, handsome volume on "Axel Herman Haig and His Work," which E. P. Dutton & Co. are to publish in this country for the Fine Art Society of London.

Axel Herman Haig. Mr. Haig, or Hägg as his patronymic is spelled in its native form, was born at Katthamra, in the Swedish Island of Gotland, where he now spends much of his time. He began with the designing of ships, and when a very young man went to London for employment, and while designing vessels he also took up the drawing of buildings and portraits. His work immediately drew attention, and very soon he was asked by his employer at that time, Lawrence Hill, to design a house for him. The Hill family lived in the dwelling for many years, but, although still standing, Mr. Haig refuses to reveal its identity. Thus began the artist's career as an architect in the ordinary sense of the word, and his first position was with a firm of ecclesiastical architects. Mr. Haig's early travels are then dealt with, after which comes a chapter on his work in etching, another on the production of "The Vesper Bell," the first important work, and so on down to the present time.

Those who have the privilege of visiting him at his home at Haslemere will find him living in a picturesque, red-brick house on the brow of a hill overlooking as lovely a panorama of English country as any one could wish to see. He has been his own architect, and reaps the benefit in a residence thoroughly suited to his purpose.

Mr. Haig is an enthusiastic admirer of the good work of others, and his house is literally full of pictures, so that in some of the rooms, says Mr. Armstrong, the color of the wallpaper is hardly discernible. The illustrations in the present volume, forty-six in number, are some beautiful reproductions of etchings, water colors, and pencil drawings done by Mr. Haig and which formed the exhibition of the life work of the artist at the Fine Art Society.

Mrs. Stevenson's New Samoan Letters. The epistles in the new volume by Mrs. Margaret Isabelle Stevenson, "Letters from Samoa, 1891-1895," which the Scribners are bringing out, were all written to one person, a relative. They contain descriptions of objects seen and people met with by the writer on her way to Samoa and during her stay there until the death of her famous son. The writer's affectionate bits about "R. L. S." and the home life at Vailima are written unconsciously, and reveal the mother's heart. Many stories are told of the Samoans and their affection for Tusitala. One that is probably not "brand new" to some admirers of R. L. S., is the following, as Mrs. Stevenson wrote it to her relative in England:

> One last story of Vailima before the close. As the F—s had been again forced to take refuge with us, Lou and Fanny moved into the new house to make room, so that it is occupied, if not finished, before my departure—quicker work than we had dared to hope for. Sosimo was helping with the fitting, and when the work was over Louis sat down to rest and sighed for a cigarette, without feeling sufficiently energetic either to go or send for tobacco. At that very moment Sosimo appeared with all that Louis had just been longing for. "Quel e le potu," said Louis, gratefully—How great is the wisdom! And he was deeply touched with the quick reply, "How great is the love!"

The forthcoming volume will make interesting reading, not only because it is from the pen of Stevenson's mother and was written while she was so closely associated with her son, but also because Mrs. Stevenson's letters have been well written and contain interesting bits of hitherto unpublished information.

⁂

Enlightening the Middle East. A comparative survey of the various innovations and reforms introduced by Russia and England in Mohammedan Asia is given in the book on "Western Culture in Eastern Lands," the latest from the pen of Dr. Arminius Vambéry, C. V. O., of Budapest University, author of "Travels in Central Asia," "History of Bokhara," &c., which is about to be issued by E. P. Dutton & Co. The work is the outcome, the author explains in his preface, of a close investigation of what has been done by the two "culture-bearers."

It has been divided into three parts—the influence of Russia, what England has done, and "The Future of Islam." He says in summing up:

> The view that Russia will be better qualified than England to civilize Asia is altogether false. A politically free nation, occupying a higher cultural level, has more active measures at its disposal, has more strength and perseverance, and has nobler ends in view, than a nation which has scarcely emerged from infancy, which is as yet in the first period of cultural transition, and which, moreover, held fast in the bonds of a despotic, absolute monarchy, has been unable to acquire the knowledge necessary for cultural activity.

The fact that he gives the preference to England, the author writes, should not cause critics to accuse him of partiality, for England "unquestionably" occupies the higher "cultural" position of the two powers in question. The portion of the volume devoted to Islam is founded "not on vain speculations, but on conclusions drawn from concrete facts," and Dr. Vambéry attempts to throw some light upon the position taken up by the Muhammedans themselves.

The Talbot J. Taylor Collection. Apropos of the inventories now being taken of Church properties by the French Government agents, it has been authoritatively intimated, that many of the art treasures of the Church, in anticipation of the separation law, had been surreptitiously removed and would ultimately find their way into foreign collections.

Talbot J. Taylor, during his recent visit abroad, was so fortunate as to obtain many fine specimens of ecclesiastical art. These and other objects showing the expression of decorative arts in furniture, wood carvings, &c., have been made the subject of a book shortly to be published by the Putnams with the title, "The Talbot J. Taylor Collection: Furniture, Wood Carving, and Other Branches of the Decorative Arts."

The volume is a running commentary upon the various articles which are now at Mr. Taylor's country house at Cedarhurst, L. I. It will be presented in handsome form, and will include 187 illustrations.

⁂

Wealth and Happiness. Adam Smith, in his "Wealth of Nations," transferred the foundation of economics from money to wealth. A new work, which Little, Brown & Co. announce for May publication, seeks to transfer economics from wealth to happiness, and so, James MacKaye, in his "Economy of Happiness," makes ethics the foundation of public polity. To accomplish this transfer, he proposes to make politics a branch of technology by the practice of which happiness rather than wealth "shall be manufactured with maximum economy; to apply the methods of science directly to the production of happiness, whereby the same increase in the output of that supreme desideratum shall be accomplished which the application of similar methods has accomplished in the output of steel rails, cotton cloth, and other forms of wealth, and in the efficiency of the railroad, the telegraph, and the telephone."

The volume has been divided into three parts. In Book I. the "Principles of Common Sense" are discussed, "The Technology of Happiness (Theoretical)" is examined in the second division, while "The Technology of Happiness (Applied)" is treated of in the third part. Thus, in the three sections of his work, Mr. MacKaye deals, respectively, with the logical and ethical foundations of the subject, the conditions fixed by nature which must be met in order to insure happiness, and the principal modes which have been proposed for directing the conduct of society.

Browning the Mystic. In his volume of St. Margaret's Lectures for 1905, "Studies of English Mystics," which E. P. Dutton & Co. are bringing out, Dr. William Ralph Inge, author of "Christian Mysticism," discusses the "Psychology of Mysticism," "The 'Ancien Riwle' and Julian of Norwich," "Walter Hylton," "William Law," Wordsworth, and Browning. Of the last named Dr. Inge writes:

> Browning loved and studied not mankind, but men. He is therefore complimentary to Wordsworth; he might be called the Wordsworth of human nature. We may rightly call him a mystic, in virtue of his profound belief in a perfect spiritual world, in which all broken fragments are made whole, all riddles solved, and all legitimate hopes satisfied. A strong hunger for eternity and perfection, combined with close and reverent handling of the facts of life, a tenacious grip of the concrete finite example, with a determination to make it illustrate and be illustrated by, its ideal and spiritual principle—this is the method of the true mystic, and in all that concerns human character it is the method of Browning.

A Stirring Novel

Love and adventure in the early days of the Great Southwest are here entrancingly woven about the career of a dashing scion of an old Eastern family. Indian fighting, daring deeds of cowboy life, a search for buried treasure, and rare touches of humor make, together with a pretty love interest, one of the most fascinating books Mr. Lewis has ever written.

THE MECHANIC

A Romance of Steel and Oil.

The pen of the novelist takes the reader into the realms of the unknown, but the mind of the inventor spans a generation in a single night, and the stories of Jules Verne have been discounted by wireless telegraphy. Nevertheless John Worth, the mechanic, discovers and patents a process for making fibrous steel, and the story of his early struggles and final achievements, as told by Mr. McIvor, makes a book that will be read with absorbing interest throughout the country. It deals with living characters, with the love of a strong man for a brilliant woman, with the system of money getting as practiced nowadays, and it emphasizes the value of honest business principles.

THE HOME OF THE COUNTRY GENTLEMAN

¶ Would you prefer to purchase a homesite in the centre of a beautiful borough peopled by aristocrats, to buying a crude "lot" in a houseless territory being "boomed" by land speculators?

¶ MAYWOOD is composed of splendid country estates—a magnificent park. Its residents are the sort of "nice people" you like best to meet; exclusive, yet democratic. Motoring, golfing, boating, tennis, riding, driving—the life of the country club is the keynote of Maywood.

¶ MAYWOOD is to-day but thirty minutes from New York City, the commutation but a trifle; 40 trains a day. It is as quickly reachable as Harlem, and upon the completion of the North River tunnels will be but fifteen minutes from the business and shopping centres of Manhattan. Three trolley lines afford a 40-minute service to Manhattan—a delightful ride. Its water is absolutely pure, gas and electric service cheap.

¶ Our lo s on Maywood Heights are in the very centre of the borough, immediately adjoining the School and Borough Hall. Each lot fronts on a wide, macadamized street, with stone and cement sidewalks. They are offered at prices from $175 to $500; prices no higher than those asked by other companies for lots in a barren wilderness, where the entire development depends on the sale of the property.¶

By PAUL PIPER

XVI. THE BEARS ARRIVE IN NEW YORK

The storm that raged on the bay that night
Blew the Roosevelt Bears clear out of sight.
They were now alone on the open sea;
No land nor ship; no house nor tree.

They were expected back some friends to meet
At a big hotel on Boylston Street;
With them to dine and to a playhouse go
To spend the evening and see a show.
But the night was spent on the ocean blue,
In the wildest storm, in a small canoe,
With paddles lost, like a shipwrecked crew.
'Twas dark as pitch; so scared were they
That neither spoke till break of day.

When the sun was up TEDDY—G said he Would like those eggs, about forty-three,
That he sold to the women on the square,
Boiled hard or fried; he didn't care;
Or if eggs were scarce he thought a dish
Of griddled whale or some other fish
Of the larger size would fix him right,
And cure a weakness of his appetite.

"My doctor said," spoke TEDDY—B,
"That an ocean voyage would be good for me,
But a trip like this without things to eat
Is just a little incomplete."
The air was warm and the ocean wide,
And there wasn't a thing on any side
But the boundless sea and a sky of blue
With the central spot their frail canoe.

TEDDY—G was wishing for a feast,
If he couldn't eat, he could drink, at least;
He scooped up water from the sea
And took good swallows, two or three,
When TEDDY—B stopped him up quick,
And said sea-water would make him sick
"You ought to know," said TEDDY—B,
"That all this water in the sea
Was mixed with salt to make it keep,
And to preserve the fish in the briny deep
But TEDDY—G was too sick to speak,
And mumbled something like "mountain creek,"
And "home again" and "railroad ride."
And wished he was back on the mountain side.

At noon that day there came in sight
A tower of ice all glistening white.
"An iceberg that," said TEDDY—B,
"Let us hoist our sail and go and see."
The sail went up; the wind was fair;
In a little while their boat was there;
Close to the berg like a mountain high
With its fifty spires up to the sky.
On a floor of ice at its farthest side
Was a polar bear having an ocean ride,
As they sailed around to a landing place
The Roosevelt Bears came face to face
With the biggest brother they ever saw
And white as snow from nose to paw

"Ship ahoy!" called out the polar bear,
"What port are you making and what's the fare?"
"We're coming aboard," said TEDDY—G,
"To get some dinner and then we'll see;
If your ship is safe we'll pay your rates
To take us back to the United States."

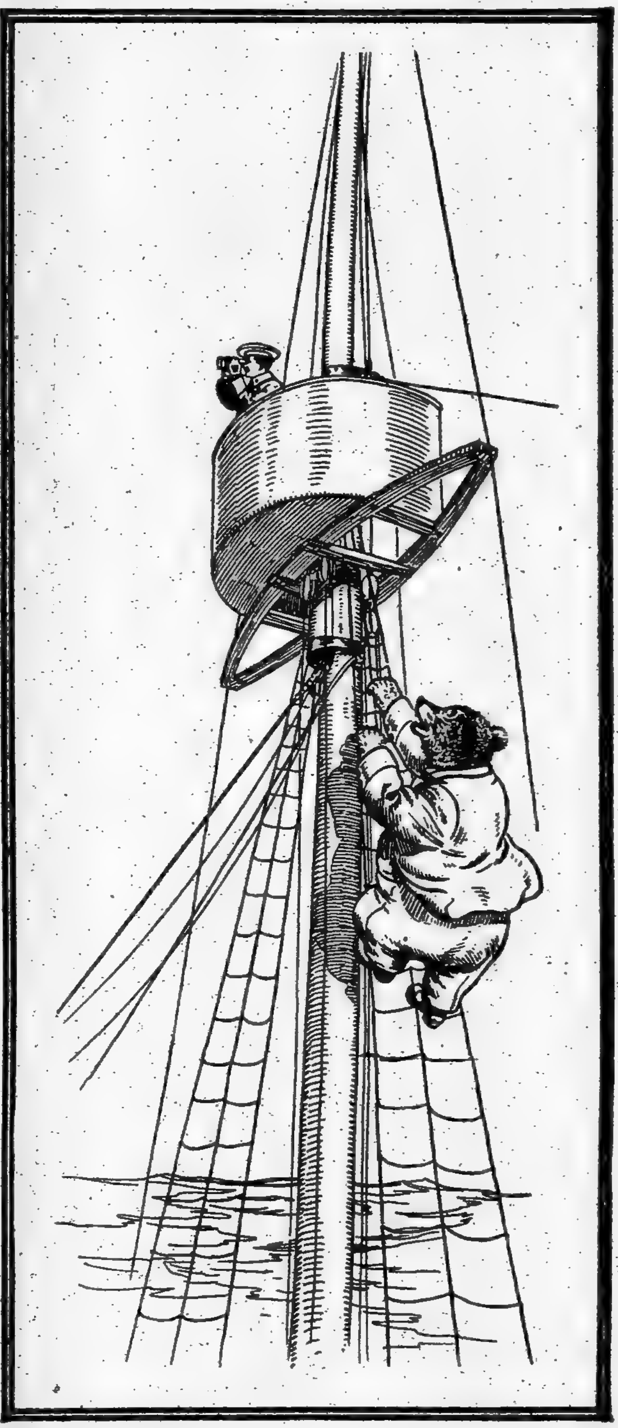
The two Bears found a home quite nice;
A grotto cave and a lawn of ice;
With seal-skin rugs and an ice-chest seat,
And walrus liver and fish to eat.
TEDDY—B put a match to a pile of wood,
And made a fire and cooked the food,
While the polar-bear told TEDDY—G
About the Eskimos and the northern sea,
And the six months' day and an equal night,
And the sky lit up with electric light,
And the northern pole and its size and height,
And the flag that floated there night and day
The stars and stripes of the U. S. A.,
While TEDDY—G told the polar bear
Of the United States and the cities there;
Of Chicago's streets and buildings tall,
And Niagara River and its waterfall;
Of Boston Common with its famous trees,
And Harvard College where they grant degrees;
Of the auto ride and their harbor sail,
And the night they both were locked in jail
And thus they told of things they knew
While TEDDY—B made a walrus stew.

The dinner's ready," said TEDDY—B,
"I've cooked three times enough for three,
And one meal extra for TEDDY—G."
And down they sat the hungriest bunch
That ever ate an iceberg lunch
They spent that night with the polar bear;
They enjoyed the ice and the ocean air;
They were off for fun and they didn't care
How far they sailed, which way or where.
At breakfast time the following day,
A ship was seen a mile away.
Said TEDDY—G, "Our ship's too cool;

And bring on board this ice-bound crew
Who seemed starved to death and frozen through.

"We're the Roosevelt Bears," said TEDDY—B,
"A Boston storm blew us out to sea.
"Take us on board and we'll pay the fare
From here to New York or anywhere."
The polar bear said he'd like to stay
On Canadian ice for another doy.
"On British soil I was born and bred,
And prefer to stay right here," he said.
"I'll keep your boat, this small canoe;
If my ice gives out, 'twill help me through."

When the sailors signalled word by word
That the Roosevelt Bears were coming on board,
The stars and stripes was hoisted high,
And pennants floated in the sky,
And the crowds on deck with joy hurrahed
As "Yankee Doodle" the brass band played.



They walked the ship from bow to stern.
And shook hands with children at every turn.
They saw the engines and furnace fires,
And the dynamos and electric wires,
And the halls and gangways and big saloon
Where they would lunch that day at noon.

To the look-out aloft went TEDDY—G
On a ladder of rope to the top to see
If land were near and the ships about,
And to call "all's well" when the bells rang out.
TEDDY—B took a turn at the wheel awhile,
And steered the ship for half a mile,
A wireless message was sent on shore
To say that the Bears were found once more,
And to order their baggage without delay
To the New York hotel where they meant to stay.
At a concert given on the ship that night,
TEDDY-B made a speech that was out of sight,
While TEDDY—G in his usual way
Made children happy with dance and play.

Reporters met them at Sandy Hook.
And asked them questions and pictures took.

SAN FRANCISCO'S PEOPLE FED; FEDERAL AUTHORITIES RULE

Food in Plenty Reaches the City; Order is Being Restored.

CIVIL AND MILITARY CLASH AVERTED BY A CONFERENCE

Fire Almost Out and the Ferry House Is Safe—Forty Bodies Found In One House—Meals Cooked In The Streets—Houses and Vehicles Seized By the Authorities.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 21.—Order and system are gradually being wrought out of the indescribable confusion which has prevailed in this city for the last three days.

The hungry thousands are being plentifully fed, wherever they are camped, and the fortunate householders who were not driven from their homes are procuring food at the various relief stations established throughout the unburned district.

Water in sufficient quantities to meet all the immediate and pressing needs of the people can be had. Sanitary measures are pushed with vigor everywhere. Sewers are being repaired, and the thousands of people camped on open spaces and in the parks are being organized into model camps by the military authorities.

Temporary buildings are being erected in the parks to shelter women and children, and all the churches, educational institutions, vacant houses, and the houses whch have been deserted by their occupants, to-night hold thousands of the homeless.

All those who desire to leave the city are being provided with transportation to any point in California free of charge. No one is permitted to enter the city who cannot show satisfactory excuse for being here.

The sick and injured are being cared for at the General Hospital in the Presidio and at various other hospitals as well as emergency hospitals established by the Red Cross Society at several widely separated points.

Harmony Conference Held.

Gen. Funston, Mayor Schmitz, and Gov. Pardee met in conference at Gen. Funston's headquarters at Fort Mason to-day and had a thorough understanding as to the relief measures and the policing of the city. It was decided to divide the city into three districts, one under the Federal troops, one under the State troops, and the other under the police. A plan of coöperation between the military and civil authorities was formulated, and all future conflicts of orders or confusion of authority will be obviated.

The supplies brought into the city from interior points will be stored at Oakland Mole under Major Duval of Gen. Funston's staff, who will forward the same by boat to the various water front stations, whence they will be distributed under the direction of Gen. Funston and his staff.

The bankers of San Francisco met this afternoon to discuss the financial situation. The question of opening the vaults of the wrecked financial institutions was thoroughly canvassed, and it was the sense of the meeting that a limit of thirty days be made for the resumption of business.

Military Rule Is Relaxed.

The stringent military rule of the past few days has been modified almost to the extent of permitting citizens to come and go at their pleasure. There will be no relaxation of the rigid police measures, however, and the entire city was patrolled to-night in a thorough and systematic manner. No disorder has been reported.

Rolla V. Watt, manager of the Royal and Queen Insurance Companies, and entire city by physicians. For this emergency the Board of Health has called for 500 volunteers.

A son of T. P. Riordan, a real estate dealer, was shot and killed to-day a few feet from his residence. He was on his way home, and had a bottle of whisky in his coat pocket. The soldier on duty ordered him to stop and throw the whisky away, and when Riordan refused the soldier shot him.

A workman employed at the Gerson tannery was on his way home this morning when halted by a sentry. He explained that his wife was dying, and tried to pass. The sentry shot at him, but missed, and the workman ran back to the tannery.

Fires Are Almost Out.

Late this afternoon a journey along the northern water front of the city showed fires blazing in only two places, and these were hardly capable of spreading unless a severe gale should spring up. It is believed that unless the smouldering embers are again fanned to a blaze the water front is safe.

The walls of several ruined buildings in the downtown section collapsed to-day, but so far as can be learned no one was injured by the falling stone, brick, and steel. The tower on the Hall of Justice on Kearney Street still retains its upright position despite the fact that only one small corner of the structure bears the immense weight of steel and granite. One of the walls of the Mercantile Library Building fell across Golden Gate Avenue during one of the busiest periods of the day, but a grinding noise before the fall warned pedestrians.

In the last three days thirty-two Chinese and whites have been buried in Portsmouth Square. Few of the bodies were identified, most of them being burned beyond recognition. Squads searching for bodies met with some success to-day. In one ruin forty bodies were recovered, and on one side of Nob Hill five charred bodies were found.

Until this afternoon there had been considerable friction between the civil authorities, headed by Mayor Schmitz, and the military authorities, headed by Gen. Funston, due to separate police arrangements, but to-night the two systems are running together smoothly.

Conflicts of Authority Arise.

Since martial law was put in force there had been considerable confusion arising from conflicting orders between the two authorities. Each acted independently, and for a while to-day there was talk among citizens of requesting the President to proclaim absolute military rule, placing the entire situation in the hands of Gen. Funston. This, it was argued, would simplify matters.

Dissatisfaction was expressed at the conduct of many of the soldiers. Many of them doing guard and patrol duty are mere boys wrought up to a high pitch of excitement. They have been shooting at pedestrians under circumstances where milder measures would have been effective.

As a consequence Chief of Police Dinan asked the military authorities to withdraw many of the companies from the city. His recommendation was intended to cover especially the withdrawal of the University of California cadets and other militia bodies authorities. The distance was so great and the needs of the people so urgent that frequently there was no time for consultation between them as to the proper measures to be adopted for relief.

When Mayor Schmitz and Gen. Funston coöperated, however, in the establishment of a military district with the military headquarters at Park Lodge, engineer, sanitary, and signal corps officers were detailed to take charge of various departments.

The fire this morning at 7 o'clock was burning grain sheds on the water front about half a mile north of the ferry station, but was confined to a comparatively small area. The work of fireboats on the bay and the firemen on shore, who are using salt water pumped from the bay, it is believed will prevent the fire from reaching the ferry building and the docks in that immediate vicinity.

On the north beach the fire did not reach that part of the water front lying west of the foot of Powell Street. The fire on the water front was the only one burning. The entire western addition of the city lying west of Van Ness Avenue was safe. The flames north of the ferry were under control at 8:30. They had burned as far south as the Lombard Street dock, where they were checked by the firemen and soldiers under Gen. Caster.

A reporter who skirted the water front in a tug says that everything except four docks was swept clean from Fisherman's Wharf, at the foot of Powell Street, to a point around westerly almost to the ferry building. This means that nearly a mile of grain sheds, docks, and wharves was added to the general destruction.

Much of the vigilance of the military authorities last night was devoted to the enforcement of the orders of the Mayor that no fires should be built in any buildings until after chimneys had been duly inspected and that no lights should be lighted in any houses.

Lights in Houses Forbidden.

In many cases persons who had fled from their homes in fear of the advance of the fire returned last evening and again took possession. Some of these at nightfal lighted lamps. Others attempted to make fires. In almost every case citizens interposed, and when they could not make the Mayor's order effective the military was called in.

In many cases persons built fires in the streets in order to cook food. But as the wind was blowing high these fires were forbidden and citizens and the military quickly had them put out.

Mayor Schmitz in a proclamation issued last night made it evident that the military regulations would still be enforced, for he said:

"You are particularly requested not to enter any business house or dwelling except your own, as you may be mistaken for one of the looters and shot on sight, as the orders are not to arrest but to shoot down any one caught stealing."

Soldiers patroled the streets, and no citizen was allowed to pass from one block to the other except by written permission of the Chief of Police.

Cooked Breakfast in Streets.

With the morning, the wind having abated, the regulations were relaxed and many persons breakfasted on food cooked in the open streets. A few bricks or stones gathered into a semblance of a furnace, with a few dry sticks beneath cans or kettles were the improvised kitchen in which the food of the millionaire as well as the humblest workman was prepared.

All through the fine residence section of Pacific Heights people sat on the sidewalks and took their black coffee, dry bread, crackers, and in some cases bacon and eggs. At the fires before some of the finest houses were many men and women, apparently wealthy, who had nothing to eat. These were supplied by neighbors in better circumstances.

Few Permitted to Go Hungry.

In the parks and along the north beach, or wherever people were camped, the relief stations handed out food sufficient to relieve the situation. There were probably very few persons who did not receive some sort of food.

ties amply sufficient to satisfy the hungry for the time being.

Thousands of tons of provisions were brought over the bay in the night and sent to the various distributing stations in drays and automobiles.

With the break of day steamers from Oakland, Alameda, Vallejo, and other points through which the railroads have means of communication with San Francisco began to arrive with cargoes of supplies at various points along the water front from the Petrero to the Presidio.

These supplies were in sufficient quantities to eliminate at once all idea that there would be any suffering from lack of food, provided that means could be had to get it to the people.

For this purpose the subcommittee on relief of the general committee established nine general food depots throughout the city. At each of the points to-day loads of provisions were stored and distributed as fast as the hordes of applicants could be served.

The districting of the city in accordance with the directions of the Mayor was undertaken by the relief committee early in the morning, and by noon was well under way. When this has been perfected those people of San Francisco who from one motive or another have refrained from making their wants known at the public headquarters will be reached and succored.

The largest open camp in the city lies opposite Fort Mason. It extends from Larkin Street to the Presidio and from Filbert Street to the bay. This space to-day contained 10,000 persons, all living in tents or similar shelters.

These are for the most part among the poorest people of the city. Nearly half of them are Italians.

It is stated that no deaths have occurred there during the last twenty-four hours and that sickness is confined principally to babies and old people. The entire area is exposed directly to a fresh breeze from the ocean.

At Golden Gate Park, where are camped probably the greatest number of refugees in the city, conditions were improved to-day. No estimate of the number of people in the park can be made at this time, but some sort of a canvass is being made by the military authorities to ascertain the approximate number of people as well as to relieve all the individual cases of suffering and to improve the sanitary conditions.

The food situation is not serious. There was plenty of food of the simplest sort, of course, provided for every one in the bread line. Major F. H. Keesling, of the First Battalion of the Coast Artillery, N. G. C., is in command of the military relief measures in the park. His headquarters have been established at the tennis courts. Here supplies of sugar, coffee, bread, and canned goods were distributed, and at another point some prepared meats were given out.

Army tents, as many as could be obtained, were set up everywhere, and other protections were made of blankets, rugs, carpets, bed clothes, and every other sort of materal that could be used for the purpose. In some places refugees had cleared out places beneath the thick shrubbery and the semi-tropical plants for which the park is famous, and under these found some sort of natural protection from the chilly night air.

Little Sickness Among Refugees.

As yet there has been little sickness aside from nervous shock and physical exhaustion, and from these most of the people have recovered. The efforts of the military authorities to-day were al lin the direction of improving the sanitary conditions and providing safeguards against any possible epidemic that may result from the exposed situation of so many thousands of people. All refuse must be deposited in trenches dug for that purpose, and the park has been divided into various sanitary districts over which military officers have command.

Information bureaus have been established and telephone service is being provided by the Signal Corps of the regular army. At the entrance of the park known as the Pan-Handle district, an enormous billboard has been erected and is being used as a Directory by those who wish to designate their location in the camp for the benefit of friends.

All vehicles that enter the park are confiscated by the military authorities and are being used to deliver supplies to the various points as well as to remove refugees desiring to reach points beyond the jurisdiction of the authorities.

All those who desire to leave the park tricts of the city and handed out supplies from door to door.

Under the direction of the authorities, committees of the Associated Charities Board set to work to-day to organize the housing facilities of the city.

At the same time efforts were put under way to get as many vehicles as possible for the distribution of relief supplies. Every wagon and automobile in sight was pressed into service. The lack of teams was met before noon. In many cases individuals came forward and offered the services of their horses and wagons, one man providing the committee with twenty vehicles.

Warning Against Disease.

Mayor Schmitz has issued an urgent proclamation in which he asks the people to observe sanitary regulations carefully, cover up refuse, and use chloride of lime and other disinfectants freely.

"Do not be afraid of famine," he says, "there will be abundance of food supplied. Do not use any water except for drinking and cooking purposes. Do not allow any garbage or refuse to remain on the premises. Bury it and cover immediately. Pestilence can be avoided only by complying with these regulations."

The erection of a temporary camp in Golden Gate Park was begun to-day under the direction of Marcel Cerf, Chairman of the Committee of Refuge. Major McIvor of the Army also had men at work there laying out a sanitary camp, and to the completion of this all efforts were bent. The camp will be under the supervision of officers of the Army Engineer and Medical Corps.

There was little water in the unburned section of the city to-day, but it was promised by the water company that all that section lying west of Van Ness Avenue would have connections with the water mains before morning. About the only water to be had in the residence section to-day was that which had been conserved by the thoughtful householders who filled bath tubs and every other sort of receptacle.

The Relief Committee was advised to-day that the water supply would be increased just as fast as pipes could be repaired. In some places railway tracks have been torn up to facilitate the repairing of mains. Lake Merced is supplying about 1,000,000 gallons to Lakeview Post Office and 7,000,000 gallons to San Francisco. There is water enough stored to supply 35,000,000 gallons a day, the amount formerly used.

A general and systematic reconstruction of sewers is being made by the Board of Public Works.

An urgent appeal has been sent out for a supply of chloride of lime. It is necessary to insure sanitary conditions. It is wanted immediately, and in large quantities. Other drugs needed are sulphur, carbolic acid, bichloride of mercury, vaccine points, general antiseptics, formaldehyde, cathartics, castor oil, opium pills, morphine tablets, and quinine. It is almost as urgent that people outside the city furnish these drugs at once as it is that they send food.

The Southern Pacific Company succeeded in getting the first train through on the coast division last night. It ran into the station at the corner of Third and Townsend Streets. Trains are now running with comparative regularity. Large gangs of men are working night and day to open the whole division.

Automobiles Help Workers.

The automobile has played an important part in the work of the past few days in San Francisco, first by carrying dynamite from place to place in the fight against the fire, in transporting troops and firemen to places of danger, in bringing in supplies and forwarding press matter and telegrams to Oakland, and in a thousand other ways that proved valuable.

Almost every private machine in the city is in use, many of them voluntarily tendered, others seized by the military authorities.

The drivers were impressed into service. Working day and night since the hour of the earthquake, some of these operators have been without sleep during the entire period. As a result several of the chauffeurs last night fell into collapse in front of the municipal headquarters.

Forty bodies were taken from the ruins of the building at 119 Fifth Street to-day by the Red Cross Service. The structure, which was a four-story wooden building containing three flats of ten rooms each, collapsed during the earthquake Wednesday morning. At the time several persons were taken out alive from the upper stories, and it was thought that all the inmates had escaped. The ruins took fire and were consumed. The bodies of those imprisoned within the ruins were burned, only bones being left.

Mrs. Henry Murray and A. J. McNear and wife lived in this building. They have not been heard of by friends since the fire.

JOKING IN STRIDENT VOICES, DEATH A THING OF NO MOMENT

Ex-Mayor Phelan, Rudolph Spreckels, and Hermann Oelrichs Pause to Tell What They Did—The Work of Thieves and Their Summary Punishment.

LOS ANGELES, April 21.—Four residents of Los Angeles, two men and two women, who were thrown together by the earthquake and for two days and a night walked the streets and hills of San Francisco, arrived here to-day. They are Dr. Ernest W. Fleming, Oliver W. Posey, Mrs. Francis Winter, and Miss Bessie Marley. They were strangers till they met in front of the Palace Hotel Wednesday morning.

They returned with feet swollen and bruised from miles of walking over ragged, broken streets, and with flesh seared and blistered from cinder and flame. The women remained in a local hotel all evening, prostrated. Mr. Posey went directly home, but Dr. Fleming, unkempt and disheveled, went to the Chamber of Commerce to give suggestions for relief.

It was on his advice that the Relief Committee made purchases of linen and bandages to send north. He said thousands were suffering from burns.

Awoke in Groaning Building.

"I was sleeping in a room on the third floor of the hotel," said Dr. Fleming this afternoon, "when the first shock occurred. An earthquake in San Francisco was no new sensation to me. I was there in 1868, a boy of ten, when the first great earthquake came. But that was a gentle rocking of a cradle to the one of Wednesday.

"I woke to the groaning of timbers, the grinding, creaking, and roaring. Plastering and wall decorations fell. The sensation was as though the buildings were stretching and writhing like a snake. The darkness was intense. Shrieks of women, higher, shriller than that of the creaking timbers, cut the air.

"I tumbled from the bed and crawled, scrambling toward the door. The twisting and writhing appeared to increase. The air was oppressive. I seemed to be saying to myself, 'Will it never, never stop?' I wrenched the lock, the door of the room swung back against my shoulder. Just then the building seemed to breathe, stagger, and right itself.

Stood in Street and Laughed.

"But I fled from that building as from a falling wall. I could not believe that it could endure such a shock and still stand. The next I remember I was standing in the street laughing at the unholy appearance of half a hundred men clad in pajamas, and less.

"The women were in their night robes; they made a better appearance than the men. There was raiment of every hue—and in many cases raiment never intended to be seen outside the boudoir.

"I looked at a man at my side; he was laughing at me. Then for the first time I became aware that I was in pajamas myself. I turned and fled back to my room. There I dressed, packed my grip, and hastened back to the street.

Met Women from Home City.

"All the big buildings on Market Street toward the ferry were standing, but I marked four separate fires. The fronts of the small buildings had fallen out into the streets and at some places there in the street with débris falling about me. It seemed the natural thing for the tops of buildings to careen over and for fronts to fall out. I do not even recall that the women screamed.

Everybody Just Walked.

"The street gave a convulsive shudder and the buildings somehow righted themselves again. I thought they had crashed together above my head. The two women arose and started to walk. I followed in an aimless sort of way.

"The street was filled with moving things again. The rainbow raiment had disappeared, and all were clad in street clothes. Every one was walking, but there was no confusion. We did not even seem in a hurry.

"Down Market Street the flames were growing brighter, but we walked with our luggage to the St. Francis. Fires were burning down toward the ferry, but the Fire Department had turned them. We had faith in the Fire Department.

"Soon I became aware that squads of soldiers were patrolling the streets. It appeared perfectly natural. I do not think I wondered why they were there.

Joked While They Shivered.

"Men and women were all about us. We looked at each other and talked, even tried lamely to joke. But every few minutes a convulsive quiver swept through the city. The others seemed to be shivering.

"I noticed that the eyes of the men and women were rolling restlessly. Their tones were pitched high. It seemed to grate on my nerves. Then I fell to wondering whether I was talking shrilly too.

"I went to a grocery without a front and bought a few supplies, things that would make a cold lunch. The grocer did not even overcharge me. He was particular to give me the right change.

Always Faced Wall of Fire.

"The soldiers came and told us to move on. It seemed the natural thing to do. By this time the fire was creeping dangerously close. We would have walked to the ferry. We tried it on a score of streets, but that wall of fire was always there. It seemed to creep across in front of us.

"And in front of the fire always walked the soldiers. Many times I hired express wagons. We would ride for a few blocks and get out on the sidewalk. In not a single instance were we charged more than a reasonable price for the ride.

"Once we loitered until the soldiers came up. A rough fellow who had been standing by my side tried to dart through the line. He looked like a beach comber. A young Lieutenant caught him by the coat.

"'Here!' he called to his men. 'Shoot this man.'

"I hurried on without looking back. I don't remember that I heard a shot fired. But at the time it seemed so trivial a matter that I did not pay much attention.

Sailors Using Big Guns.

"The air was filled with the roar of explosions. They were dynamiting great blocks. Sailors were training guns to rake rows of residences.

"All the while we were moving onward with the crowd. Cinders were falling about us. At times our clothing seemed uncanny; the figures about us moved like ghosts.

Walked About to Keep Warm.

"The wind and fog blew chill from the ocean, and we walked about to keep warm. Thousands were walking about, too; but there was no disturbance.

"Families trudged along there. There was no hurry. All appeared to have time to spare. The streets, walks, and lawns were wiggling with little parties, one or two families in each.

"All night we moved about the hills. Thousands were moving with us. As the night wore on the crowd grew. Near daylight the soldiers came to the park. They were still moving in front of the fire.

"I had bought a little store of provisions before nightfall. I walked over to the fire made by one squad of soldiers and picked up a tin bucket. I went to a faucet and turned it on. A little water was there. I boiled some eggs and we ate our breakfast.

"Then we concluded to make our way to the water front, as soldiers were driving us from that part of the hills. The flames were still after us. We walked toward the water front for hours. Part of the time it was through the burned district.

Feet of the Women Cut.

"The streets were rough, the sidewalks jagged and broken. The women suffered severely. Jagged stones and wires cut their thin shoes from their feet. Bandages did no good.

"The walk back through the ruins was the worst of all. Dead horses lay along our path. Some were burned to a crisp. On Howard Street, near Market, lay the charred bodies of two men. Those were the only dead we saw in the streets.

"Walking and resting we reached the ferry near sunset. Soldiers seemed to be everywhere. They were offering milk to women and children. We took a boat to Oakland and hastened by train to Los Angeles.

"If it were not for the sting of the cinders that still stick to my face I might think it was all a nightmare."

SAN FRANCISCO, April 21.—Some of the prominent men of San Francisco paused long enough in their work to-day to tell of their personal experiences:

James D. Phelan, ex-Mayor of San Francisco, and Chairman of the Finance Relief Committee, said:

"When I was awakened in my house by the shock, I made my way downtown toward the fire, which was raging in two directions. One branch of the fire destroyed my office building on Market Street, and the other my home in the Mission. Of my personal effects I saved but a few. My family left my home and went to Golden Gate Park, where I followed and pitched two tents which I had at my home. Later I accompanied my family to Burlingame, twenty miles south, in an automobile."

Rudolph Spreckels said: "I can give no connected account of my experience now. I have not had time to think about myself. I volunteered as a special officer, and assisted the firemen in trying to check the fire, and my experience at Van Ness Avenue and Union Street was certainly a thrilling one."

Hermann Oelrichs said: "I was in the St. Francis Hotel. I lost all my personal effects except the suit of clothes that I have on and two flannel shirts. I have done what I could everywhere to relieve the suffering, and just at present am too exhausted to think connectedly."

Quick Vengeance on Thieves.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., April 21.—A. J. Neve, who was manager of a drug store in San Francisco, is in Sacramento.

"The work of the ghoul was the thing that added rage to discouragement and despair," he said. "Hundreds of women were crowded into the St. Francis Hotel, it being believed it could withstand the flames. The buildings were burned on all sides and then it caught. Bodies of women were carried out, and the villains cut off the fingers and put them in their pockets to get the diamond rings.

"The men caught at this work were shot at once. Many of them were killed. In the pocket of one who paid the penalty with his life there were five diamond rings that had been stripped from the fingers of the dead.

"The soldiers, worn down and thirsty, broke into saloons to get water or liquor to brace them up. Many of them got drunk and the result was that they shot many innocent people. That is a simple truth."

The Rush to the Ferry.

SALT LAKE, Utah, April 21.—Many refugees from San Francisco are coming to Salt Lake with tales of the disaster.

"My room was in the Grand Hotel," said Sam Wolf. "When awakened I dressed and made for the street, which seemed to move like waves of water. On my way down Market Street the whole side of a building fell out and came so near me that I was covered and blinded by the dust. Then I saw the first dead come by. They were piled up in an automobile like carcasses in a butcher's wagon.

"A man cried out to me: 'Look out for that live wire.' I just had time to jump and escape certain death. On each side of me the fires were burning fiercely.

"I finally got into the open space before the ferry. The ground was still shaking and gaping open in places. Women and children knelt and prayed God would be merciful to them. At last we got on the boat. Not a woman in that crowd had enough clothing to keep her warm, let alone the money for fare. I took off my hat, put a little money in it, and we got enough money to pay all their fares.

"Just before I got out of the hotel I caught a woman at an open window.

"'Where are you going?' I asked.

"'Oh! I was going downstairs,' she answered.

"She would have fallen fifty feet to the stone pavement. She followed me out on the street, barefooted, and cut her feet on the broken glass. The last I saw of her she was on her knees, begging God for mercy on her sinful soul."

Thought Chicago Was Shaken.

Charles W. Lawson of Salt Lake said: "But one thought seemed to possess the terror-stricken people—that the end of time had come. In some way the report was started that Chicago had suffered even worse than San Francisco."

Mr. Lawson is hysterical at times and under the care of a physician.

W. H. Sanders, Consulting Engineer of the United States Geological Survey, insisted on paying his hotel bill before he left the St. Francis Hotel.

"Before leaving my room I made my toilet and packed my grip," he says. "The other guests had left the house as I hurried down the lobby. There I met the clerk, who had rushed in to get something. I told him I wanted to get something. I told him I wanted to pay my bill.

"'I guess not' he said, 'this is no time for settlement.'

"As he ran into the office I cornered him, paid him the money, and got his receipt, hurriedly stamped."

FLED FROM FIRE'S BREATH.

First Ship Reaches Port Los Angeles —Could See Flames 30 Miles Out.

PORT LOS ANGELES, Cal., April 21.—The steamer Itauri, bound for Hamburg, Germany, put in this morning. She is the first vessel to bring by the water route those who witnessed the destruction of San Francisco.

"The Itauri left San Francisco on Thursday afternoon when the flames seemed to be at their height," said First Mate Charles Appen. "As seen from the bay it was a sublime but a terrible spectacle. We were anchored more than a mile in the roadstead, but the wind as it swept over the burning city and down upon us was like the breath of a demon.

"At times it was impossible for us to remain on deck, so great was the heat. The terrific concussions of dynamite brought hundreds of fish to the surface. Our clearance papers were burned, but we could not retain our anchorage, and late on Thursday afternoon we started toward the open sea.

"The wharves were filled with people. They beckoned to us that they needed assistance. It was only the thought of self-preservation that kept the Itauri's course unchanged. At midnight we were thirty miles at sea, but the fire was still visible, and until almost dawn we stood on deck and watched the reflection of the flames as they played to and fro on the cloud mountain which hung over the ruined city."

"MAN WITH THE HOE" BURNED.

Millet Masterpiece Was Lost with the Crocker Art Collection.

Among the famous works of art believed to have been destroyed in the flames at San Francisco was Millet's picture, 'The Man with the Hoe,' rendered doubly celebrated by Edwin Markham's poem, which was inspired by it. This picture, with several other masterpieces, was in the residence of William H. Crocker, who acquired it about sixteen years ago.

Mr. Markham, who considered it to be one of the most impressive of all modern paintings, first saw a copy of the picture eleven years before he wrote his poem in 1897, and the pathos and pain of it so impressed him that he was finally impelled to depict his impressions in his now well-known verses. In speaking of this on one occasion, the poet said:

"The thought of that bent figure was in my heart—that stunned and stolid peasant, the type of industrial depression in all lands and in all labors. I often stood before the picture, absorbing the majesty of its despair, the tremendous import of its admonition. My poem, 'The Man with the Hoe,' is my soul's protest against the degradation of labor, the oppression of man by man."

The picture was painted by Millet in 1867, and sold by him for a trifling sum. Its value now is estimated by some experts as high as $150,000. It had changed hands several times when Mr. Crocker bought it in Paris at a private sale, with a number of other paintings, from Durand-Ruel, the dealers. Among the other works of art bought by him were pictures by Teniers, Troyon, Paul Potter, Corot, Monet, Renoir, Puvis de Chavannes, Pissarro, and Constable. The collection in his home at 1150 California Street, San Francisco, also included a number of valuable tapestries.

Mr. Crocker last evening declined to place a value upon the collection.

"I am not sure that it has been utterly destroyed," he said, "for I have been unable to obtain any definite information. But, anyhow, it doesn't make a particle of difference what my personal loss may be. It sinks into insignificance in the presence of the appalling calamity that has overwhelmed the city and people of San Francisco."

DISTRESS IN OAKLAND.

Not Room Enough for the Refugees—On They Must Go.

OAKLAND, April 21.—Driven from the San Francisco water front, which was almost swept away by fire last night and early this morning, thousands of San Francisco's homeless sought refuge in this city to-day. The survivors crossed the bay on ferryboats, tugs, and launches, and were met at the Oakland wharves by Relief Committees, which at once set about the task of relieving the needy and suffering.

The seriously injured were sent at once to the hastily improvised hospitals. Food was provided for hundreds of hungry. Rigid inspections were made for contagious diseases and many persons were quarantined.

Along the principal streets of Oakland there was a picturesque pilgrimage of former householders, who dragged or carried the meagre effects they had been able to save. The survivors who could not be cared for in Oakland went on to Berkeley and other surrounding cities, where relief committees are actively at work.

Utter despair was pictured on many faces. All showed the effects of sleepless days and nights and want of proper food. Yet, though nearly all the churches, skating pavilions, and halls of the city have been converted into temporary lodging places, there will not be room enough to-night to accommodate all the people who have surged into Oakland.

The effort to maintain even ordinary sanitation at these congested places is a serious task. All the medical men of the city are engaged in taking immediate charge of the refugees who became ill.

Employment bureaus have been hastily established. Able-bodied men who are willing to work on railroads and other large construction schemes in various parts of California and Nevada are sent with free transportation to the scene of the labor.

The Chamber of Commerce, church, newspaper offices, and relief headquarters have provided registers for the refugees and are aiding in finding friends and relatives for distracted survivors. The scenes at these places are in many instances heartrending. Many women are unable to bear up under the awful strain.

At The Bulletin office on Broadway a woman with four small children entered seeking traces of her husband and baby, whom they had lost in the rush for the ferry. While making her inquiries she fainted.

Pathetic and tragic incidents could be multiplied by the hundreds.

The crowds that are arriving represent for the most part San Francisco's cosmopolitan side. Chinamen, Italians, Japanese, negroes, are mingled together in common misfortune with business men and once well-to-do householders, guests from hotels and Eastern tourists. All carry what baggage they can. Some drag bedding behind them.

All are seeking food and shelter. Lack of water and provisions and the terrible strain of three days in a doomed city has sapped the vitality and left the refugees exhausted. On this account the task of caring for them is extremely difficult.

Twenty-five thousand persons left San Francisco yesterday and homeless people kept crossing the bay all night. All who wish to cross the bay are given to understand that they may go to any point in the State on any transportation line free of charge, but that they may not return for some time.

People are going to every point around the bay, and even to Los Angeles, San Diego, and other cities in the south—anywhere to get away from the sight of the skeleton walls and smoking ruins of the city.

The Oakland relief committee reports that more than 50,000 destitute persons were cared for in and around Oakland last night. Of this number 45,000 were placed in churches, halls, rinks, theatres, and other public buildings. In addition, camps of tents have been provided at the various parks and in the suburbs. Many thousands were sheltered and fed in private homes.

All religious services will be suspended on Sunday in Oakland and all surrounding places, and the congregations will devote themselves to relief work.

Thousands Homeless in Berkeley.

Berkeley has accommodated 2,000 homeless people, and had sent word to the authorities that it desired to take care of 4,000 more. Alameda will take 3,000, and Fresno has telegraphed that it wished to provide for 3,000.

A maternity hospital has been established at Berkeley under the direction of Prof. Magee at the University of California. Last night three infants were born. One child was born there in the public square.

NEVER MORE A CHINATOWN.

Minneapolis Merchant Says San Francisco Won't Allow It.

Special to The New York Times.

MINNEAPOLIS, April 21.—The 200 Chinamen in Minneapolis to-day sent about $1,000 to their suffering countrymen in San Francisco, with an offer of more if it is needed. Moy S. James, proprietor of the largest Chinese restaurant here, who came from San Francisco's Chinatown two years ago, says that his countrymen there kept all their goods and money hidden in secret boxes in their houses, and that it is likely it was all destroyed.

James declared that there will never be another Chinatown in San Francisco. With the money sent by sympathizers, he says, the inhabitants of that quarter will come in large companies to Eastern cities because they realize that the growth of a segregated colony of Chinamen will never be permitted in the new San Francisco.

Portland Publisher Safe.

OAKLAND, Cal., April 21.—Harry L. Pittock, publisher of The Oregonian of Portland, Oregon, was a guest of the Occidental Hotel, San Francisco, when the crash came. Mr. Pittock was not injured by the falling walls, but his suit case, lying open beside his bed, was flattened like a pancake.

SAN FRANCISCO MEN ARE BOUND TO REBUILD

And Won't Waste Any Time Starting the Work.

THE RECORDS ALL INTACT

Great Steel Structures Survived the Earthquake—Walls in Most Cases Unhurt by the Fire.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 21.—Ex-Mayor James D. Phelan, addressing the General Relief Committee to-day, suggested that the press make known to all people that the work of rebuilding will begin as soon as possible and that all skilled labor and trades should be prepared to remain in or near the city, as there would be plenty of employment immediately.

"California can take care of all the homeless," said Mr. Phelan, "and it is hoped and urgently desired that unskilled laborers do not go to far-off Eastern cities, as they will soon be employed in San Francisco."

He said later: "The city will be rebuilt on lines of strength and architectural beauty heretofore unknown."

Rudolph Spreckels said: "Of course the city will be rebuilt, and better than ever."

Banks Are Ready to Help.

Homer S. King, President of the San Francisco Clearing House, said:

"San Francisco has a future, and will rebuild. There is not even a panic, and I have seen more than one panic. It is only a setback from which the city is strong and vigorous enough to recover. I do not believe any of the bankers consider this disaster anything more than a serious wound that will heal quickly and cleanly.

"The banks are more than willing to help the people who have shared in the common distress. Chicago and Baltimore recovered from even greater setbacks. The people of San Francisco have always been progressive, and are recognized as hard workers. There is no reason why they should not do the same.

"The bankers will help to rebuild the city. We are absolutely satisfied and assured as to our own standing. Most of the money that is put into circulation will go where it will be most effective in the re-establishment of business."

With the fire almost out, authorities and large property holders to-day were able to go into the devastated district and get some idea of the extent of the ruin. It was found in many instances that the losses were not so great as supposed.

Valuable Records Found Intact.

The best news for property owners was that the records in the Hall of Records had been found intact. Had they been destroyed, a great tangle over real estate titles would have been the result. Now all such matters can be adjusted speedily. It was found that the Federal Court records also were unharmed.

The great modern steel structures were practically uninjured by the earthquake, except for cracked walls and displaced plaster. All these structures of course subsequently were badly damaged by the flames so far as the inner construction is concerned, but the wals are, in most cases, intact.

The most notable cases of practical immunity from the shock were the St. Francis Hotel, the Fairmount Hotel, the Flood Building, the Mills Building, the Spreckels Building, and The Chronicle Building.

M. H. De Young, publisher of The Chronicle, to-day telegraphed to Charles J. Brooks, his New York representative:

"We have not missed an issue. New building all right. Will finish and occupy as quickly as possible. Tell all our friends that we appreciate all they have done for us. Everybody connected with the business and editorial departments are all well."

Mint and Post Office to Open.

The branch of the United States Mint on Fifth Street, and the new Post Office at Seventh and Mission Streets are striking examples of the superiority of workmanship put into Federal buildings. The old Mint Building, surrounded by a wide space of pavement, was absolutely unharmed. Not even the few palm trees which stand on either sideof its broad entrance were withered by the flames that devoured everything around it. The Mint will resume business at once.

The Post Office Building also was virtually undamaged by fire. The earthquake shock did some damage to the different entrances to the building, but the walls are uninjured. Every window pane, of course, is gone, as they are in almost every building in town, but the Government will be able to resume postal business immediately.

The Fairmont Hotel, while seriously damaged in the interior, is left intact as to the walls, and the management has offered space in the building to any of the various Relief Committees who desire to house the homeless or to store supplies.

It is stated upon authority that the Merchants' Exchange and Monadnock Building will be open for public offices on Monday morning. These and the other buildings named have been carefully examined by expert architects, who have pronounced their framework and foundations to be absolutely safe.

Old Mission Dolores Unharmed.

Mission Dolores Church, the oldest building in the city, erected 130 years ago by the Spanish missionaries, survived the earthquake shock and was saved from the fire. It is constructed of adobe blocks. The newer church, built of brick alongside of the old building, suffered from the earthquake.

A trip through the burned districts to-day revealed a scene of unspeakable desolation. From many points on Market Street, as far as the eye could reach in any direction, there was nothing but skeleton walls and smoldering ruins.

San Francisco was not destroyed by the earthquake. While old buildings in that part of the city, which stood on "made" ground east of Montgomery Street, and some of that district lying south of Market, suffered from the shock, it was fire that wrought the great devastation and wiped out the entire business section and probably half of the residence section.

Many structural and architectural work plants are making preparations to open their works as soon as possible. Some will establish temporary plants in Oakland.

The Boundaries of Burned District.

In the section north of Market Street the ruined district is practically bounded on the west by Van Ness Avenue, although in many blocks the flames destroyed squares to the west of that thoroughfare.

The Van Ness Avenue burned line runs northerly to Greenwich Street, which is a few blocks from the bay. Then the boundary goes up over Telegraph Hill and down to that portion of the shore that faces Oakland. Practically everything in the district bounded by Market Street, Van Ness Avenue, Greenwich Street, and the bay is in ashes.

On the east side of Hyde Street Hill the fire burned down to Bay Street and Montgomery Avenue, and stopped at that intersection. All south of Market Street, with perhaps some exceptions in the vicinity of the Pacific Mail dock, is gone. This section is bounded on the north by Market Street, and runs south to Guerrero Street, goes out that street two blocks, turns west to Dolores, runs west six blocks to about Twenty-second, taking in four blocks on the other side of Dolores.

The fire then took an irregular course southward, spreading out as far as Twenty-fifth Street, and going down that way to the southerly bay shore.

That the spirit of the city is not broken is shown by the talk of prominent men to-day.

No Mercy for Criminals.

Superior Judges of this city to-day agreed that no further stays of executions will be granted in the cases of convicted criminals who already have been sentenced. Mrs. Cordelia Botkin, convicted of the murder of Mrs. J. P. Dunning, is exempt from the order, as her case has been appealed to the Supreme Court. She will remain in custody of the Sheriff until a decision is rendered. Attorney General Webb to-day announced that certified copies of court records were intact in Sacramento and can be substituted for the original documents. The Judges made an order extending the time of filing papers for thirty days from April 21.

Gen. Funston has had 160 men arrested under civil process. Many of them are charged with felony. As there was no commitment for them, they could not be received at San Quentin Prison. All have been distributed among jails of near-by counties. Only two insane persons have been found.

FEARS FOR MRS. COREY.

Also C. M. Schwab's Sister-in-Law, Who Was at the Cliff House.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 21.—The relatives of Mrs. W. E. Corey, wife of the President of the United States Steel Corporation, are much alarmed for her safety. It is feared she has been caught in the disaster in San Francisco.

A letter was received to-day from Mrs. Corey stating that she and her sister-in-law, Miss Ada Corey, were leaving Reno, Nev., for San Francisco, expecting to arrive there last Tuesday, the day before the earthquake. They were to stay at the Palace Hotel. All to-day messages were being sent to San Francisco by the anxious relatives of the two women, but no answer has been received. They intended to make an automobile trip through California, starting from San Francisco.

Alarm is also felt for the safety of Mrs. Joseph Schwab, sister-in-law of C. M. Schwab. Mrs. Schwab has been in San Francisco for several weeks. She was staying at the Cliff House, which is said to have slid into the sea. Her relatives have been unsuccessful in their efforts to get into communication with her.

Pacific Theologian Hurt.

BERKELEY, Cal., April 21.—Dr. J. K. McLean, President of the Pacific Theological Seminary of Berkeley, arrived home to-day, painfully wounded. He was almost killed at San José in the collapse of the St. James Hotel. The bed in which President McLean lay was covered with bricks and débris.

PLANS FOR REBUILDING THE DEVASTATED CITY

Senator Flint Says San Francisco Can Be Made Perfectly Safe.

NEW BUILDING LAWS NEEDED

California Senator Wants Only Stone and Steel Construction in the Business Section.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 21.—Senator Flint of California estimates that there are accommodations at tourists hotels between San Francisco and Los Angeles for half a million people. The California Senator takes a rather hopeful view of the conditions at San Francisco so far as the opportunity for taking care of people is concerned.

The tourist season is now over, and the hotels which are generally filled during the season are practically empty. Los Angeles can be reached from San Francisco in a day, but Senator Flint is of the opinion that it will not be necessary for the people to go that far to secure accommodations.

"Very little hardship will be experienced," he said, "in sleeping in tents near the city. Thousands of people seeking health live in tents for months at a time in California. In fact, there is no danger to health for persons who may sleep on the ground, as the rainy season is over."

In common with other Californians, Senator Flint has not the least doubt that San Francisco will be rebuilt and become a more magnificent city than ever. It is accepted here that the Government will lose no time in replacing all Government buildings which have been destroyed. Discussing the lessons taught by the calamity Senator Flint said to-day:

"We should at once extend the fire limits and provide that only buildings constructed of steel frames should be allowed to go up within those boundaries. Stockton Street, Grant Avenue, and one or two other thoroughfares should be widened, and if that is done we will have a model city. Another question that should be met there is the construction of buildings in the residential section. Unlike many other places, we had long rows of frame houses.

"That condition assisted in the destruction of the city by fire. The city should not permit that kind of construction in the future. Provision should be made for detached houses within the residential section, where there may be frame buildings.

"When we come to analyze the causes of the destruction of San Francisco we find that the earthquake shock itself did little damage. It was the fire that did the great damage, and we can provide against such danger in the future. There should be a change in the method of fighting fires. While the reservoirs were exhausted, there was a whole bay of water accessible to the city. There were numerous fireboats on the bay. If we had had some means for piping water from the bay in case of fire it would have been possible to meet this awful situation and to check the flames.

"What we should have are several lines of pipes running from the bay to the city, so that in case of interference with our water supply it would be possible to pump water from the bay. The fact is we were no worse situated than is New York City, for instance. I do not know whether New York has any provision for piping water from the harbor into the city in case of interference with her usual water supply, but if she has not the experience of San Francisco should be a warning to her of the need of prompt action to remedy the deficiency."

Just as soon as it is accurately known what is needed in San Francisco in the way of public buildings to replace those destroyed by the earthquake and fire Congress will immediately make adequate provision for them. Already a resolution has passed both houses of Congress calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for such information. A reply setting forth the needs of the stricken city will be forthcoming as soon as reliable reports are received.

Several millions of dollars will then be appropriated. Representative Bartholdt of St. Louis, Chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings, said to-day that while the aim at San Francisco as elsewhere will be to provide buildings more for their adaptability to specific requirements than for mere ornamental purposes, the Congress will be liberal with the city of the Golden Gate. Dr. Bartholdt expressed the opinion that it is probable the new buildings in San Francisco may not be constructed on the old sites, but further inland.

A 'FRISCO OF CONCRETE.

New York Contractor Thinks That Is the Best Solution.

Reports received by Frank B. Gilbreth, a local contractor, from his engineer, James McLaughlin, who went down from Seattle to San Francisco the day after the earthquake to look into conditions for rebuilding, indicate that he believes the new City of San Francisco will be a city of concrete. Already Mr. Gilbreth, who is erecting some of the largest structures on the Pacific Coast, is preparing to undertake contracts calling for reinforced and monolithic construction which shall be earthquake-proof as far as modern methods can make them, and absolutely fireproof.

"I am free to predict," said Mr. Gilbreth yesterday, "that the future San Francisco will be erected almost entirely of concrete. If it had not been for the susceptibility of the buildings to flames after the convulsion the greater part of the Western metropolis would be standing to-day. Already Seattle has taken warning, and the Columbia Improvement Company, which is building a power house valued at $500,000, has changed its plans and will put up instead of a steel structure one of monolithic concrete construction. This, it is hoped, will withstand any ordinary earthquake shock, and will be absolutely fireproof. This change of plan shows how quickly the people of the Western coast are taking advantage of the lesson taught by the disaster. Any foolish reports that San Francisco will not be rebuilt you may put down as unfit for relief. The city will rise just as quickly as Chicago did. It is not so much the earthquake that we must guard against as fire. Concrete is the only solution."

YOUNG EHRET SAFE.

The Brewer's Son Went from San Francisco to Salt Lake.

News was received yesterday at the home of George Ehret, the brewer, at 1,197 Park Avenue, that his son George was safe in Salt Lake City, having gone there on one of the trains that took many refugees out of San Francisco.

While in San Francisco it was Mr. Ehret's habit to send a telegram to his father in this city each day. For four days no news was received at the home of Mr. Ehret, and that caused him much anxiety.

MIKADO CABLES AGAIN.

Tells the President He Hopes for Reassuring News.

WASHINGTON, April 21.—This additional message of sympathy was received by the President to-day from the Emperor of Japan:

"I am anxiously awaiting more complete information regarding the appalling disaster that has overtaken San Francisco. In the meantime I hasten for myself and my people to tender to you and your countrymen a deep and heartfelt condolence and sympathy in the presence of this awful visitation. I sincerely hope that fuller particulars may prove more reassuring."

MATTEUCCI'S VIEWS.

Earthquake and Vesuvius Eruption Were Intimately Connected.

NAPLES, April 21.—Prof. Matteucci, Director of the Observatory at Mount Vesuvius, has been busily defending his observatory against the latest attacks of Mount Vesuvius, which on Thursday and Friday renewed its discharges of red-hot stones and again shook the observatory building. Only to-day was he able to answer the inquiry of The Associated Press regarding the possible connection between the outbreak of Mount Vesuvius with the California earthquake. In a telegram dated from Resina, the nearest telegraph station to the observatory, the professor says:

"Notwithstanding the distance separating Mount Vesuvius from California and in spite of lack of exact coincidence between the eruption of the volcano and the earthquake at San Francisco, I believe that a close relation exists between the two phenomena, which I consider to be different effects of a common cause. The surface of the earth since the remote epoch of the formation of its solid crust has suffered laceration as it yielded to internal pressure, thus producing volcanic eruptions. When the crust resists, the pressure of incandescent masses below reproduces its motions, which we call earthquakes.

"It is my opinion that the eruption and earthquake had reciprocal and intimate connection, which is rendered most evident by the present phenomena at Mount Vesuvius and in California.

STRASSBURG RECORDED QUAKE.

Seismograph There Registered It 32 Minutes After 'Frisco Shock.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, April 21.—On April 18 the seismograph at the earthquake station at Strassburg registered a disturbance 32 minutes after the disaster at San Francisco occurred.

Announcements from the United States that aid from abroad for the victims of the catastrophe would be declined evoked expressions of astonishment in the newspapers this evening. The Tageblatt sees no reason for the rejection of contributions, which are an indication of international sympathy.

President Roosevelt on Friday declined an offer of $25,000 from the Hamburg-American Line for the California sufferers, saying there would be no need to accept help outside of our own country.

Dutch Volcano Rumor Unconfirmed.

THE HAGUE, April 21.—The rumors which reached New York of the eruption of the volcano on the Island of Krakatoa, in the Strait of Sunda, and of the earth shocks in Java appear to be unfounded. Nothing whatever has reached the Ministry of the Colonies, nor have the newspaper correspondents in the East Indies mentioned any such disturbances.

100 WERE LEFT DEAD IN SANTA ROSA'S WRECK

Business Section Knocked Flat, and Many Homes Wrecked.

THE KNOWN DEAD ARE 58

Martial Law in This California Town—A List of Its Dead, Injured, and Missing.

SANTA ROSA, Cal., April 21.—The list of known dead here now totals fifty-eight, and it is believed that one hundred is a conservative estimate of the number of persons who lost their lives in the earthquake which shook this city on Wednesday morning. Five bodies were recovered to-day from the wreckage, and the search has hardly begun.

The entire business section is in ruins, and practically every residence in town is more or less damaged, fifteen or twenty being badly wrecked. The damage to residences was caused principally by the sinking of the foundations, which let many structures down into the ground. The brick and stone business blocks, together with the public buildings, were all thrown flat. The Court House, Hall of Records, the Occidental and Santa Rosa Hotels, the Athenaeum Theatre, the new Masonic Temple, the Odd Fellows' Block, all the banks—everything went—and in all the city not one brick or stone building is standing except the California Northwestern Railroad station.

Bankers and millionaires are going about with only the few dollars they happened to have in their pockets when the crash came and are little better off than the laborers who are digging through the débris. Money has practically no value here now, for there is no place to spend it, and this phase of the situation presents its own remedy. Almost every one here is sleeping outdoors, the people being afraid to enter their homes except for a short while at a time until repairs have been made. There are plenty of provisions. Some have been supplied by other towns and much has been brought in from the surrounding country.

Two entire blocks of buildings also escaped being swept by the flames, which immediately broke out in a dozen places at once as soon as the shock was over, and from the tangled ruins of these buildings complete stocks of groceries, clothing, &c., are being dug out and added to the common store. Before the fire gained headway several grocery stores were emptied of their contents in anticipation of what might follow.

The city is under full martial law, Company C of Petaluma having been called to assist the local militia company in preserving order. Many Deputy Sheriffs and special policemen have also been sworn in, but no trouble has occurred, and none is expected. The Relief Committee is active and well managed, and all in need of assistance will receive it promptly. The work now requiring the principal attention of the authorities is the removal of the wreckage in order to search for the bodies of those missing and known to have perished. Forty marines, under command of Capt. Holcombe arrived to-day from Mare Island, and did splendid work in assisting in the search. Forty-two bodies were buried to-day.

Following is a list of the dead, injured, and missing:

FORT BRAGG WIPED OUT.

California Lumber Town Destroyed by Earthquake and Fire.

BERKELEY, Cal., April 21.—A letter received to-day by Postmaster Schmidt brings the information that Fort Bragg, one of the principal lumbering towns of Mendocino County, was almost totally destroyed as a result of a fire following the earthquake of last Wednesday morning.

The bank and other brick buildings were leveled as a result of the shocks, and within a few hours fire had completely devastated the town. But one person of the 5,000 inhabitants was killed, but scores were injured.

Eureka, another large town in the same county, five miles from Fort Bragg, was practically undamaged, although the earthquake was distinctly felt there.

Relief expeditions were at once sent to Fort Bragg from surrounding towns and villages, and the people of the stricken area are being cared for.

OAKLAND, Cal., April 21.—A dispatch from San Rafael says:

"The town of Tomales is a pile of ruins. All of the large stores are flat. Many ranch houses and barns are down. Two children, Anita and Peter Couzza, were killed in a falling house about a mile from town."

DANGER OF AN EPIDEMIC.

The Need of a Strong Sanitary Body Discussed by Dr. Soper.

Dr. George A. Soper, who was in charge of the sanitary work at Galveston after the flood, said yesterday that in the relief measures taken for the survivors of the Californian disaster sanitary precautions should take a conspicuous place. Dr. Soper was expert for the State in charge of the suppression of the typhoid epidemic at Ithaca in 1903, acted for the City of Watertown in a similar capacity in 1904, and has had a wide experience in epidemic and sanitary work elsewhere. He said:

"There is every reason to believe that the relief work in California will be better and more effectively carried on than has ever been known before, but until some days have passed and the needs and opportunities of the situation can be thoroughly understood, there will of necessity be much confusion and uncertainty as to the nature of the relief measures necessary. We are informed that money is needed and blankets and clothing and food. There is equal need that the sanitary welfare of the survivors shall receive immediate attention.

"Contrary to the common belief, there is no danger of pestilence in the bodies of men and animals killed by violence. The presence of the unburied bodies is shocking and demoralizing, but they are not directly provocative of disease.

"The survivors of the California disaster may be likened to a rapidly organized army. The problems of their care are the problems of the camp. The task of guiding and controlling this dazed, undisciplined mass of human beings so that they shall not multiply their dangers and be an unnecessary menace to one another will be tremendous.

"There is needed now what has always been the direct need of our armies in time of war—a competent sanitary organization. A health department is needed stronger than the strongest which exists in any American city.

"Is it probable that such an organization will be formed and exercise its beneficent authority over the refuge camps before an epidemic actually breaks out? A clear recognition of the necessity for such action is the best assurance that it will be taken."

HEAVY LOSSES OF IMPORTS.

A Million Dollars' Worth May Have Been Wiped Out in the Disaster.

Importers in New York having business relations in the Far East, and who are in the habit of entering merchandise at San Francisco for immediate transportation to this city, are wholly in the dark as to how much of their merchandise may have been destroyed by Wednesday's earthquake and the subsequent fires.

Large quantities of Japanese and other expensive silks, curios, porcelains, and other products of the East are usually awaiting transit across the continent from San Francisco. Fears were expressed yesterday that imports aggregating nearly $1,000,000 intended for shipment to this city have been wiped out by the disaster. Representatives of prominent firms said they had been unable to get any response to telegrams of inquiry addressed to their correspondents.

BROOKLYN SENDING SUPPLIES.

Many Gathering Money for Relief Funds—Theatres Aiding, Too.

Brooklyn is giving with generosity to the relief of San Francisco. Already the work of collecting funds and supplies in the borough is well under way, contributions of money and donations of clothing and other articles needed by the sufferers coming in from all quarters. Many firms, as well as individuals, have started relief funds, and many of the local societies are planning entertainments and other means of raising money. Business houses in the borough have opened depots for the reception of goods, to be sent to San Francisco at the direction of the local branch of the Mayor's Relief Comittee.

Benefit performances are to be held in the local theatres, and in many of the churches to-day money will be collected for the earthquake and fire victims. The Home Trust Company, Flatbush Trust Company, and the Prospect Park Bank are among the financial institutions which are receiving funds for San Francisco's relief. The Brooklyn Eagle is also raising a fund and collecting supplies.

The business men of Coney Island have contributed $2,000, and the various Boards of Trade in the borough have made generous donations. The first large shipment of supplies from Brooklyn was made yesterday from the Brooklyn Navy Yard, when Rear Admiral Coghlan, the Commandant, forwarded 100,000 rations to San Francisco. Additional supplies will be sent from the yard as fast as they can be gathered.

The Hyde & Behman Amusement Company will give special matinée performances at their five local playhouses on Tuesday. The gross receipts will be given to aid the San Francisco sufferers. The five theatres are the Grand Opera House, Star, Folly, Gayety, and Hyde & Behman's Adams Street Theatre. Manager Percy Williams will devote the proceeds of the Thursday night performance at the Orpheum Theatre to the relief fund. On Monday the Barnum & Bailey circus will begin a week's stay in Brooklyn, and the entire proceeds of the Monday afternoon and evening performances will be contributed to the San Francisco relief fund.

A public meeting to discuss plans for relief work will be held in the Kings County Court House this afternoon, under the auspices of the Brooklyn Division of the Red Cross Society.

INSURANCE MEN MEET.

Do Not Intend to Raise Hopes of People Too High.

OAKLAND, April 21.—An important meeting of the San Francisco Underwriters' Board was held to-day at what will now be its permanent headquarters, Reed's Hall, at Twelfth and Harrison Streets.

The sense of the meeting was that the impression should not be given out that the insurance companies had money to throw away or that any losses would be paid until they had been properly adjusted, and only such losses as the companies are responsible for will be paid.

This matter was brought to the attention of the board by Rolla V. Watt, manager of the Royal and Queens Insurance Company. He said:

"I met ex-Mayor Phelan on the street yesterday, and he asked me to get some sort of notice given out to the public that their losses would be paid. I do not believe that this is the proper thing, and I told him so. The companies I represent will pay what they are liable for, and no more, and it is better for those whose spirits are drooping to allow them to droop rather than to buoy them up with false hopes."

The sentiment was generally concurred in. From the remarks made there is no doubt that the companies will draw a fine distinction between the loss by earthquake and that by fire, and will only pay for what was actually burned. The question of property destroyed by dynamite was not touched upon.

STORY OF DISASTER IN DOTS AND DASHES

The Man Who Sent It Here Hadn't Slept in Three Days.

THE SCENE AT FIRST HAND

Wind Saved the Ferry House, Where a Cutter Lay, Ready to Carry Telegraph Cable Away.

In the ferry house at the foot of Market Street, San Francisco, at dawn yesterday, T. A. McCammon, the Western Union operator, who had relieved Operator Le Compte, turned to his key and got into communication with the Western Union Building in New York City.

At this end of the wire, standing at the shoulder of an operator who had remained on duty all night, Assistant General Manager Barclay, who has taken personal charge of all the news that comes from the stricken city, read off the dots and dashes.

Mr. Barclay remarked that his operator in San Francisco was just saying that he had not had an hour's sleep in three days. Friday night he had spent in searching for telegraph operators to open up some of the forty-odd wires which can be tapped at the ferry house, and to reach the camps in the western part of the city he had had a hard time, being held up every few blocks by a soldier who demanded to see his passcard.

Soldiers were on guard everywhere, Operator McCammon said over the wire. Sixty of them, under the command of Major Benson, were guarding the Bank of California, at Sansome and California Streets, and doing patrol two blocks down to the wrecked Post Office building. They also guarded the German Savings and Loan Society's granite structure, around the corner in California Street, near Kearney, over which the flames passed on Friday. Other soldiers got as close as they could to the wrecked Wells-Fargo building and their bank, at Sansome and Market Streets.

Over at the sea wall, at the base of Telegraph Hill, Government tugboats were pumping streams into the ruined city. The operator also reported a guard of sixty soldiers at the United States Mint and small details at the vaults of three savings banks.

No one was permitted to pass through the streets unless he had a card signed by the Chief of Police, Mayor Schmitz, or Gen. Funston. Twelve United States soldiers were acting as messengers, carrying dispatches to and from the telegraph offices in the Market Street ferryhouse.

Wind Saved Wharves.

The telegraph operator reported that the fire was still burning along the wharves, but the wind had changed in the night, and there was now no danger of the fire spreading to fifteen sheds which would have carried the flames to the ferryhouse. The fifteen sheds mentioned, said the operator, were about the only things that were burnable left along the water front. If they did catch fire it would have been necessary for the operator to move.

He was prepared for it, a Government revenue cutter lying near by with a dozen wire men on board prepared to lift the cables and carry them to a point where the service would not be again interrupted. In fact, the operator said that if the fire caught the water-front sheds he would still be able to keep in touch with New York, as he would send his messages from a boat anchored out in the bay.

But his visit to the parks, where the people were camped out during the night, had convinced him that they had suffered much from the cold trade winds which had blown in from the ocean until dawn. There were camped out about 75,000 people altogether. About 20,000 more had got permission to go to the ferry to cross to Oakland. The Oakland boats were at the slip early and carried as many people as each would hold on a trip.

In this way, and by way of launches which had found persons gathered on various wharfs, about 300,000 men, women, and children had crossed the bay, deserting San Francisco, many of them declaring they would never return.

Those who came with baggage were told that they would not be permitted to remove it at present, and the result of this order was that thousands of pieces of furniture and baggage were left in handcarts and in wheelbarrows and wagons all about the ferryhouse.

Coming over from Oakland early yesterday morning, clicked the operator, were Mayors and Councilmen and Boards of Supervisors and Relief Committees from various towns and cities near San Francisco. They brought with them quantities of canned goods, clothing, and cash. These they had to hand over to local committees, who took them by launches to North Beach, where many thousands had camped out, and to a relief station that was established at Fourth and Kentucky Streets, near the Merrimac Pier. At East and Folsom Streets another relief station was established, and boatloads of provisions were landed there. The people who had gathered along Kentucky Street were mostly of the poorer class, who had been cut off from the ferry and were between a wall of flame and the oil docks.

Barefooted Refugees.

At dawn, the wire said, these people, some barefooted and with blankets wrapped around their shoulders, were placed on board boats that carried them across the bay to Oakland. When they got to Oakland they found relief committees there offering them shelter at towns far away from the stricken city, but when told that they would not be permitted to take any of their belongings with them they decided to remain as near San Francisco as possible, so they camped out in Alameda and in Berkeley. At these places the people have opened up their homes for as many as can be accommodated, but many are erecting temporary shanties on the lawns adjoining private dwellings.

When the Western Union's night operator was relieved at dawn yesterday in San Francisco the operator, who had been all over town skirmishing for men, sent word that he did not see such a large number of dead as he expected to see. In fact, he thought the death list would not reach more than 800, although no attempt has yet been made to dig into cellars of ruined dwellings in the tenement district. It was in this section of the town that the greatest loss of life occurred. Many were asleep in their beds when the houses sank two or three feet, causing roofs to cave in and ceilings to fall on top of the sleepers, who were burned to death later when the fire swept over Mission Street.

Bodies Piled in Heaps.

The San Francisco police, who established temporary hospitals at three places in town, found, upon visiting some of the wrecked lodging houses, scores of bodies piled in heaps in doorways, where their lives had been crushed out. The bodies of these people, according to the Western Union operator, were carried in wagons up to the Presidio and buried in trenches, fifteen placed in each trench.

There might have been several hundred found in the ruined district over which the fire traveled on Wednesday, said McCammon. This district, covering an area of three square miles, was practically burned to the ground, although here and there, the operator said, he saw the framework of a building standing. He added that there were seven distinct fires raging in various parts of the city at the same time on Thursday night, and this, following the earthquake, had unbalanced the minds of many persons in the tenement district, who, having started for the bay front piers, took refuge in all sorts of buildings, and for two days had neither food nor water.

The result of this was apparent in the appearance of persons who drifted to the ferry house at dawn yesterday. Some of them, when asked to tell just what had happened in the district they came from, simply answered that they did not know, nor did they know where they were going.

Some simply wept when questioned and appeared to be in a state bordering on insanity. Others anxiously inquired for missing relatives. Whole families had been separated, and everybody seemed so panic-striken that they simply could not say anything but that they were sorry they had not died outright.

Returning to Their Homes.

Many of the people who left their dwellings on Nob Hill and further back in the western section of the city, the operator wired, had gone to Golden Gate Park, as did those from the Palace and other hotels, walking three miles to get there. There they were quartered in the Museum Building and in the other park buildings and in tents on the lawns and under the music stand.

There the Government soldiers fed them yesterday. Some of them decided to return to their homes, which, in the western section of the city, were unharmed. Families that owned a home in this section usually invited thirty or forty others to share it with them, and as soon as they could get permits to return through the police lines they went back home. They were told that they would not be permitted to cart away any of their household goods until the authorities got matters straightened out.

Early in the day, said Operator McCammon, a heavy fog settled over the city and held down a cloud of black smoke, which gave the people another scare, for San Francisco was in murky gloom until long after noon. The operator said that San Francisco would again be in darkness last night, as it would be some time before the electric light plants were put in condition. No attempt to put them in shape had as yet been made, as there had been a scarcity of water, but by Monday he thought one plant would be in operation. But nobody seemed willing to start in to work. The people were still panic stricken, and simply wanted to get enough clothing and money to get out of San Francisco.

Still Dangerous in the Streets.

Travelling through the ruined business section of the city, the operator said, meant the risk of losing one's life, as the skeleton work of some buildings was still hanging perilously over the streets, while smoldering fires were all about. The people had been unnerved, and it would require aid from outside of San Francisco to start getting things in shape again.

Debris Two Stories High.

Persons who had not suffered from the earthquake shock would be able to come into the city and begin the work of getting things moving, but it would require a great force of such people to straighten out the tangle. All this the wire said.

Assistant General Manager Barclay telegraphed back that the Western Union Company was sending a thousand men to San Francisco, and that 110 operators from various points in the West were on the way there.

Chief Electrician Converse of the Western Union's coast division got in communication with Mr. Barclay at 9 o'clock in the morning, New York time, and said that the getting of news about town was a difficult matter, as the débris was piled two stories high in some of the streets, and it was necessary to climb over mountains of burned timber and broken stone to reach the western part of the city. The warships and tugs and the firemen on land had succeeded in checking the spread of the fire along the wharves, after a hard night's work, thus permitting the ferry company to run its boats every twenty minutes.

Manager Barclay telegraphed back to spare no expense in getting forty more wires into working condition so that persons in San Francisco might telegraph to their relatives here that they were safe. Mr. Barclay said that the General Superintendent of the Coast Division of the Western Union system, Frank Jaynes, left New York for San Francisco yesterday to take charge of the work of rebuilding a main office in San Francisco.

None of the company's records had been destroyed, Mr. Barclay said, and as it had forwarded thousands of instruments and many carloads of electrical apparatus it would not be many days before it would have things working in good shape, so far as the telegraphic service was concerned. Many of the instruments arrived in Oakland yesterday, and would be sent across the bay to San Francisco to-day.

"The situation, so far as I can learn," said Manager Barclay, "is that the fire is now under control, and ought to be practically stamped out by Sunday afternoon. Of course there will be smoldering ruins for several days and little bits of fire, but as far as the fire going further into the western portion of the city, it seems from the dispatches which I have received to-day that its progress in that direction has been choked off.

"The gale which sprung up Thursday night, and came from the west, blew across the ruins and started fires in half a dozen places. If the wind had shifted to the southwest our men would have been compelled to desert their posts in the ferryhouse, at the foot of Market Street, for the fire would have eaten its way along the wharfs right up to the ferry building.

Dead Under 800, Probably.

"As for the list of dead, I do not believe it counts up more than 800, and possibly not more than 600. Our operators tell us that there were very few people in the business district when the earthquake came along, so that very few were killed in the business district by the tumbling of buildings.

"Then, as the fire started over in the tenement district, the folks in the hotels had plenty of time to get out before the flames reached them. Consequently anybody who had relatives stopping at the Palace or other hotels in San Francisco need have no fear for their safety, even though they do not receive telegrams telling them the facts until a day or two.

"As our last dispatches tell us that money and food are now pouring into San Francisco and Oakland, it is safe to say that the wants of the people will be quickly supplied. Many of the big storehouses that escaped fire were filled with canned goods and dry groceries, and these have been taken charge of by the United States soldiers. They are distributing food now at all of the camps.

"The owners of several flour mills have volunteered to give away flour, and as other public-spirited citizens in San Francisco have now got to work with relief committees, the situation in the stricken city is much better than yesterday. The water supply to-day is excellent, and that means much to the people there.

Only 80,000 Left in 'Frisco.

"Only about seventy or eighty thousand persons have remained in San Francisco, the remainder of the population having gone to Oakland and its suburbs. The railroads are now in shape, and are carrying people away from Oakland free, but will not handle baggage for a day or two to come.

"The shipping along the bay has been heard from, too, and is now no longer a source of worry to the maritime exchanges.

"Each train that arrives brings relief, and trains are arriving very rapidly from from all sections of the West. Sickness, however, may be looked for among the people who have not had any rest for the past three days.

"The men who stuck to duty are now played out, but others have arrived fresh from other places and will be able to continue the good work commenced by men who will go down into history as heroes.

"Half of San Francisco is in ashes. A portion of the other half will have to be rebuilt, while the remaining quarter which stood through it all will probably be deserted by many of the folks who made their homes there. We have heard the worst of the news. What will come in the future will be good news."

WESLEY ON EARTHQUAKES.

In a Sermon Long Ago He Said That Mortal Sin Caused Them.

Many sermons on the earthquake and its results are scheduled for to-day. John Wesley, the founder of Methodism, preached one on "The Cause and Cure of Earthquakes," about 1750, in which he declared that sin is the moral cause of the earth's disasters, no matter what the natural cause may be. His argument is based on the Scriptures, from which he quotes at length in support of his contentions.

"Earthquakes are set forth by the inspired writers," said Wesley, "as God's proper judicial act for the punishment of sin; sin is the cause, earthquakes the effect of his anger. So the Psalmist: 'The earth trembled and quaked, the very foundations also of the hills shook, and were removed, because He was wroth.' So the Prophet Isaiah: 'I will punish the world for their evil, and will lay low the haughtiness of the terrible; therefore I will shake the heavens, and the earth shall remove out of her place, in the wrath of the Lord of hosts, and in the day of His fierce anger.' And again: 'The earth shall reel to and fro like a drunkard, and shall be removed like a cottage; and the transgression thereof shall be heavy upon it; and it shall fall and not rise again.'"

Wesley then went on to describe several earthquakes, beginning with that which shook Sicily, Naples, and Malta in 1692. He said, in part:

"There arose from the mouth of Etna great spires of flame, which spread all around; the sea all on a sudden began to roar, and rise in billows; the birds flew about astonished; the cattle ran crying in the fields; and there was a blow as if all the artillery in the world had been discharged at once. Of the 18,914 inhabitants of Catania, 18,000 perished therein; of the several cities and towns 60,000 were destroyed out of 254,900."

The earthquake in Jamaica in the same year was next described. The houses, said Wesley, sank outright thirty and forty fathoms in the town of Port Royal. After depicting the destruction of Lima in 1746 and the swallowing up of Callao at the same time, the preacher continued:

"Of all divine animadversions, there is none more horrid, more inevitable than this. For where can we think to escape danger if the most solid thing in all the world shakes? If that which sustains all other things, threatens us with sinking under our feet, what sanctuary shall we find from an evil that encompasses us about? And whither can we withdraw in the gulfs which open themselves, shut up our passages on every side?

"With what horror are men struck when they hear the earth groan, when her trembling succeeds her complaints, when houses are loosened from their foundations, when the roofs fall upon their heads, and the pavement sinks under their feet! What hope, when fear cannot be fenced by flight?"

Wesley directed his followers to repent as a cure of earthquakes.

THEATRE CROWDS HELP.

Eager to Drop Coins in the Salvation Army Tambourines.

When the matinée throngs left the theatres yesterday afternoon they had to surrender to the Salvation Army. A red-jerseyed band, with its brass instruments hushed, came marching along to the solemn, measured tap of muffled drums.

A man at the head of the musicians held aloft a large printed sign calling for aid for the people of San Francisco. On each sidewalk Salvation Army lassies held out tambourines and called upon the passers-by to remember their stricken brethren in the West. At street corners Salvation Army "cook pots" were hung to receive contributions.

"While you are amusing yourselves," cried the Salvation Army women, "men and women and children are starving in 'Frisco. Remember, it may be New York's turn next!"

There was a quick response everywhere. Hands were thrust into pockets and wrist bags and then stretched forth eagerly to drop bills and coins into the tambourines. The progress of the band and the collectors was marked by a veritable shower of green paper, and coins that ranged from cents contributed by children to fifty-cent pieces.

THE PRESIDENT ASKS FOR $1,500,000 MORE

Army's Relief Work Has Already Cost That Much.

WASHINGTON NOW BREATHES

It Has Done a Lot of Work to Aid San Francisco—Thinks the Worst Is Over.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 21.—When it was found yesterday that the army had already moved forward for San Francisco's relief supplies worth more than the $1,000,000 already appropriated by Congress President Roosevelt determined to ask for a further appropriation. To-day, therefore, he sent to the Senate and House a special message asking for an emergency appropriation of $1,500,000. Secretary Taft had already made out a statement of what had been done under the previous authority and appropriation and had written a letter asking for $1,000,000 more.

While he was at the Capitol Secretary Taft gave a copy of his letter to Representative Tawney, Chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations. The President's message had not yet come, and before it was read Mr. Tawney had prepared a resolution appropriating the $1,000,000 asked for by Secretary Taft. Only one voice was raised in the House in question of the proposed action, and that was by Underwood of Alabama, who wanted it made clear that Congress would have to be kept informed of what was done with all this money voted so lavishly.

As a matter of fact, it was in anticipation of just such a question that Secretary Taft had caused the statement of what had been done to be prepared. Gen. Bell, Chief of Staff, spent the entire night at the War Department last night getting the statement ready. Since the first report of the disaster either Gen. Bell or Gen. Barry, the Assistant Chief of Staff, has been at the office in the War Department all the time, prepared to act immediately upon any matter that required army action.

President Rosevelt's message was as follows:

"To the Senate and House of Representatives:

"I submit herewith a letter of the Secretary of War, with accompanying documents, including a form of a resolution suggested for passage by Congress.

"This letter refers to the appalling catastrophe which has befallen San Francisco and neighboring cities, a catastrophe more appalling than any other of the kind that has befallen any other portion of our country during its history. I am sure that there is no need on my part of more than a suggestion to the Congress in order that this resolution may be at once passed. But I urge that instead of appropriating a further sum of $1,000,000, as recommended by the Secretary of War, the appropriation be for $1,500,000. The supplies already delivered or en route for San Francisco approximate in value $1,500,000, which is more than we have the authority in law as yet to purchase. I do not think it safe for us to reckon upon the need of spending less than $1,000,000 in addition.

"Large sums are being raised by private subscription in this country, and very generous offers have been made to assist us by individuals of other countries, which requests, however, I have refused, as in my judgment there is no need of any assistance from outside our own borders—this refusal, of course, in no way lessening our deep appreciation of the kindly sympathy which has prompted such offers.

"The detailed account of the action of the War Department is contained in the appendices to the letter of the Secretary of War. At the moment our concern is purely with meeting the terrible emergency of the moment. Later I shall communicate with you as to the generous part which I am sure the National Government will take in meeting the more permanent needs of the situation, including, of course, rebuilding the great Governmental structures which have been destroyed.

"I hope that the action above requested can be taken to-day.

"THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

"The White House, April 21, 1906."

The fact that the President's request and that of Secretary Taft were different caused a delay, so the mater went over until Monday. Assurances were given, however, that the appropriation would be made.

Washington Eases Up.

There was an entirely different feeling in Washington to-day with regard to the situation in San Francisco. The reassuring telegrams from Gen. Funston late yesterday and early this morning had the effect of relieving the intense anxiety, and then, too, the first strain of the relief work was over, and there was little more to do than pick up stray threads and attend to what matters were suggested by the messages from the scene of the disaster.

At the War Department there was distinctly less hustle in the air and the general prospect bore a greater resemblance to the quiet times of peace than has been the case since the earthquake. It has been very warlike at the big building for the last three days, with Generals and clerks on duty all night, and even the Secretaries on call for emergencies. But to-day, with all the immense quantities of supplies of one sort or another well on the way to San Francisco, the tension was eased.

But while the evidences of activity in the offices of the Chief of Staff, the Quartermaster General, and the Military Secretary were lessening, up in the offices of the Red Cross, in the same building, there was a steadily growing rush of business. The whole United States has arisen to do what it can for the relief and assistance of stricken San Francisco, and all the populous centres within reach of Washington are looking to this city for guidance. The flow of messages to Red Cross headquarters from all over the Eastern States, and even well out West, is very heavy, and not a few are received by the Chief of Staff and Military Secretary, asking what to do with supplies of one kind and another that have been contributed.

One thing that is not wanted for distribution in San Francisco is money. It is not the intention of either the army or the Red Cross to make free distribution of that sort of assistance, except in special cases that require it. Even then the army will not have part, and that will all be left to the Red Cross. The army will distribute supplies of clothing, bedding, tentage, and food, and will furnish medical and surgical treatment.

This afternoon Red Cross headquarters here telegraphed to the different agencies that clothing and blankets were the principal needs.

What the Army Has Done.

As an illustration of what the army has done for the relief of San Francisco, the single item of tentage and bedding already speeding toward the fire-swept city shows how the money appropriated by Congress went so quickly. The total value of the army material of this character now on the way is $1,056,534.40. Of this, $679,526.67 was in tents and $308,263 in blankets. The rest was in small items for cots, bedsacks—canvas sacks to be stuffed with straw and made into beds—mattresses, and tarpaulins. The army has forwarded every available tent it had, both from the depots and from posts, and even extra canvas. Besides, the Governors of Washington and Nebraska were instructed to send all the tents in use by the National Guards of those two States.

The first batch of army medical supplies sent forward from St. Louis consisted of five carloads. Surgeon Gen. O'Reilly made his estimates on the first report received from Gen. Funston, who then said he would need supplies for 20,000. On that Gen. O'Reilly issued orders to the medical depot in St. Louis to send forward twenty times the annual supply for a post of 1,000 men. In this lot there went one field hospital and three regimental hospitals, with extra canvas and all necessary supplies for three months, as well as a general assortment of medicines. A medical officer and a detachment of hospital corps men were sent along. To-morrow morning a company of hospital corps men will start from here. No more army medical officers will be sent, as there will be an ample number of civilians in San Francisco, it is felt, to handle the situation satisfactorily.

The Red Cross Work.

Red Cross Headquarters here estimate that aready $6,500,000 has been contributed for relief of the stricken city, exclusive of the $2,000,000 given and to be given by Congress. Several offers of aid have been received from foreign sources. All these have been gratefully declined, as it is felt this country is amply able to take care of the situation itself, without outside assistance. Guatemala and Canada each offered to send $10,000, and the Canadian Pacific Railway offered as much.

"The Chinese Minister, Sir Chentung Liang-Cheng, announced to-day that the Chinese in this country had raised $4,800. He was advised that it would be a good thing to send the First Secretary of his Legation to San Francisco at once to use this money in caring for his fellow countrymen there.

The Red Cross shipped a carload of eggs from Chicago to-day, and the Commissary Department of the army a carload of evaporated cream to be used in caring for the little children who are homeless.

To-night Gen. Bell is again on duty at the office of the Chief of Staff, where he expected to remain all night, to be ready for emergency. It is not felt, however, that there will be any further necessity for such strenuous work as that of the last three days. It is believed here that the worst is over, and that what is needed now is organization for caring for the homeless and shelterless thousands until the new San Francisco can begin to rise out of the ashes of the old.

Free Hand for Funston.

There has been no interference with Gen. Funston from this end. Secretary Taft is greatly pleased with the way in which Funston has carried himself in San Francisco. To-day when the communications from the devastated city were less frequent than heretofore it was taken to mean that Funston was busy getting things straightened out as best he could, and as his last message told of improving conditions there was no disposition to worry him with a multiplicity of inquiries.

One thing Secretary Taft did ask Funston was whether he needed any more officers. The Secretary recognizes that in the handling and distribution of all the supplies that are rushing into San Francisco by the trainload there will be work for a good many men. It just happens that the two men in the army best equipped to handle such a situation are Majors Devol and Krauthoff, the Quartermaster and Commissary already stationed there. But the department is preparing to send them assistance if Gen. Funston thinks it will be needed.

Secretary Taft has directed that Major Bellinger of the Quartermaster's Department be ready to start West at once. Gen. Humphrey, Chief Quartermaster, and Gen. Sharpe, Chief Commissary, have been instructed to name three officers from their respective departments to be sent out if required.

A REQUEST FROM TAFT.

Wants All Relief Supplies Sent in Care of the Red Cross.

WASHINGTON, April 21.—In his capacity of President of the American National Red Cross, Secretary of War Taft has issued this proclamation:

"To the Public:

"As President of the American National Red Cross, I have appointed Dr. Edward T. Devine special agent of the Red Cross work to be done in San Francisco. I am in receipt from Dr. Devine of a telegram in which he suggests that notice of all available relief funds and all shipments for relief, whether consigned to the Red Cross or not, be sent to him, addressed 'Red Cross, San Francisco'; that it is exceedingly important to centralize this information. I concur with Dr. Devine's suggestion, and respectfully request those who are engaged in forwarding either relief funds or shipments for relief to notify Dr. Devine of the fact and name of consignee.

"The War Department is in constant receipt of requests that messages of inquiry be sent concerning the welfare of persons known to be in San Francisco. I have communicated with Gen. Funston with respect to some of these and have learned from him that it is absolutely impossible for him or his subordinates to locate individuals at this time. The confusion is so great that those who are naturally in distress, because of a lack of information with respect to friends or relatives in San Francisco must nevertheless await the settlement of conditions before it will be possible for them to hear. The necessary work of organization in order to feed and shelter the people is occupying the complete attention of all the army of Gen. Funston, and all the force that he can command, and it seems impossible to preserve any discipline or order if messengers are permitted to enter the lines without restriction.

"WILLIAM H. TAFT,

"Secretary of War and President American National Red Cross."

TRANSFERS THROUGH THE MINT

Supt. Leech Suggests That—No Attack on Government Treasure House.

WASHINGTON, April 21.—The following dispatch was received this morning at the Treasury Department from the Superintendent of the Mint in San Francisco:

Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.:

Thanks for your complimentary dispatch. Every bank in San Francisco buried in ruins. All banks in Oakland, Berkeley, and Alameda able to resume business, including First National, Oakland; Union National, Oakland; First Nation, Berkeley, and Berkeley National, Berkeley. It looks as if Oakland must be temporarily the banking centre for California north of Tehachapi.

State Banking Commissioners have located office in Oakland to meet this condition. The suburban banks ought to have free and prompt telegraphic transfer of funds. In view of ruined condition of Sub-Treasury, advise making the transfers direct through the Mint. The Sub-Treasury went down in the fire early, and is now surrounded by blocks of ruins. Have not seen or heard of Jacobs or Deputy. Will make search for them to-morrow. The fire is still burning, but it is thought to be confined to a few blocks of residences somewhat isolated.

"No foundation for published statement of attack on Mint. Will do what I can about bureau of information of refugees. Have received to-day Meline's order for transfer of funds to Bank of California, San Francisco. LEECH,

Superintendent United States Mint.

THE SENATE GRATEFUL.

Acknowledges a Message of Condolence from Brazil.

WASHINGTON, April 21.—Immediately after the Senate met to-day, Mr. Perkins rose to make acknowledgment of the cablegrams received yesterday from the Vice President of the Brazilian Senate expressing the sympathy of that body for the people of San Francisco and other communities in California. He also acknowledged the great debt of gratitude due for the large sums of money contributed in aid of the sufferers. On his motion the Vice President was instructed to express the Senate's appreciation.

Mr. Perkins also said that he desired to thank the great railroads of the country for the prompt and cheerful manner in which they have given precedence to supplies of all kinds that are being forwarded to California.

The rest of the day was devoted to eulogies on the life of the late Senator Orville H. Platt of Connecticut. The first of a series of addresses was made by Mr. Bulkley. He was followed by other Senators. All spoke in strong tones of praise of the character and career of Senator Platt.

EUROPE'S SYMPATHY.

PARIS, April 21.—Ambassador McCormick presided to-day at a meeting of the American Chamber of Commerce, called to take action on the San Francisco disaster. Prominent Americans, including Consul General Mason and Prof. Albert H. Smyth of the Boys' High School, Philadelphia, who was designated by President Roosevelt to speak for the United States at the exercises of the unveiling of the Franklin statue here, were present, in addition to the members of the Chamber.

A relief committee was appointed, and a subscription was started. The money will be equally divided between the sufferers at San Francisco and the Californian students in Paris, many of whom are now without resources, their families being ruined.

The Ambassador, in behalf of the meeting, forwarded a dispatch of sympathy to President Roosevelt.

CALIFORNIA'S WOMEN HERE ARE GOING TO AID

Will Give a Progressive Euchre and a Benefit by Amateurs.

TWAIN PRESIDES AT MEETING

It Sends a Telegram to San Francisco Saying "We Are with You"—Many Offer Aid.

The rooms of the California Club, at the Waldorf-Astoria, are to be the headquarters for relief work on behalf of San Francisco by many leading women of New York. They are to act under the lead of a committee consisting of Mrs. Thomas Vivian, President of the club; Miss Blanche Bates and her mother, and Miss Margaret Anglin. The committee will receive and forward clothing, money, and food.

A progressive euchre party will be held at the Waldorf-Astoria on Friday night, under the management of Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Mrs. E. H. Harriman, Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, Mrs. Charles B. Alexander, Mrs. Collis P. Huntington, and Mrs. Ogden Mills.

In the near future, also, Mrs. Benjamin Wood of 440 West End Avenue, who has a home in California, and whose husband lost $1,000,000 in the disaster, will give a benefit performance at her home here. Amateur performers who formerly lived in San Francisco will participate. Miss Margaret Anglin is arranging for the affair. The proceeds, of course, will go to San Francisco.

This programme was arranged at a meeting of sympathy at the Casino yesterday afternoon. It was held under the auspices of Mrs. Vanderbilt and Mrs. Oelrichs, and was attended by many women and men in New York society. Mark Twain presided.

Message of Confidence.

This message was sent to the San Franciscans, as voicing the sentiments of the gathering:

"San Francisco shall rise more beautiful than ever. We glory in the bravery of her citizens and have unbounded belief in their ability and determination to sustain this great catastrophe. The spirit of your fathers still lives in their children, and their children's children. The general and spontaneous aid of the whole country is with you."

The telegram was indorsed with cheers.

"Before you give your cheers for the Californians," interrupted Mr. Clemens, walking to the front of the stage and raising his hands, "I hope you'll include the doctors who have done such noble service in the afflicted district. I don't like doctors on general principles, but those men out there have done some great work. Put the firemen and the soldiers in, too."

Then the cheers were given with a will.

The meeting, which was largely composed of women, was not without dramatic features. While Mr. Clemens was explaining the destruction and the suffering that had ensued, a man in the front row groaned and then fell back in a faint in his seat. A dozen women ran to him with restoratives and he soon recovered.

Joseph D. Redding, a former California lawyer, who was introduced by Mr. Clemens, remarked that it was a great pity that private telegrams were not being received from the scene of the disaster.

"I know of only four or five that have reached New York," he said.

Immediately a dozen persons jumped up, shouting: "We have news."

"Thank God for that!" exclaimed Mr. Redding. "Has anybody a telegram dated to-day?"

Telegrams Received.

"Yes, I have," replied a woman who said she was Mrs. Prescott. "I have one this morning, which says: 'We are poor, but safe and hopeful.'"

Another which was read said: "Safe and not discouraged."

Both telegrams were received with applause. Mr. Clemens opened the meeting by introducing Henry Miller, the actor, who said the sympathies of all the theatrical people were with California. He announced that a monster benefit was being arranged to be held at the Casino next Sunday night, and that Miss Anglin, De Wolf Hopper, Mrs. Fiske, Arnold Daly, Harry Woodruff, and others had volunteered their services.

Mr. Clemens then explained the object of the meeting.

"We must not let our minds dwell upon the dead," he said.

"'After life's fitful fever they rest well.'

"Our sorrows and our sympathies are for the living, suffering thousands. The last time I saw San Francisco was thirty-eight years ago. It was then my home. It is your home, too, and every sentiment endears it to us. Forty-eight hours ago I pledged myself not to speak to any audience that paid to get in. However, you didn't pay to get in here; you're going to pay to get out. [Laughter.] This earthquake and fire transcends any thing in human history, ancient or modern, but the same energy that built San Francisco in fifty years to be destroyed in a day, will build it again. Everybody is in a mood to contribute, from the hands of poverty up to those of the millionaire. But it is the poor man that gives most.

"The Salvation Army is the best means I know of to do this work. They are of the poor, and they know how to reach the poor. I have seen their work all over the world—always good. [Applause.]

"Food can and will be carried to the sufferers at once. What they need is covering. We want a committee of women to go to the Mayor and say:

"'Give us some of this money that has been subscribed, and we will buy clothes and bedding for the people who have none, and do it now.'" The committee headed by Mrs. Vivian was then appointed.

Going There to Help.

Just after the committee had been named a young woman arose in the audience and said:

"I am the daughter of the man who made the seal of California in 1849. He died last January. His widow, Mrs. Eudita Kuhner, is in San Francisco now. I was about to go to Europe, but instead I shall go to San Francisco."

E. Peixotto, the artist and a former Californian, made a plea for the young art students of California. Other pleas were made for actors and musicians.

Mr. Clemens spoke again, saying that he interpreted the President's announcement about foreign contributions to mean that foreign Governments and not individuals should refrain from contributing.

"There's one thing about blood and bone," he added, "and that is that it's common—made of the same clay."

Homer Davenport, the cartoonist, said he wanted to give something.

"I used to live on the Pacific Coast, and I would like to contribute, but I haven't any money. I would like to offer 1,000 of my original drawings to be sold for the benefit of the suffering."

His offer was applauded.

No Doubt of Help.

Joseph Redding said there could be no doubt that Californians in New York would contribute handsomely.

"I have read somewhere in history," he declared, "of Caesar's entrance into Alexandria in Egypt. He asked the inhabitants where they came from.

"'We are Athenians,' they replied.

"They had lived in Egypt for thirty years. So I say about Californians, 'Once a Californian always a Californian.'"

This telegram has been received by E. J. McGanney, President of the California Society, in response to a message offering aid:

E. J. McGanney, 3 Broad Street, city:

Many thanks. Help is coming from many quarters. Calamity is so great that all possible aid is welcomed.

GEORGE C. PARDEE,
Governor California.

It was agreed before the meeting closed that another should be held in the ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria at 4 o'clock to-morrow afternoon.

CITY AID FUNDS NOW $1,579,000

Chamber of Commerce Has $596,000 for 'Frisco.

Hippodrome Benefits Bring In $31,000—Many Churches Will Begin Their Work To-day.

The work of providing relief for the earthquake sufferers of San Francisco went on here without let-up yesterday. Contributions continued to pour in at the headquarters of the various organizations that have taken up the relief work, and several new agencies appeared in the field. The result was that at least $500,000 was added to the local relief funds.

All concerned in the work of gathering money for the stricken people of San Francisco and vicinity declared that if it had been an ordinary business day the fund would have been swelled by at least $1,000,000. The fact that the Exchanges closed at noon and that the Wall Street district practically became deserted after that hour naturally interfered greatly with the work of gathering funds.

To-day various churches and religious organizations will begin to do their share of the work. Through the National Red Cross organization copies of the President's proclamation on behalf of the fire and earthquake victims were sent out to the pastors of every church in this city. Many of the pastors have promised to read it from their pulpits prior to the taking of their collection and call upon their congregations to make a special effort on behalf of the stricken people on the shore of the Pacific.

The Chamber of Commerce fund was swelled by several large contributions yesterday. As on the previous day, it led all the other funds, totaling up at the close of business hours $596,800. Of this amount more than a quarter of a million had been received during the day, the larger part of that sum before noon.

Two large individual contributions were recorded yesterday. The larger was made by E. H. Harriman, who gave $200,000 on behalf of the various railroads he represents. This is the largest gift received here from any individual or corporation. Fred. Ayer of this city, who has large interests in Redwood, Cal., gave $50,000. Russell Sage came forward with a contribution of $5,000.

The Red Cross organization and the Merchants' Association almost doubled the large amounts they had received on Friday. At the City Hall contributions aggregating almost $30,000 were received.

Here follows a table showing the grand totals last night of the various relief funds in this city:

Chamber of Commerce	$596,800
E. H. Harriman	200,000
Mayor's Relief Fund	170,212
Stock Exchange	133,000
Merchants' Association	92,938
Red Cross	86,704
Fred. Ayer	50,000
Cotton Exchange	18,600
New York Nat. Exchange Bank	14,000
Produce Exchange	5,000
Consolidated Exchange	5,000
Silk Association of America	4,475
Salvation Army	2,200
Curb brokers	1,000
Miscellaneous, (estimated)	200,000
Total	$1,579,929

Mayor McClellan arrived at his office in the City Hall early. He found awaiting him a huge pile of mail, and in it were found so many contributions that it required the combined efforts of two clerks in the forenoon to tabulate them.

"I am delighted at the generous response to the call," said the Mayor. "I only hope that it will keep up until the last need of the sufferers has been supplied."

In his mail the Mayor found a check for $101.29 which had been sent by Samuel Knopf of 32 Union Square. It was accompanied by this letter:

"In talking to my three young children last evening about the horrors of the catastrophe that has overtaken the City of San Francisco, they each agreed to empty their little savings banks and contribute the same to relief fund. While their contribution is not large, it is all they had to give.

"My oldest boy contributed 61 cents, my little daughter 52, and my youngest boy, six years old, 16 cents.

"I cheerfully add to their little collection my contribution of $100 and inclose herewith check for $101.29, which please apply to the relief of the sufferers in San Francisco. I wish my means permitted me to do more."

Robert W. De Forest, Chairman of the Mayor's Relief Committee, in discussing a resolution passed on Friday evening by the Executive Committee of that organization, which provided for the handling of funds by the local committees of the various communities to which relief is to be sent, said that the meaning of the resolutions had been misunderstood.

"There is complete understanding between the Mayor's committee and the Red Cross Society. Jacob H. Schiff is Treasurer of both, and Dr. Edward T. Devine, who is National agent of the Red Cross in the stricken city, is also a member of the Mayor's committee. It is expected to have banks, savings banks, trust companies, and financial organizations collect funds for the Mayor's committee. That will relieve us of the necessity of opening separate headquarters. No collectors will be employed."

The first money from any of the funds collected by the local organizations that have undertaken the work of succor was sent to San Francisco yesterday afternoon. Following the meeting of the Chamber of Commerce Relief Committee, J. Pierpont Morgan, Jr., who is its Treasurer, forward to a bank in San Francisco $300,000 by telegraph. This action was determined upon at the regular noon meeting of the Executive Committee.

The Merchants' Association also planned to send supplies to the stricken city. Yesterday the Relief Committee of that organization contracted with the Cudahy Packing Company in Omaha for the shipment of fourteen carloads of provisions, which left Omaha last night. The shipment consisted of seven carloads of canned meats and cooked vegetables, six carloads of pilot bread and crackers, and one carload of condensed milk. The committee was advised by wire from Omaha last night that the cars had already left and would run on a passenger schedule over the Union Pacific, reaching San Francisco in sixty hours.

The shipment was decided upon after this dispatch had been received by the committee from Frank J. Symmes, President of the San Francisco Merchants' Association, through which all supplies and money sent by the Merchants' Association here will be distributed:

"Full appreciation of your sympathy and offers of service. Probably 100,000 homeless, with banks, supply houses, and hotels destroyed. Food supplies not requiring cooking most desired."

At the close of the meeting of the relief committee of the Chamber of Commerce yesterday it was announced that the members had practically determined to use the large amount collected by the Chamber to aid the many thousand business men of San Francisco who had been ruined by the earthquake and fire. It is believed that at the meeting which is to be held to-morrow some line of action will be determined upon to carry this into effect.

The members of the Chamber of Commerce Committee are convinced that the most urgent needs of the people in the stricken city will be amply provided for by the Red Cross and other organizations and individuals who have contributed so liberally to the various funds in all parts of the country.

A member of the committee, discussing this phase of the situation at the close of the meeting, said:

"It must be evident to everybody that hundreds and probably thousands of business men, a majority of them small dealers, were entirely wiped out by the catastrophe that overtook San Francisco. Their stores have been wrecked and their stocks destroyed. They will have great difficulty in receiving credit at the banks, and will be unable to build a new business for themselves without outside aid. What we intend to do is to try to give each of these unfortunate merchants a few hundred dollars each to start them on their way again.

"With the business men of San Francisco, especially the small ones, thus provided for, the commercial conditions will adjust themselves."

President Jesup said last night, however, that the report that the committee had practically decided to use the money to help the merchants of San Francisco, and particularly the smaller merchants, was incorrect.

"We have not decided how to best disburse the money," Mr. Jesup declared. "We are trying to find out just what the most pressing needs of the sufferers by the calamity are, and when we have learned this, the money we raise will first be devoted to relieving these needs. Further than that, the committee has decided upon no plan whatever."

This dispatch was received at the Chamber of Commerce yesterday:

"Morris K. Jesup, New York Chamber of Commerce: Your generous telegram just received. The greater portion of the population is camped in parks and on hills in great distress, which is being relieved by Citizens' Committee. The numbers make the task stupendous. It looks like a long siege. We cannot deny the fact that we can use any funds the generosity of the country will supply.

"JAMES D. PHELAN,
"Chairman Finance Committee."

President Morris K. Jesup said, after the meeting that he was in communication with several of the leading business men of San Francisco regarding the best methods of distributing the relief funds, and that the committee would be guided very largely by their advice.

The Red Cross organization yesterday did such a rush business that the officials found themselves cramped in their quarters in the Bristol Building, at Forty-second Street and Fifth Avenue. The owner of the building, J. W. Solomon, and three business firms having offices there came to the rescue with an offer of their own quarters for the Red Cross. A downtown furniture firm sent up a wagon load of furniture to put the offices into shape. The Red Cross offices will remain open all day to-day for the receipt of contributions.

Cleveland H. Dodge, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the New York State Red Cross organization, said yesterday that all contributions received at the uptown office would be sent to Jacob H. Schiff. With the contributions received by the Mayor's committee a general fund would be formed to be distributed by Dr. Devine through the relief organizations in the Far West.

A Dime from Peekskill.

The largest contribution received at the Red Cross Headquarters yesterday was $10,000, subscribed by Americans in London. The amount was sent through I. & W. Seligman & Co. The smallest amount was a dime. It was from a little boy in Peekskill and was accompanied by this letter:

Peekskill, N. Y.

Mr. Jacob H. Schiff:

"My mother gave us boys, Anthony and me, 10 cents to buy candy with to-day. Won't you please let it go toward helping the poor, homeless San Francisco folks? I'll be much obliged if you will. I haven't any more or I'd sent it to you for them. I hope you get a lot, for I'm very sorry for them. ALFRED JOSEPHS.

This telegram was received at the office of the Red Cross from Dr. Devine, its National agent for California relief work:

"Leave Chicago by Overland Limited this evening. Due San Francisco Monday evening. Will advise later if help from distance is needed."

The Japanese Consul General, Mr. Uchida, called at the Red Cross headquarters yesterday and announced that he would form a committee at once to take steps for the relief of the earthquake victims in California. Many contributions from Japanese business houses in this city were received by the Red Cross yesterday.

The Salvation Army sent its big National Staff Band out into the streets yesterday. At noon the band gave an open-air concert at Broad and Wall Streets. The army lasses circulated in the crowds that gathered. Brokers and bankers hastening to their homes at the close of the market usually stopped long enough to drop bills, some of large denominations, among the quarters and dimes of poorer folks and pennies of the newsboys and messenger boys. The concert netted the band nearly $300 in less than three-quarters of an hour.

Several hundred soldiers and cadets of the army were sent out into the streets yesterday with the typical Army kettles and tambourines to catch the pennies of the passersby. In this manner, according to announcement made last night at Salvation Army Headquarters, $2,200 was collected. Similar work is being done in all the large cities in the country. At 3 o'clock this afternoon the Army will hold its large open-air concert and demonstration in Union Square in aid of the earthquake sufferers.

The Salvation Army.

A telegram was received by Commander Eva Booth last evening from Provincial Commissioner George Kilbey, who is in charge of the Department of the West and left his Chicago headquarters on Thursday night for San Francisco. He said that he had reached Fresno and would be in San Francisco last night. He confirmed the dispatch sent by Col. French, the Salvation Army officer in charge at San Francisco, that the army had lost all its property in the disaster and that none of the members of the army in San Francisco had lost their lives.

The army buildings in San Francisco were twenty-seven in all, including industrial homes and halls, eleven meeting halls, and eleven homes, besides the provincial headquarters. Their value was about $125,000.

Bishop McDonnell of the Diocese of Brooklyn, which includes all Long Island, has issued an order directing that the collection in all the Catholic churches in his diocese to-day be set aside for the relief of the earthquake sufferers.

The Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church has sent out an appeal to all Methodist churches to contribute liberally to the relief of San Francisco's homeless and hungry, and for the immediate reconstruction of Methodist Church property worth $475,000, and believed to have been wiped out by the earthquake and fire.

Gen. Grant has directed that the collection taken at the church services at Governors' Island to-day be sent to the Red Cross relief fund.

THE SCHOOLS MAY HELP.

Plans Made for a Contribution for San Francisco.

The Board of Education sent this notice to all the school Principals of the city yesterday:

"The appalling disaster which has destroyed the greater part of San Francisco and rendered homeless 300,000 people appeals to the teachers and pupils of the public schools as well as to every other class in the community. It would seem that they should be given an opportunity to express their sympathy in the tangible form of financial assistance. In all probability the Board of Education will at its meeting April 25 suspend its by-laws so far as may be necessary to permit the collection of money from all in the public schools who voluntarily desire to assist the hungry and homeless in San Francisco.

"Will you kindly bring this matter to the attention of teachers and pupils at the morning assemblies and on other proper occasions, to the end that, in case the Board of Education should take the action anticipated, there may be no delay in securing the help that we feel assured will come from the children of the public schools and their parents? At the same time it should be clearly impressed upon all concerned that subscriptions will be purely voluntary, and that whether any pupil gives much or little, or gives nothing, the facts will not be made public. No money should be actually collected until the Board of Education has taken the necessary action.

"In case such action is taken, the following will be the plan:

"Each teacher will, on Friday, April 27, hand to each pupil an envelope marked on the outside by the teacher 'For San Francisco.' The pupils will return these envelopes on the morning of Monday, April 30, containing whatever subscription the child or the child's parents may desire to make and carefully sealed. The children will be instructed not to mention the name of the giver. All envelopes should be returned sealed, whether they contain subscriptions or not. On Monday afternoon the Principal and teachers will count the subscriptions. The Principal will deposit the total amount in a bank and transmit that afternoon a check for the amount to Egerton L. Winthrop, Jr., President of the Board of Education. Respectfully yours,

"EGERTON L. WINTHROP, Jr.,
"President, Board of Education.
"WILLIAM H. MAXWELL, City Superintendent of Schools."

$31,500 AT THE HIPPODROME.

Everybody Helps Out the Two Big Benefits—Another Coming.

As a result of the two benefit performances at the Hippodrome yesterday $31,507.58 was realized for the sufferers at San Francisco. The sale of seats brought $15,525, Theresa Alice Oelrichs gave $5,000, John W. Gates gave $5,000, Harry S. Black gave $5,000, fortune telling brought in $78.40, the sale of music $378, the sale of books $488.50, and sale of pencils $37.68. The money was sent by telegraph last night to Mrs. Oelrichs's agent, John R. Phelan, in San Francisco.

There was a lot of enthusiasm all day yesterday behind the footlights at the big playhouse. The stage hands all donated one day's pay, and nearly all the performers purchased tickets. Olive North, the gypsy fortune teller of "A Society Circus," read the palms of the other players and got $78. Mrs. John W. Gates and her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Charles G. Gates, were among those who went behind the footlights at the matinée performance and had their fortunes told by Miss North. They each handed her $10.

At the evening's performance the theatre was packed from floor to dome. After the curtain had rung down on the first act Fred Thompson came before the footlights and said that Mrs. Oelrichs would make an announcement of the result of the performances. Mrs. Oelrichs, through whose tireless efforts a great share of last night's success was due, then came before the curtain and said:

"I take great pleasure in announcing to the charitable and warm-hearted citizens of this city, who by their presence here have helped the unfortunate people of San Francisco, that the results of the two performances to-day are as follows:

"Mr. John W. Gates and Mr. Harry S. Black in addition to donating the Hippodrome for to-day have each generously contributed the further sum of $5,000 each. The other receipts are $21,507.58. I am sure that the people of my native State most deeply appreciate your aid and sympathy."

Mrs. Oelrichs did not mention her own liberal gift of $5,000.

Marie Dressler did her share in selling seats for yesterday's performances. She got a package of tickets and quickly disposed of them at Martin's restaurant before the time of the matinée. Last night Miss Dressler took her stand in front of the theatre as soon as the doors were open and "held up" patrons for extra tickets and souvenir books.

The actress was fortified with a speculator's badge and stood her post until it was practically time for her appearance at the Weber Music Hall. Through her efforts $500 was realized for the fund.

Thompson & Dundy annouced last night that a second benefit would be given at the Hippodrome next Sunday night. The bill will consist of Victor Herbert's Orchestra, Lillian Russell, Marie Dressler, and the George M. Cohan company.

For Men Who Know Style—$20 Suits.

It's the very critical man, the man who has kept tabs on every move of fashion, who knows all the little knacks and innovations—to such men will these suits at Twenty Dollars assume importance.

Of worsteds and fine velour finished cassimeres, single and double breasted sack suits. Gray's the color, and the patterns take form in plaids, checks and plain effects.

PRINCETON STUDENTS HELP.

Start a Relief Fund and Will Have a Benefit Show.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., April 21.—The students of Princeton University have manifested a deep interest in the San Francisco disaster and particularly in their fellow-university, Leland Stanford, which has received such a severe blow.

As a result they have decided to hold a mass meeting Monday afternoon to start local campaign to raise funds for the sufferers. The Triangle Club, which is the Princeton dramatic association, has also come to the front and announced that it would give a benefit performance next Thusday and that all receipts from the production of "Tobasco Land," the new play, would be devoted to the afflicted Californians and would be immediately turned over to the Red Cross Society. It is expected by this means alone that the students will be able to raise $1,000 or more.

TRAINS ON SCHEDULE TIME.

Service of the Santa Fe and Southern Pacific Is Uninterrupted.

Dispatches from their Pacific divisions received yesterday at the New York offices of the Southern Pacific and the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railroads, the two systems entering San Francisco, confirm the report in THE TIMES yesterday morning that the roads had resumed schedule service to and from San Francisco. Both systems enter the city by ferry service across the bay. The dispatches announce that the ferries as well as the trains are in full operation, but, of course, traffic to the city itself is restricted by the orders of Gen. Funston keeping all save those who can show urgent business out of the city.

General Eastern Passenger Agent Dillard of the Atchison received this message from the Western headquarters of the road:

"The Santa Fe is open to Point Richmond for passenger traffic. All trains running as scheduled and ferry between Point Richmond and Market Street, San Francisco, is in operation. At present authorities prevent people entering San Francisco, but it is expected restrictions will be removed within two or three days. Our service to Los Angeles, San Diego, and San Francisco has not been disturbed or interrupted."

The Southern Pacific's information came briefly to General Eastern Passenger Agent Nutting in this form:

"Our trains into and out of San Francisco are now running on schedule time."

AN ABSENTEE'S HARD LUCK.

His New Home Wiped Out and His Bride-to-Be Badly Injured.

Edgar E. Prilzer, a cabin passenger on the Cunard liner Campania, which arrived here yesterday from Liverpool, is one of the unfortunates who have been hard hit by the disaster. Mr. Prilzer represents the exporting house of Hay & Freer, which had offices in the Claus Spreckels Building. He was on a two months' business trip in Europe, and on his return home was to be married. Before starting on his European trip he purchased a cottage on Montgomery Street, San Francisco, for his future home. This house, with its furnishings, cost Mr. Prilzer $12,000, practically all his savings. There was no insurance on the property.

On his arrival here a telegram informed him that his new home had been wiped out, and that his future wife, a Miss Sutton, was dangerously injured. The telegram advised him to keep away, but Mr. Prilzer said, nevertheless, that he would start for San Francisco immediately. His parents live in Los Angeles.

To add to his ill-luck, he lost his diamond scarfpin, valued at $150, just before leaving Liverpool.

MILLIONS POURING IN, AND MORE IS PROMISED

Every State, City, and Town Helps Swell Fund for Destitute.

$3,000,000 FROM BAY STATE

Plainfield, N. J., Asks State to Give $1,000,000 of Its Surplus—Up-State Towns Active.

From all over the country contributions are being poured into the common fund for the relief of the sufferers in San Francisco. The sums raised by individual cities, towns, and villages are growing hourly. Up to the present they aggregate many millions of dollars, and much more is promised.

In Chicago it was announced yesterday that $373,645 had been raised already in that city, and there seemed every prospect that in a few days the $1,000,000 which Mayor Dunne set as the amount which Chicago should contribute, would be oversubscribed. Among the latest contributions was $1,000 from the National League of Baseball Clubs.

The number of bazaars and entertainments which have been arranged for the benefit of the relief fund are almost beyond counting. The largest affair of this kind will be held on Thursday in the Bernhardt tent, which has been brought from Kansas City for the occasion. There are already many volunteers for the entertainment to be given, among them about 1,000 musicians from the Chicago Federation, headed by President Winkler, who will direct the big orchestra.

Boston, with the aid of the State of Massachusetts, has decided to raise $3,000,000, instead of the original $500,000 for the relief fund. At a mass meeting held at Faneuil Hall yesterday it was announced that $300,000 had been contributed to date. Gov. Guild stated at the beginning of the meeting that already two trains and one steamship had been sent from Eastern centres of supply to San Francisco by the Executive Committee.

Bishop Mallalieu offered a motion that Massachusetts should strive to raise $3,000,000. The motion was carried. During the meeting news was continually received of additional thousands being added to the fund. Already $100,000 has been placed by Massachusetts at the disposal of the California authorities. Collections will be taken up for the relief fund at all the Boston churches to-day.

Gov. Guild also telegraphed Secretary Taft that the Massachusetts militia could loan, if needed, 1,000 wall tents, 2,000 shelter tents, and 500 blankets. Gen. Nelson A. Miles has offered his services in relief work.

In addition to the $75,000 forwarded by Philadelphia to San Francisco, the citizens' permanent Relief Committee sent $100,000 to Gov. Pardee yesterday and $25,000 to the Mayor of Tacoma for the purchase of supplies. The Finance Committee of Councils also appropriated $100,000 for the sufferers. All this money is made available immediately.

The first relief train from Philadelphia left last night for San Francisco laden with medicines, surgical appliances, water, food, clothing, tents, bedding, &c. All these necessaries were contributed by merchants.

Philadelphia to date has contributed nearly half a million dollars to the fund. Among the greatest contributions are $60,000 collected by the newspapers, $18,000 by the Red Cross Society, and $13,000 donated by Brown Brothers & Co., bankers. Public contribution boxes have been placed all over the city by various charity organizations. Relief collections will be taken up at the churches to-day.

The Pittsburg Relief Committee announced yesterday that it had raised $225,000. This included the $20,000 contributed by the Carnegie Steel Corporation, but not the $25,000 donated by the Carnegie Hero Fund. A representative of the steel corporation at Portland, Oregon, received $25,000 by wire yesterday from his company, so that immediate relief might be entered upon by Pittsburg. Arrangements were also made by which a carload of supplies will be sent west every day beginning to-morrow. On Saturday a train laden with necessaries will start for San Francisco.

Charles L. Taylor, President of the Carnegie Hero Fund, announced to-night that arrangements have been made to land $25,000 worth of supplies at the San Francisco Harbor on Tuesday night or Wednesday morning. Instructions were sent to Santa Barbara yesterday to charter a vessel and ship the supplies at once. This makes the total subscription of the Carnegie Hero Fund $50,000.

Theatrical managers are also planning an immense benefit performance, which is quite aside from the benefit performance which each theatre will give during the week.

Commander in Chief Tanner of the G. A. R. sent out an appeal yesterday from Washington, calling upon every post in the country to show its spirit of fraternity and charity to the destitute in San Francisco. He asked that every post assemble at once, make contributions as quickly as possible, and forward them to the Red Cross representatives at Oakland. Charles Hallam Keep, treasurer of the National Red Cross Association, said in Washington yesterday that he had received $38,955 for the relief fund.

A meeting held in Baltimore yesterday under the auspices of the Red Cross, resulted in the collection of $50,000 for the relief fund.

Duluth, Minn., and Superior have combined in the contribution of $25,000, while the Mystic Shriners of Toronto, Canada, forwarded $25,000. To this Rameses Temple of Toronto has added $1,000. Houston, Texas, wired last night that the townspeople had raised $10,000 for the fund, $7,300 having been collected by The Houston Post. Galveston has wired $1,000 and raised $3,500 of the $10,000 fund which it has decided to contribute. Every other city and town in Texas has started a fund and reports indicate that $100,000 has already been raised. The Scottish Rite Masons contributed $1,000 last night.

Up-State towns have not been backward in starting relief subscriptions. Schenectady has denied itself the pleasure of a Fourth of July carnival which was being planned, and decided last night to give the $6,000 which it had raised for this purpose to the San Francisco fund. At Elmira the Chamber of Commerce and other business associations reported yesterday that several thousand dollars had been raised, while Rome forwarded $3,000 last night. Dr. W. J. P. Kinsley, former Mayor of Elmira, contributed $1,000 of this amount, the remainder being voted by the Royal Arcanum.

The Chamber of Commerce of Watertown also contributed $6,300. Utica gave $4,000, and Troy $3,795. The State President of the Order of Eagles, John D. Sloane of Yonkers, has ordered an assessment of 25 cents per head on all members of the order. Benefit performances and church collections will swell the fund there.

The Mayor of North Plainfield, N. J., made a request yesterday that Gov. Stokes of New Jersey call the Legislature in session to subscribe $1,000,000 of the State surplus to the San Francisco relief fund. It was reported last night that it was not likely the vote would be carried, as one-third of the State surplus of $3,000,000 was thought to be too much. However, a big contribution is expected. New Jersey towns are individually coming forward with donations. Plainfield itself has given $1,107, Paterson $5,000, and Mayor Johnson is appealing for more, reminding the Paterson citizens that during their town's great fire in 1902 one of the first cities to forward relief was San Francisco.

In Newark the Masons contributed $1,000, the United Workmen $5,000, and the Firemen's Association $200. Much more is promised.

Hoboken's Committee of Twenty-five has contributed $4,000. It is expected that $50,000 more will be raised among the citizens in a few days. A benefit has been arranged to take place at the Lyric Theatre there.

Passaic telegraphed $2,500 to San Francisco last night, while the Mayor of Bayonne issued an appeal to the people for funds and appointed a committee to receive them. Many donations have already been made.

Red Bank, N. J., reported last night that two citizens went afound town yesterday and between them collected $700.

HOMES FOR THE STRICKEN.

Rent Free for a Year Proposed by Pittsburg Real Estate Men.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 21.—If plans set going to-day can be carried out 1,000 stricken families will be carried free from San Francisco to Pittsburg, where they will receive homes rent free for one year and at the same time heads of the families will have all the work they can do in order that they may once more get a start in life.

This novel plan of helping the destitute in the Far West was decided on to-day by several real estate men and persons with money. John Murphy, a banker, made the public announcement that he would give ten of his houses rent free for one year to families from the coast and would also give steady employment not only to the heads of these families, but many more that might come with the others. Mr. Murphy had several long conferences with other business men and said this evening:

"We have decided to ask the California Relief Fund Association here to work with us in this plan for helping the people of stricken California. If they will spend part of the money turned in for help, in bringing 1,000 families who want to leave the coast, to Pittsburg, we will give them their houses rent free for a year. I have not many houses, but I will donate ten for the year. The many men I talked to to-day are in favor of my plan, and I am satisfied that it will be a go. There are thousands in San Francisco who want to get away from there now—to leave the region forever, but they have lost their all, and now is the time to set them up in homes and in work. There is $20,000,000 worth of building alone planned for Pittsburg this Summer, and we shall be scarce of help."

RELIEF FROM THE WEST.

Trains Carrying Supplies—The Generosity of One Woman.

OAKLAND, Cal., April 21.—Mrs. Hugh Crum, a wealthy property owner of San Francisco, reported to the relief committee to-day that all her income-bearing property has been destroyed, but that she had a little money in the banks, which she proposed to divide equally with the relief committee. She therefore subscribed $10,000 to the relief fund.

Many other persons in comfortable circumstances are coming to the aid of the committee.

The Transportation Committee of the General Relief Committee arranged for the free deportation, via the Southern Pacific and Santa Fé Railroads, of more than 1,000 persons yesterday.

The Santa Fé has volunteered to carry free, upon the recommendation of the Relief Committee all worthy destitute persons to any place in California. The Southern Pacific is willing to carry them free to the limits of its system, to Portland on the north and El Paso on the south. This service, as well as the provisions and housing service continues day and night.

A steady stream of refugees is pouring into the relief headquarters.

LOS ANGELES, April 21.—Another relief train of seventeen cars, loaded with miscellaneous provisions for the San Francisco sufferers, left Los Angeles last night.

All of the ministers of this city determined yesterday to offer to open their church buildings for the shelter of the destitute women and children who may arrive here from San Francisco.

DENVER, April 21.—A relief train of seventeen cars loaded with provisions, clothing, &c., was dispatched last night via the Union Pacific. The train will have the right of way, and should arrive in Oakland on Monday. Another relief train will leave to-night. Contributions are being collected in all the towns of Colorado and forwarded direct.

TACOMA, April 21.—The Chamber of Commerce has wired to Washington for permission to send the cable ship Burnside to San Francisco with supplies. Massachusetts has placed $500,000 in the hands of Stove & Webster to distribute for the relief of California sufferers. It will be used to buy supplies in Tacoma, Seattle, Portland, and Salt Lake City. About $25,000 worth of Massachusetts's supplies went forward to-day.

MANSFIELD PLANS A BENEFIT.

To Rebuild the Bohemian Club, Which Entertained Famous Men.

Special to The New York Times.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, April 21.—Richard Mansfield proposes to give a great benefit at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, to rebuild and re-establish the Bohemian Club of San Francisco, at which most of the literary men and artists of the world have been guests. Mr. Mansfield will ask the co-operation of all newspapers, artists, and writers in the United States.

LIKE A WRINKLED APPLE.

Sir Martin Conway's Illustration of the Cooling Earth.

The cooling of the earth and the subsequent shrinking of the surface, according to Sir Martin Conway, F. R. G. S., the noted British mountain climber, who arrived here yesterday on the Cunarder Campania, caused the great San Francisco earthquake.

"The Western mountain range, extending through North and South America, is constantly growing," said Sir Martin. "As the cooling process goes on the earth shrinks, and, like the skin on a drying apple, as the sphere gets smaller the outer covering settles in some places and in others is forced up in ridges.

"These ridges are the mountains. Now, as the process goes on, the ridges get forced further up. The mountains in the West grow probably six feet in a century. This being so, every once in a while something slips, and then we have a disaster like that in San Francisco.

"Two or three shocks may come in succession, and then there will be no other disturbance for a hundred years. No one can tell when they are coming. Why this earthquake happened on the west side of the mountain range, and not on the east, is, I suppose, because that is the weaker side."

CANADA'S SYMPATHY.

Roosevelt Replies That It Is Greatly Appreciated Here.

Special to The New York Times.

OTTAWA, Ontario, April 21.—Earl Grey, Governor General of Canada, has received the following in reply to a telegram of sympathy in connection with the San Francisco disaster from Theodore Roosevelt:

"I thank you for the kind message of sympathy, which I assure you I deeply appreciate."

Losses of Wells, Fargo & Co.

The New York General Agent of Wells, Fargo & Co. received word yesterday from the General Manager of their San Francisco branch, who was at Oakland, that all the company's property had been destroyed, with the exception of the horses, all of which had been apparently saved. The Southern Pacific officers here have been in communication with their employes at Oakland, but so far have received no word from San Francisco.

CIRCUS VANS COLLECT TRAINLOAD OF SUPPLIES

Four-Horse Wagons Canvass the City in Sufferers' Behalf.

MEET A GENEROUS RESPONSE

The Railroads Promise to Get Contributions of Necessities Through in Five Days—A Second Trainload to Follow.

The first trainload of supplies and clothing collected by the management of the Barnum & Bailey Circus for the San Francisco sufferers will start for the coast to-day about noon. It required only a day for the circus vans to collect enough to fill fifteen cars.

The press agent had spoken in large terms of "one hundred wagons, drawn by four and eight-horse teams, making a simultaneous start in Manhattan and Brooklyn," yesterday morning.

Twenty-two four-horse wagons did canvass in Manhattan, and two in Brooklyn. Manhattan was covered as far north as Forty-fourth Street.

A train load was collected. It is probable that the circus wagons will canvass Brooklyn more thoroughly next week, and that another train load may be gathered. The circus moved to Brooklyn last night, but Lewis E. E. Cooke, general agent of the Barnum & Bailey Show, says other wagons may canvass Manhattan above Forty-second Street.

Several newspaper wagons are collecting contributions of clothing and food, and the New York Central has agreed to transfer free of charge everything collected as far as Chicago, and the Harriman lines, including the Union Pacific, the Southern Pacific, and the Northwestern routes, will hurry it along to the coast.

The twenty-two vans and their complements of four men worked until 9 o'clock last night, gathering contributions and loading them directly into a string of cars, which the New York Central had placed at Eleventh Avenue and Thirty-third Street. At midnight they had to move the circus to Brooklyn, but the men on the wagons went about the work as if they were on a holiday outing.

Mr. Cooke, who suggested the relief plan to the Barnum & Bailey management, and who looked after the execution of the plan, received word that two cars of provisions would be ready to join the circus train at Albany, two at Rochester, two or three at Buffalo, one at Toledo, and two or three at Omaha.

Two cars were filled at Newark, N. J., in one day. Other cities are to be heard from, and it is probable that the first circus relief train will gather some thirty-five or forty cars, and will have to enter San Francisco in two sections. Omaha has already sent seven cars.

The Harriman lines have agreed to transfer as fast as possible as many cars as are sent. The first train will go by way of Cheyenne, and will reach San Francisco in five days. It will stop only at the larger cities, where a carload or more is ready, and then it will be necessary to delay only long enough to hitch on.

The collecting vans made a start yesterday morning from Brooklyn Bridge. On both sides of each was a huge sign which said: "Contributions for the San Francisco sufferers received and delivered to the Relief Committee there immediately by fast expresses to the coast." The men on the wagons didn't have to get out and make appeals. Their coming was heralded by a crowd of small boys, who entered as much into the spirit of the thing as if a real circus parade was in progress.

Smaller wagons went into the district below the Brooklyn Bridge to collect supplies from wholesale stores that had sent offers. In those districts no small things were offered. Hundreds and hundreds of sacks of flour, cases upon cases of canned goods, stacks of tents, blankets, and quilts, and almost everything else that the sufferers need were piled into the big red circus vans.

Having canvassed the wholesale district, where the most generous gifts were secured, the wagons started up town, two wagons to a street. The circus wagons attracted crowds of small boys whom school did not claim on Saturday. Heralded by these, people came out of their houses and gave old hats, old shoes, a single sack of flour now and then, a can of sardines, a pillow, an oil stove, overcoats, blankets, a can of baking powder, anything and everything.

A bencher wandered over from Tompkins Square to see what all the excitement was about when the wagons stopped near there. He saw a woman giving some clothes. He scratched his beard a moment, and pulling off his overcoat he threw it in at the rear gate of one of the wagons. The boys howled.

The most picturesque part of the journey was that made by the two vans that circled through Chinatown and made a triumphal march up the Bowery. Rice by the hundred pounds was picked up in Chinatown, for they seemed to know there were Chinese to be fed in the dim West somewhere.

A little Chinese girl ran out of a house in Doyers Street, holding up a big jar of candied mandarines. They were refused because no hopes were had of the jar ever reaching San Francisco unbroken. The little girl was disappointed. The Chinese threw sacks of nuts into the wagon.

The guards had never seen anything that looked like them before, but they of Doyers and Pell Streets said they "velly good eat," and they were taken along. A Chinaman tried to put in a lot of precious sharks' fins, but the guards wouldn't have them.

The contributions of the Bowery were varied. A German who keeps a delicatessen store was insulted because a whole limburger cheese was not accepted. A clothing store keeper gave a silk-figured waistcoat, which he said would fit anybody.

"Tim" McCarnahan, well known in the Tenderloin because of his unusual way of looking at things, for a boy, went over to the train early last night. Tim is 12, and he can read the papers he sells. He climbed into one of the rear cars, where Mr. Cooke was superintending the packing away of a lot of flour and other things given by wholesale houses.

Tim's face wore the stern expression habitual to him when most in earnest. He pulled a cigar box, cut full of holes, from his pocket, when he asked for "de boss o' de outfit."

"Dis," he said, pointing to the cigar box, "is Nifty, an' he's a peach. I see by de papes dat you're goin' to sen' somethin' to San Francisco ter he'p de people whut de earthquick an' de fire didn't kill. Say, I raised Nifty, an' he's the best I got, an' I guess I'll let him go all right. Of course, nobody can eat him, but eatin' ain't everything."

"What good is Nifty?" asked Mr. Cooke.

"Good? Why, he'd make a dog laugh, he cuts up so. An', say, I see by de papes dat de folks are starvin'. Well, Nifty kin make you ferget yer're hungry; he kin make you laugh. I knows; he's done me that way many a time."

"Well, what the dickens is Nifty, anyway?" asked Mr. Cooke.

"Nifty?" asked Tim, in surprise that any one shouldn't know about him. "Why, Nifty is a rat whut's got more sense in a minute than any other rat that ever lived."

"Rat in this carload of flour!" exclaimed Mr. Cooke. The other men began to yell, and so did Mr. Cooke, and then he caught a full glance at Tim's face and didn't. Tim went away in high dudgeon.

Late last night Mr. Cooke received a telegram from Mayor Schmitz of San Francisco, who is a personal friend. The telegram was in answer to one from him asking what was most needed. The Mayor expressed the city's gratitude for the offered provisions, but emphasized the necessity immediately of blankets, disinfectants, and small change. He asked that all money that was sent be split into small currency, of which there was at present a great lack.

Mr. Cooke leaves Monday for San Francisco. He will stop at a number of cities along the route to complete the arrangements for the offering of carloads of necessities that may be attached to relief trains following that of to-day.

STAGE FOLK RALLYING TO 'FRISCO'S RELIEF

Almost Every Theatre in Town Plans a Benefit.

FROM STAR TO STAGE HAND

Mark Twain Presides While Casino Plans Performance—Joe Weber's Benefit Bazaar—Boston Lifts Sunday Law.

The theatrical people along Broadway with whom San Francisco was always a favorite "stand" are coming promptly to her aid. An ever-increasing number of benefits is being planned. Announcements of new ones come in daily. Everybody connected with the playhouses, from the star who gives her $1,000 services to the stage hand who turns in his $1.50 wage, seems to be stirred by a genuine wish to do something toward helping the fallen city of the West.

As a well-known actress put it last night: "San Francisco always held out both hands to stage people. Now comes our chance to show her in ever so little a way that we haven't forgotten her."

The successful benefit performances at the Hippodrome yesterday, at the Empire Theatre the night before, and others earlier in the week, will be followed this week and next by many more.

At a meeting at the Casino Theatre yesterday morning, Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, her sister, Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., and other well-known persons, including Mark Twain, who presided, considered ways and means for relieving the sufferers. They decided upon a big benefit performance at the Casino some day this week.

Next Tuesday, from the stage of the Casino, Margaret Anglin will sell at auction the seats for the performance. The programme already includes Mrs. Fiske in a one-act play, Henry Woodruff in the third act of "Brown of Harvard," Arnold Daly in "The Man of Destiny," Miss Anglin in a one-act play, De Wolf Hopper and the "Elysium girls" from "Happyland," Fenton and Ross, Joseph Coyne, and the "bootblack girls" from "The Social Whirl."

There will be a benefit performance of "Arms and the Man," with Arnold Daly, at the Lyric Theatre to-morrow afternoon.

David Belasco has announced a special performance of "The Girl of the Golden West," with Blanche Bates, and recitations by David Warfield for the afternoon of May 1. Thursday, May 3, at the Bijou Theatre, Mr. Warfield will appear in a special benefit matinée of "The Music Master."

James K. Hackett and Mary Mannering are to-day giving a benefit performance of "The Walls of Jericho" at the Tremont Theatre, Boston. A special license was obtained from the Mayor of Boston permitting the use of scenery and costumes on Sunday. Broadway has expressed the hope that Mayor McClellan will follow this example and grant special licenses for Sunday night benefits.

A cablegram was received yesterday from George C. Tyler, managing Director of Liebler & Co., who is now in Italy, directing that every possible resource possessed by the firm be placed at the disposal of those in charge of any benefit or relief plan for the San Francisco sufferers. Arrangements have been made with the Directors of the benefit planned to take place at the Metropolitan Opera House May 4, by which Elsie Janis, the Constantine sisters, Otis Harlan, and Henry V. Donnelly will appear.

In addition to two benefit performances already announced for April 24 and May 1 Joe Weber will open, at 10 o'clock to-morrow morning, his bazaar in the big storeroom of the Gilsey House. Many local merchants have sent in generous contributions. Marie Dressler, Flora Zabelle, Bonnie Maginn, and other principals of the company, will act as salespeople, while the chorus will be floor walkers and cash girls. The company will be at the storeroom during the week daily from 10 in the morning until 4 in the afternoon. Specialties by Joe Weber, Marie Dressler, Bonnie Maginn, and Flora Zabelle will be added to attract purchasers.

Walter N. Lawrence, manager of the Madison Square Theatre, has started a traveling box office for the sale of reserved seats for four special performances of "Mrs. Temple's Telegram" in behalf of the San Francisco sufferers. The performances begin Monday evening and end Wednesday evening. The entire receipts, including those of Wednesday matinée, will be denoated for the relief work.

Two carriages labeled "Traveling Box Office of the Madison Square Theatre" will leave the theatre Monday at 11 o'clock carrying five members of the company. They will be driven downtown to the financial district, stopping at frequent points en route, and giving business men, bankers, and brokers every opportunity to purchase liberally.

Barnum & Bailey's circus will give the proceeds of both Brooklyn performances to-morrow to the relief fund. Besides this the management has made arrangements to receive clothing and food in all cities between here and San Francisco. The officials of the New York Central Railroad have offered Edward Arlington, traffic manager of the circus, every possible assistance in shipping supplies. The circus sent its wagons over from Brooklyn yesterday to collect contributions from house to house in Manhattan. The first supply train left the Grand Central Station at 7 o'clock last night, with a special car for money contributions.

Hyde & Behman will give to the relief fund the gross receipts of five Brooklyn Theatres, including Hyde & Behman's, the Grand Opera House, the Folly, the Star, and the Gaiety, at the matinées next Tuesday afternoon.

A benefit performance at Miner's Eighth Avenue Theatre next Sunday night will include all the burlesque shows now in New York City which have played in San Francisco.

It was announced yesterday that the proceeds of the Actors' Fund Benefit, to be held at the Academy of Music April 29, will go to San Francisco instead of to the treasury of the Actors' Fund. This money will be used especially for the relief of destitute theatrical people in and about the burned city. Lillian Russell will be one of the features of the programme.

The receipts of "The Lion and the Mouse" at to-morrow night's performance at the Lyceum Theatre will be devoted to the California sufferers.

Charles Burnham, President of the New York Theatrical Managers' Association, has been authorized by the Theatrical Protective Union to announce that stage hands for the Metropolitan Opera House benefit on May 4 will be furnished free of charge. Scores of musicians have volunteered their services.

The committee for the benefit planned in aid of Henry J. Barnabee and the widow of W. H. MacDonald, to be given on May 17, received a letter from Mr. Barnabee yesterday, expressing the wish of Mrs. MacDonald and himself that the testimonial be waived and that all efforts of the committee be devoted to helping the San Francisco sufferers. Mr. Barnabee offers his own professional services in their behalf. The committee has decided to postpone the testimonial till next season.

INSURANCE UP HERE FOLLOWING 'FRISCO FIRE

25 Per Cent. Increase in Congested Districts Demanded.

TO HELP PAY BIG LOSSES

Total Insurance Loss Estimated to be Under $200,000,000—A Severe Strain.

In view of the great drain which the San Francisco fire will put upon fire insurance capital, fire insurance rates have begun to rise. The Home Insurance Company of New York took the first step yesterday, demanding 25 per cent. increase in rates upon all risks in the congested districts of Manhattan and Brooklyn. This step was taken independently of the New York Fire Insurance Exchange, the rating bureau, and will undoubtedly be followed by other companies.

About one-twelfth of the premiums income of the country comes from New York City, and a considerable proportion of the New York policies expire in May, so that an increase in rates at this time means a considerable increase in income.

Fire underwriters began to get definite information as to the burned areas in San Francisco yesterday, and the figures so far received confirm their belief of Friday that the maximum damage for which the companies may be held liable cannot equal $200,000,000. The belief now is that more of the city has been saved than had been expected. The advices from Oakland yesterday also confirm the approximate estimate that the outstanding insurance in San Francisco was about $238,880,000, as published in THE TIMES on Friday.

Dspite many rumors as to the condition of some of the companies, underwriters are busily engaged in preparing to meet the losses. Some of the companies have net surpluses more than sufficient to meet their claims, while others are arranging for more capital. The Union Insurance Company of Philadelphia, for instance, has issued a call to its stockholders to meet on Tuesday to vote on a resolution to increase its capital from $200,000 to $500,000 in order to insure its ability to pay all losses. The Hartford Fire Insurance Company, which heads the list of losers because it is responsible for the policies of the New York Underwriters' Agency as well as its own, has a net surplus of $5,150,006. George L. Chase, President of the company, said yesterday: "From latest advices received we are satisfied that our losses at San Francisco will be well within our surplus."

Henry Evans, President of the Continental Insurance Company, said yesterday:

"Assuming everything in the burned district to be totally destroyed, the Continental's loss will be measured by $2,350,000. The loss-paying ability of a fire insurance company is measured by its net assets; that is, the capital and net surplus. The reinsurance reserve and other liability items cannot be used for the payment of the San Francisco losses."

The American assets of many of the foreign companies will be left intact, by reason of the decision of the home office managers to authorize drafts on London for California loss payments. Consequently, a statement of the San Francisco liabilities of these companies and their American assets would furnish a totally misleading idea of their ability to stand the payment of losses.

There is no question that the amount of fire insurance capital in the United States will be greatly reduced by this fire, and underwriters would not be surprised to see some of the smaller companies go into voluntary liquidation after losses are paid. A company which loses its net surplus and 25 per cent. of its capital stock is required to make up its impairment or wind up its business. In the latter case, other outstanding business is an asset, and under such circumstances would be reinsured in another company.

The list of companies having written business in San Francisco does not show all the companies liable for losses there; for the reason that many lines were partly reinsured both here and abroad. A list of net losses in some of the outside companies follows:

Europe Insurance Company of Berlin, $3,000; Individual Fire Underwriters of St. Louis, $40,000; Individual Underwriters' Association, (John R. Waters,) $214,625; Jefferson Fire Insurance Company of Philadelphia, $20,000; La Confiance Insurance Company of Paris, $2,000; La Metropole Insurance Company of Paris, $5,000; La National Insurance Company of Paris, $3,500; La Paternelle Insurance Company of Paris, $7,000; La Polar of Bilboa, Spain, $3,500; Le Soleil Insurance Company of Paris, $3,000; L'Union Insurance Company of Paris, $6,500; L'Urbaine Insurance Company of Paris, $3,500; New Brunswick Fire Insurance Company of New Brunswick, N. J., $25,000; Standard of Amsterdam, $3,500.

The San Francisco fire has shown that the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway invested $251,265 in premiums to provide fire insurance, while the Southern Pacific spent only $10,042.

The Federal Census Bureau's report on cities having a population of 25,000 or more in 1903 contained some interesting facts as to San Francisco's fire equipment. Ninth in population, that city had 500 firemen against 1,273 in Chicago, 38 fire engines against 123 in Chicago, and 85,000 feet of hose as against 207,491 feet in Chicago. Not one of San Francisco's 4,104 fire hydrants was owned by the city in that year. New York in 1903 had 24,886 fire hydrants, of which only 3,019 were not owned by the city. Chicago had 19,922 fire hydrants, all owned by the city. San Francisco's case was duplicated by New Orleans and Indianapolis, neither of which cities owned any of its fire hydrants.

MAY CONTEST FIRE LOSSES.

Canadian Companies Protected by Earthquake Clause.

Special to The New York Times.

TORONTO, Ontario, April 21.—Much litigation, in the opinion of James J. Kenny, Vice President and Managing Director of the Western Assurance Company, and Vice President of the British American Assurance Company, will arise over the question as to whether the companies are liable for damage caused by the San Francisco earthquake itself or by the blowing up of buildings to check the spread of the flames.

Mr. Kenny's remarks were construed to mean that the Canadian companies may decide to contest payment of such losses. He explained that the form of policies in general use in San Francisco all contain a clause covering earthquakes as follows:

"If a building or any part thereof fall, except as a result of fire, all insurance by this policy on such building or its contents shall immediately cease."

A number of companies add the following clause:

"This company shall not be liable for loss caused directly or indirectly by invasion, earthquake, insurrection, riot, civil war or commotion, or the military or usurped power, or by order of any civil authority."

Underwriters, moreover, were not at all agreed as to whether the insurance companies are liable on the property destroyed by the blowing up of buildings to prevent the spread of the fire. Some held that the companies must pay if such instructions are given by the Mayor of the city, but many other underwriters maintained that the clauses in their policies protected them on this point.

Mr. Kenny pointed out also that the estimate of $2,000,000 as the losses of the two Canadian companies with which he is connected, was unreasonable. These premiums cover a large area of the city, and only half the business portion of San Francisco, according to his advices, was destroyed.

GERMAN COMPANIES' LOSSES.

Not So Great as at Baltimore Fire, They Say.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, April 21.—The German insurance companies report that their losses in San Francisco are not so considerable as to entail serious consequences.

Their losses, it is stated, are much less, in fact, than those suffered in the great fire at Baltimore.

OPERA COMPANY LOST ALL.

Prima Donnas, Homeward Bound, Tell of Narrow Escapes.

Special to The New York Times.

OGDEN, Utah, April 21.—Twenty-two members of the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York, on their way home from San Francisco, passed through Ogden this afternoon on the Overland Limited. In the party were Mme. Sembrich, Miss Edyth Walker, Miss Emma Abott, Signor Caruso, Conductor Hertz, M. Campanari, Mr. Parvis, M. Dufriche, Mme. Dufriche, Miss Fremstad, M. Rossi, Mr. Goerlitz, M. Dippel, M. Plançon, Miss Jacoby, M. Paroli, Mme. Homer and her husband, Mr. Allen, M. Journet, M. Bars, and M. Reiss.

The greater part of the company, including the chorus and the musicians, is going by way of Los Angeles and New Orleans, via the Southern route, by special train. All of the costumes and scenery were lost in the fire of the Grand Opera House, in which they had just opened to a splendid audience. Not one of the company was injured in the least.

Mme. Sembrich said she estimated her loss at about $40,000. She was fortunate in recovering her pearls, which were with her in the apartment at the St. Francis Hotel. She said it was an awful experience.

"I am only too glad to be out with my life," said Mme. Sembrich to THE TIMES correspondent. "I was on the sixth floor of the hotel and was asleep when the first shock was felt just after 5 o'clock in the morning. I jumped out of bed and ran into the street with nothing on but my night robe. After remaining for more than an hour in the square opposite the hotel, I returned to my apartment and dressed. It was at this time that I saved my jewels.

"It was remarkable how the people stayed together. I was taken to the home of Dr. Harry Tavis. He said he intended remaining with the ladies, even though he lost all he had. He was true to the promise, for he witnessed his beautiful home burning and did not leave us for a moment. It showed to me the spirit of the American people."

Mr. Georlitz said: "We are all safe and on our way home. The others of our party left by way of New Orleans yesterday, via the Southern route. We lost all our scenery, costumes, and instruments. I stayed at the Opera House until I was convinced it was doomed. I thought that, as the building was fireproof, it would be safe. Fires were then all around the building. I lost all my personal effects, escaping with nothing but the clothes I have on my back.

"I have found it necessary to purchase a shirt and socks in your city. Before the fire reached the Opera House I fully intended to give a matinée of 'The Marriage of Figaro.' All of the musicians and myself worked till we were ordered away, trying to save the property, but it was without avail."

Conductor Hertz said in a jocular way: "I am wearing Caruso's shirt, and I'm glad to be able to do so. I brought a souvenir of the fire." He showed a key to Room 516 of the Palace Hotel.

Signor Caruso said: "I was occupying a room at the Palace Hotel, and was awakened about 5:10 o'clock by the first shock. That big hotel danced a jig for several minutes, and then returned to its natural position. That is one of the things which I cannot understand, and I suppose never will. After the structure had regained its natural position I ran to the street. It is a miracle that some of us were not killed, because the débris in a very short time had the streets blocked. The steel skyscrapers were toppling, and I could see eight or nine afire from where I was standing."

Mr. Dippel said that his loss would probably reach $25,000.

Miss Abott said she had apartments on the top floor of the Palace Hotel. When the shock came she rushed down to find the streets crowded with people rushing frantically backward and forward. An attempt was made to hire expressmen to remove their trunks, but it was unsuccessful, and their belongings burned with the hotel.

Miss Abott was loud in her praise of the people of San Francisco. She said there was no such panic as might have been expected. On the contrary, people were orderly.

The train arrived at 3:40 P. M. and left soon after 4 o'clock. In the brief time intervening the party was busy going about the little stores near the station purchasing wearing apparel. Several sent telegrams to New York, advising relatives and friends of their arrival here, and informing them of the time they would reach home. All the members of the party voiced the sentiment that they had gone through an experience which they never will forget.

MEANS AN OPERA DEFICIT.

Properties Worth $150,000 Gone—Profits Wiped Out.

Heinrich Conried says he finds himself facing a deficit as a result of the San Francisco disaster, although otherwise the season has been a most prosperous one.

"The profits of the opera season are wiped out by the San Francisco disaster," said Mr. Conried yesterday. "Scenery and stage properties that cost $150,000 are gone, together with costumes and instruments.

"We must return the $118,000 advance subscriptions received in San Francisco, and also pay the artists up to the end of their contracts, although we shall give no more performances.

"I have the assurance that all my company are safe, for which I am deeply thankful. Had anything happened to them it would have ended my career as an operatic manager."

VAUDEVILLE ACTOR KILLED.

Telegram, at Least, Says Nocke Lost His Life in the Disaster.

Alonzo Nicholas of 372 Elm Street, Arlington, N. J., who is in the supply department of the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company, received a telegram yesterday from Manchester, N. H., that his brother-in-law, Thomas L. P. Nocke, whose home is in Arlington, had been killed in the San Francisco disaster.

The message was from another brother-in-law, Edwin Musselman, who is an actor and was playing in San Francisco. Mr. Nichols was not inclined to accept the news as final.

Nocke is a vaudeville actor, going under the stage name of Louis Marney. He was playing at the Empire Theatre in San Francisco. His wife lives at 87 Sussex Avenue, Arlington, and he has four children.

UNLIMITED TRANSFERS FOR SAN FRANCISCO

Secretary of the Treasury Shaw Takes $10,000,000 Limit Off.

TO DO ALL HE CAN TO AID

Sub-Treasury Has Now Sent Nearly $6,000,000 to San Francisco Banks —Quarters in Oakland.

Secretary of the Treasury Leslie M. Shaw visited the Sub-Treasury yesterday and conferred with the local officials in regard to the transfer of funds to San Francisco and other matters connected with the plans of the Treasury Department to assist San Francisco to the fullest possible extent. After the conference it was announced that the Secretary had authorized telegraphic transfer to San Francisco in unlimited amount, having removed the $10,000,000 limit which he had placed on such transfers on Thursday.

The Sub-Treasury has already sent forward to San Francisco a total of $5,816,000, including $1,316,000 transferred yesterday, and it is expected that further transfers in large amount will be made during the coming week.

Secretary Shaw said yesterday that it was his desire to do everything possible to help the banks in San Francisco, and in any other way in his power to better the conditions in that city. Secretary Shaw is willing to make additional deposits of Government funds with the National banks in San Francisco. It is known that he has determined to increase the deposits in any of the National banks there which may be in a position to accept deposits. All that they will have to do to get the money is to make the request of the Treasury Department and present collateral of the class which has been accepted in the case of other special deposits.

The local Sub-Treasury was advised yesterday that steps have been taken by the Assistant Treasurer at San Francisco to establish the Sub-Treasury offices in temporary quarters in Oakland. It is assumed here that the reason for the transfer of the Sub-Treasury offices from San Francisco, where they might have been opened in the mint building, to Oakland, was that the Sub-Treasury would in this way be better able to serve the banks, which are expected to conduct business temporarily in Oakland while awaiting an opportunity to find serviceable quarters in San Francisco.

No further deposits of bonds were made with the Sub-Treasury yesterday in connection with gold imports arranged by the banks. It was announced that another engagement of $1,250,000 in gold had been made by a New York bank in London, which may have represented a withdrawal from the Bank of England of part of the gold which was announced as having been engaged on Friday. In addition to the $1,316,000 transferred through the Sub-Treasury to San Francisco, $250,000 was transferred to Chicago. Further direct shipments by express were made by the banks yesterday to various Pacific Coast points, but the total of these shipments was said to be much smaller yesterday than on Friday, when close to $3,000,000 was forwarded by express.

Sterling exchange advanced yesterday and closed strong. Demand sterling advanced about [illegible] points, to [illegible], and cables at the close were quoted as high as 4.8510.

BANKS MAY CLOSE A WHILE.

California Institutions Are Trying to Readjust Matters.

OAKLAND, April 21.—A meeting of the members of the San Francisco Clearing House was held here to-day to discuss the financial situation, to consider the future of the banks, and to prepare some plan to be submitted to the State Clearing Association, which will meet here next Tuesday. The State Bank Commissioners have reported that all the banks of the State are in splendid condition, but it is believed that the situation demands that some unusual action be taken to prevent any distressing disturbance.

The advisability of having the Government pay out money from the San Francisco Mint on telegraphic orders was considered. The idea of the members was that it might be best to order a general suspension of banking business in the State until a safe readjustment of monetary matters had been reached.

TAFT WOULD CUT COMMISSION

Three Members on Panama Board Sufficient, He Tells Senators.

WASHINGTON, April 21.—Secretary Taft resumed his testimony to-day before the Senate Committee on Inter-Oceanic Canals.

He said Congress should pass an act reducing the commission to three members, and that the three men should have their headquarters on the Isthmus.

NO SALT WATER MAINS FOR AT LEAST A [redacted]

Commissioner Says [redacted]ake That Long to [redacted]em.

NOT BEGUN [redacted]ANHATTAN

Fate of San Francisco Emphasizes the Need of Haste in Installing the New Mains.

So many delays have occurred that this city may not have its auxiliary salt water fire service installed and ready for use for another year. This information was obtained from Commissioner Ellison of the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity yesterday in answer to many inquiries that have been made since the fire in San Francisco.

The conflagration there emphasizes the need for the salt water service in New York. D. O. Mills, in commenting on the San Francisco situation, declared that in the reconstruction of that city such an auxiliary salt water system would have to be installed. New York's plan for such a system was devised more than two years ago, immediately after the Baltimore fire, and the system has already been installed in a part of Brooklyn. [redacted]n's business section, however, is [redacted]thout this protection.

[redacted] is hard to tell when we can get [redacted]wn to work on the auxiliary system for [redacted]anhattan," said Commissioner Ellison yesterday. "Many grave problems have been presented, the opening of the streets being the principal one. We must consider the business interests of the city and therefore we cannot tear up streets recklessly or indiscriminately. It is necessary to figure what streets can first best be torn up at a single time. The construction of new rapid transit subways and the laying of electrical and other conduits also affects the situation. It will be a year before the auxiliary service is in use in Manhattan."

Mayor McClellan took up the salt water mains question in the first year he was in office. Commissioner Oakley, who was Mr. Ellison's predecessor in office, submitted a voluminous report on December 17, 1904, outlining the entire plan for Brooklyn, Coney Island, and for the section of Manhattan below Twenty-third street. Since that time the Coney Island system has been built and is in use. The system for the rest of Brooklyn is progressing rapidly and will be ready for use in a few months. Bids were called for early this year for installing the system in Manhattan and they were duly opened and tabulated. No contract has been awarded. The Manhattan plan provides for dividing the auxiliary system into three divisions, one for the East Side, one for the financial district downtown, and the other for the dry goods district. The river front, high office building and dry goods sections will thus be fully protected. The plan provides for three big main stations in Manhattan and the cost for the system completed will be in the neighborhood of $5,000,000.

VOLCANOES AND SHOCKS; SOME COMMON ERRORS

Points Discussed for The Times by Dr. Berkey of Columbia.

EARTH PRACTICALLY SOLID

Fault Lines Like That in San Francisco Common — Croton Dam, Oddly Enough, Built on One.

The various comments from day to day on the possible causes of the San Francisco earthquake suggest a few observations on related phenomena and general earth conditions that even the general reader may find interesting. Of the seven representatives of metropolitan dailies, calling for interviews on the morning of the disaster, every one raised, as the first question, the possible connection between the eruptions of Vesuvius and the California earthquake. This may be taken therefore to represent the general enlightened public opinion touching earth phenomena of this class. It reflects a former misconception of the condition of the interior when we were taught that there was but a thin shell of solid rock covering a hot liquid interior.

Condition of the Earth's Interior.

This earlier idea is still prevalent, although generally abandoned by geologists and physicists of to-day. It is no doubt more nearly true that the earth as a whole is solid. Only here and there, locally and temporarily, is there any really fused matter. Although conclusions based on observations made in deep mines, in deep well bores, on geysers, volcanoes, and rock strata that have been deeply buried at some time prove that the interior is highly heated, yet the overlying burden of rock holds it all under so great pressure that only where this equilibrium is temporarily neutralized can fusion take place.

Temperatures rise at the rate of about 1 degree for every 60 or 70 feet of depth as the earth is penetrated. The deep interior is therefore intensely hot, much above the temperature necessary for the fusion of any common rocks, but the so-called fusion point rises rapidly with increase of pressure, so that at the depths where temperatures are high the pressures are also high enough to keep earth matter solid. Near the centre of the earth it has been estimated that it would probably take over 70,000 degrees to fuse ordinary Palisade trap. It is not believed that such enormously high temperatures exist anywhere in the earth, and therefore that it is practically solid through and through in spite of its interior heat.

Volcanic Outbreaks.

If, by any local influence, a special weakness in the overlying strata develops, or if by reason of crushing or chemical change the high temperatures approach nearer the surface than usual, or if, in the process of removal of surface material, by erosion, so much of the capping load is removed that the pressure is not sufficient to keep it solid, then local fusion results. The water that more or less saturates the rock strata is thus raised way beyond its normal steam-forming point, and adds immensely to the danger of an explosion if the overlying load gives way or can be penetrated.

All of this presupposes a somewhat uneven and varying distribution of internal temperatures, the causes [illegible] are more difficult to explain. [illegible] sufficient, however, to say [illegible] general cooling of the whole mass [illegible] corresponding contraction sets up [illegible] in the outer colder layers, for convenience called the crust, which causes folding and other displacements along the weaker zones, and that these are surely one factor. Also sediments that accumulate to great thickness bury their lower members to depths that come within the highly heated zone and there undergo gradual reorganization, involving the chemical recombination that geologists call metamorphism. This may further add materially to the disturbance of the equilibrium that is so essential to stratigraphic stability. In all cases, however, such disturbance is local.

Earth Movements.

Slow adjustments of levels are constantly going on in all regions. Many districts are rising and others subsiding with reference to mean sea level. Still others are being tilted. In the Great Lakes region the southern margin of Lake Superior is being slowly drowned by the canting of the basin. But these slow movements receive little attention. They may in time build great folds, or if the strata breaks they may produce great faults and result in mountain distortions, but they involve ages of time.

Earthquakes.

If, however, in any of these processes there is a sudden displacement, vibrations of short duration are set up, and these, because of their suddenness, are destructive, and are known as earthquakes. It is fairly well established that most earthquakes arise from the sudden giving way or slipping of strata that are being deformed in this way by the stresses accompanying earth movements. Usually the displacement is what is known to geologists as a fault. Rock strata are broken by a fissure, and one wall slips past the corresponding parts of the other, resulting in an escarpment along the fault line.

If once broken, and the stresses relieved, for the time being all is quiet again, but with continuation of the same conditions the process is likely to be renewed with the similar results. This continues until the energy affecting the locality is expended, and once more stability is established. So it happens that earthquakes are frequent in certain regions, and they are all regions known to geologists as places where mountain-forming processes are still active.

Relation of Earthquakes and Volcanoes

Sometimes earthquakes accompany volcanic activity. More often by far they occur wholly independently. The two classes of phenomena are from the nature of the procuring causes most common in similar regions. The instability characterizing regions recently folded into mountains is favorable to both types of activity—both volcanic and seismic. The earth's crust suffers folding and faulting along those lines because they are weaker zones. Faults are known that indicate a displacement of the adjacent ends of the broken strata of several thousand feet. It is not supposed that such an immense movement could take place at any one time, but rather that the movement was going on for many centuries and, for the most part, almost imperceptibly except when a sudden slip of a little greater magnitude set up earthquake vibrations. So long as the movement continues the likelihood of earthquake recurrence remains.

New York Conditions.

Geologic conditions about the city of New York are fairly stable. True, the coast is slowly sinking, so that the Hudson has become but an arm of the sea; but that is going on quietly and at an extremely low rate. It is equally true that the city is built wholly upon the roots of an ancient mountain range, and that the rocks are folded in as complex manner as those of the Rockies; but it was all finished ages ago—so long ago that the mountains themselves have been all worn down and carried particle by particle into the sea. And it is also true that the whole adjacent region has been one of volcanic activity and rather extensive faulting.

The Palisade ridge and the mountainous ridges back of Montclair and Paterson are igneous formations of considerable magnitude that date back to an earlier epoch. But there has been no evidence of renewal since Cretaceous time. Faulting is equally plain, and the weak zones produced thereby are in many cases followed by the present stream valleys.

Hudson Fault Line.

The Hudson itself occupies one of these fault lines. The rock strata on opposite sides of the Hudson River at New York City do not match. New Jersey's side has dropped down until the total displacement is sufficient to bring strata of Mesozoic age on a level with rocks of the early Paleozoic. But the escarpment produced has been worn down so that both sides now present surfaces of no great difference of level. This is probably the largest fault of the district, and, while the movement was in progress, it is reasonable to suppose that earthquake shocks were of frequent occurrence.

How recently this has been no one knows. The physiographic features of the region would lead one to conclude that no movement of this sort has taken place since the Ice Age, and probably for a much longer time. If, however, such movement were once more inaugurated, these old fault lines might be expected to assume again the rôle of weak zones, and such displacements as arose would largely follow them.

In connection with this it is worth while to note the relationship of these principles to local engineering works. In many cases no amount of care can avoid the possible danger of locating permanent works upon or across the known fault lines. Such cases are the Hurson River tunnels. They cross the fault line, but there is no way to avoid it.

In others, however, as for example the new Croton dam for the city water supply, the case is equally clear and seemingly less defensible. The dam is placed upon an old fault following the Croton at that point. That the weak zone is still a reality was shown by the considerable trouble experienced in securing satisfactory foundations for the dam at one spot. If by any chance future quakings should be more severe than the very insignificant ones recorded for New York—sufficient to cause real displacements—it might be expected that this very important structure would be among the first to suffer serious damage. It would seem as though a more stable spot for the dam would have been desirable.

On the whole, however, this region is not a dangerous one. Its activities of this kind are of ancient time, and, so far as the best information along these lines can go, there is no apparent cause for alarm.

ANXIETY FOR TOURISTS NEEDLESS, SAYS 'FRISCO

Crippled Telegraph Companies Simply Can't Send Messages.

THOUSANDS OF THEM WAITING

Names of Many Who Are Safe Already Trickling Through, However, from Other Cities.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 21.—Eastern people need have little solicitude for their friends who were here as tourists at the time of the earthquake. It may safely be asserted that few, if any, such persons have been killed or injured. The casualties, with few exceptions, were confined to the occupants of cheap lodging houses.

As an inevitable result of the catastrophe, people are scattered far and wide, and the destruction of telegraph facilities renders it impossible to find them or to communicate with them. A great many strangers do not know where the temporary offices of the telegraph companies are, and these offices have been necessarily shifted from time to time. Even if the offices could be reached, the facilities for sending messages have been so crippled that the companies, although working incessantly, are unable to give much relief. There are thousands of telegrams at the offices of both companies awaiting transmission.

Many residents of Eastern States are attempting to get word to their friends, but it is almost impossible to get a message sent before a twenty-four-hour wait. The telegraph offices are more than a day behind with messages, so people who have relations and friends here should not worry if they get no word for several days.

Among Eastern refugees who have arrived at Los Angeles from San Francisco are:

Frank K. Quinn, shoe manufacturer, New York.

William Jackson, shoe manufacturer, Baltimore.

D. B. Chandler, commercial traveler, New York.

Guy Adams, Superintendent of Mails for the Rock Island Railroad, and wife, Chicago.

Among those who got to Los Anegeles from San Francisco yesterday are:

Mrs. Thomas Mackie, England; Miss Mary Mackie, England; Miss Mabel Mackie, England; Thomas O'Neal, Birmingham, Ala.; the Rev. S. B. Forbes and wife, Hartford, Conn.; Mrs. H. B. Morris and daughter, Waynesburg, Penn.; J. M. Haig, Baltimore; C. T. Silsby, New York City; Oscar Dauble, New York City; C. C. Schempo, Kingston, N. B.; J. F. Dengler, Weehawken, N. J.; Count Ward, London, England; Mrs. J. Carter, Boston; Reginald Hart, England; N. W. McLeon, New York; Dr. Frank Barker, Rochester, N. Y.; R. F. Lund, Canal Dover, Ohio; E. W. Redpath, Boston; P. Lohrer, New York.

The Santa Fé train known as No. 8, which left Point Richmond, Cal., at 8 P. M., April 20, had among its passengers the following:

Philip Siehr, 723 Fifteenth Street, Milwaukee; J. B. Wagner, Chicago; A. M. Christensen, Chicago; N. Wall, Chicago; Henry Kershaw, 160 Forest Street, Cleveland, Ohio; W. W. Bell, 1,410½ Main Street, Kansas City, Mo.; Fred Gould, St. Louis; William W. Robertson, 1,505 Genesee Street, Kansas City, Mo.; Edward Huff, 122 Yonder Street, Indianapolis; C. V. Henderson, Chicago; H. M. Blair and wife, Memphis, Tenn.; Leopold Cohen, 825 Livingston Avenue, Brooklyn; John Heizlenn, Joseph Heizlenn, and Frank Heizlenn, Sioux City, Iowa; W. A. Kastner, 94 North Dunlop Street, Memphis, Tenn.; Webb S. Wright, 26 North Forge Street, Akron, Ohio; N. Stacey, 34 West Thirteenth Street, New York; A. McMillan, Hillsburg, Ontario, Canada, and Annie Ebtwin, 68 Norwood Avenue, Buffalo, N. Y.

John J. Cunningham, 51 East 100th Street; H. H. Ayuszuk, 240 East Twenty-first Street; F. F. Sebalar, 260 Broadway; F. B. Case, Jr., 237 Broadway, and E. S. Spaulding, wife, and daughter, 1,006 Madison Avenue, all New York City, and Edward Robinson, 7,919 Ferrell Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.

At the offices of the New Haven Railroad in New Haven a message was received yesterday from General Manager Samuel Higgins of the road, saying that he and his family, who were in San Francisco on Tuesday, were safe, after a trying experience. The message was dated at Sacramento.

From Sacramento yesterday came news that the Agoust family of jugglers, who have been appearing in the San Francisco Orpheum, one of whom was reported killed in the earthquake, escaped. They arrived in Sacramento yesterday.

Among other New Yorkers heard from since the San Francisco disaster are the following:

W. J. Brewer of 49 Maiden Lane, who telegraphed from San Francisco on April 18, saying that both he and his business associate, Mr. Hyllstead, and the latter's family, were safe. Mrs. William A. Boland, wife of William A. Boland, banker, of 31 Nassau Street, and her two daughters were in the California Hotel, San Francisco, during the earthquake. They are reported safe. They left San Francisco Friday evening for 416 Comstock Street, Seattle, where a married daughter of Mr. Boland is now residing.

A. Haselton, traveling salesman for Lord & Taylor, escaped personal injury, but lost all his effects.

There is anxiety at New Rochelle for Mrs. Margaret E. Young, wife of the late "Caesar" Young, the bookmaker. Mrs. Young was in San Francisco at the time of the disaster, having gone West a few weeks ago, after returning from Europe. She went to look after the large ranch left by her husband in the vicinity of San Francisco, as well as her interests in the Oakland race track. When last heard from Mrs. Young was at the St. Francis Hotel. Her mother, who lives at 77 Woodlawn Avenue, New Rochelle, has sent several telegrams to Mrs. Young and others in the ruined city, but has received no replies.

James Haithwaite of 342 Ninth Street, Brooklyn, has received a telegram from his father, Albert Haithwaite, who was in San Francisco during the earthquake and the fire that followed, saying that he was perfectly safe, but had lost everything.

Venezuelan Diplomats Soon to Arrive.

WASHINGTON, April 21.—The Venezuelan Legation has been notified that Señor Cardenas, secretary to President Castro, and Gen. Velutini are due in New York on the incoming Red D Line steamer. It is believed that Gen. Velutini is clothed with some diplomatic powers, but their extent and nature are not known here.

MRS. LONGWORTH ILL.

Absent from Wedding of Miss Critten and Congressman Sherley.

Miss Mignon Critten, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. De Frees Critten of Stapleton, S. I., and Congressman Swagar Sherley of Louisville, Ky., were married at the home of the bride's parents yesterday afternoon.

Up to 4 o'clock, the hour set for the ceremony, it was hoped that Secretary Taft and Mrs. Taft and Representative Longworth and Mrs. Longworth would be present, but at that hour telegrams were received saying they would be unable to attend. The telegram from Secretary Taft explained that his absence was unavoidable, owing to the pressure of business arising from the San Francisco disaster, and Mr. Longworth was unable to be present, the telegram said, owing to the illness of Mrs. Longworth.

Archdeacon George D. Johnson of Christ Church, New Brighton, assisted by the Rev. Frank Crowder, performed the ceremony. The decorations included Japanese cherry blossoms, pleasantly suggestive of the Mikado's kingdom, where Miss Critten and Mr. Sherley became engaged. They were both members of the Taft party that visited the Far East.

The bride was given away by her father. Her only attendant was her sister, Miss Madge Critten. The best man was Henry Clifford Smith of Louisville, and the ushers were Arthur Peter and Louis Brownlow of Washington, D. C.; Avery Robinson of Louisville, Ky., and Jack Lory of Bears Spring, Tenn.

Among those present were Congressman John W. Gaines, Congressman W. A. Jones and Mrs. Jones of Virginia, Mrs. T. F. Sherley, Fulton Meadville, Mrs. Meadville, Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. Lewis, Sherley Lewis, and Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Nixon.

The wedding gifts included an aquamarine pendant from the members of the Taft party, a card table from Mrs. Longworth, and a loving cup from the bridegroom's Congressional colleagues of Kentucky.

GEN. MARTIN T. M'MAHON DIES OF PNEUMONIA

Noted Soldier and Judge Expires After One Day's Illness.

HIS FINE CIVIL WAR RECORD

General Sessions Judge Left the Army as a Major General—Held Congressional Medal for Bravery.

Gen. Martin T. McMahon, Judge of the Court of General Sessions, died in his apartments at the Grosvenor, Fifth Avenue and Tenth Street, last night, of pneumonia, after a day's illness.

Gen. McMahon was one of the conspicuous figures of the civil war. He served in the campaigns of the Army of the Potomac, was brevetted a Major General, and received the Congressional medal for bravery. He was President of the National Soldiers' Home for several years, having been connected with the institution since 1870. He was born in Laprairie County, Quebec, Canada, on March 21, 1838.

Early in life Gen. McMahon came to New York, where he received his education. He was graduated from St. John's College, Fordham, in 1855. He got his Master's degree in 1857 and his Alma Mater conferred the degree of Doctor of Laws upon him in 1866.

The legal career of Gen. McMahon began in this city in 1866, when he was appointed Corporation Counsel, serving for two years. Then he was sent to Paraguay as United States Minister. He was Receiver of Taxes in New York from 1873 to 1885, when he was appointed United States Marshal, serving for four years. He was elected to the Assembly in 1890, and the following year became State Senator, serving until 1895.

Gen. McMahon had served on the General Sessions bench since 1896. His term would have expired on Dec. 31, 1909. He was a member of the Catholic, Manhattan, Army and Navy, and Democratic Clubs, the Dunlap Society, the Liederkranz, the Military Order of the Loyal Legion, the Metropolitan Museum of Art, and the Society of the Army of the Potomac.

JO JEFFERSON'S PICTURES.

Modern and Old Paintings Belonging to the Late Actor.

The late Mr. Jefferson was an enthusiastic painter of landscapes, as may be seen by a visit to the Blakeslee Galleries, where a number are shown. He was also a good judge of modern and old Dutch paintings, and of British portraits of the Reynolds-Gainsborough school, as appears from the pictures belonging to his estate, which hang in the American Art Galleries, 6 East Twenty-third Street. They will be sold in Mendelssohn Hall, Fortieth Street, near Broadway, on Friday, April 27. There are seventy-four oils in all, and in addition to the uncommonly fine examples by Anton Mauve there are pencil and charcoal sketches for landscape, together with studies in color of horses, cows, and sheep by the same master, which he mounted on mahogany panels and signed a year before his death, late in the eighties.

Mr. Jefferson was a great admirer of Mauve, and his opinion as to the rank we should assign the master's different pictures is certainly entitled to consideration. He held that "The Return of the Flock," which is No. 67 in the catalogue, is the master's best example. It was painted in 1886, two years before Mauve's death, and bought in 1890 at the Gerardus Wynkoop sale. When exhibited at the Salon of 1887 it won a medal for Mauve. Certainly it is finer in sentiment, and more beautiful in tone than the record-making Mauve in the Waggaman sale, which brought so phenomenal a price. Whether it will fall short of, or equal, or surpass that piece on Friday is a matter not only for general speculation among picture buyers, but of bets.

The flock is moving away from the spectator over a sandy waste full of inequalities. The sky is softly radiant of white light filtering through a mantle of clouds. To the right is a knoll covered with the sparse vegetation of the dunelands near the ocean. The sheep look like gray and brownish growths akin to the desert vegetation among which they move, suggesting with their soiled and bulging fleeces big seed vessels of blossomed weeds, only the lambs are whiter and more shapely. Nothing could be simpler; yet this picture has a breadth and gentleness and discretion as to tones which set it apart from others by the same hand.

Another Mauve in the same class is "The Loggers," equally large and spacious, but not in every respect so complete a work. The trunks of fallen trees lie on the heath; horses stand beside them and workmen are making ready to remove them on a logger's cart. The chopped ends of these trunks are treated with a realistic touch Mauve does not often wield; yet the impression is not so harmonious and rounded as that we get from the other. Perhaps the rough ends advance too boldly for perfect enjoyment; certainly the foreground needs reinforcement to justify its existence. The fortunate possessor of this noble canvas might well try the experiment of shutting off half a foot of the lower canvas with the frame, and seeing whether that would not improve the picture.

Remarkable small pictures by Mauve are "The Old Red Horse" and "The Old Dun Cow"—to mention only two more of the eleven examples.

There is only one specimen of Jakob Maris, a "Canal at Amsterdam," but this is a jewel. The flocculent white clouded sky above towers and masts, the depth of the view up the canal under the bridge, the restraint in color which nevertheless produces an effect of richness extraordinary indeed—these and other qualities stamp it as a masterpiece.

His Josef Israels—"Madonna of the Cottage"—is another sign of the high degree of Jefferson's taste. As a theme it is far from novel, but when has it been surpassed by Israels? The Dutchwoman drying her infant after its bath sits in a gentle flood of light which leaves the rest of the interior full of shadows. The title comes from a picture of the Madonna and Christ child, which can be descried hanging on the wall.

Other excellent paintings by modern Dutchmen are an evening landscape by the late Théophile de Bock, characteristic pictures of peasant interiors with mother and child by Albert Neuhuys, and "The Happy Family," a sunlit cottage interior by Bernard J. Blommers.

Of the French pictures the most delightful for tone and poetic charm is the "Evening on the Oise" by Daubigny, though the little Corot landscape from Ville d'Avray may claim nearly equal rank. There is a portrait by Greuze of Mirabeau as a boy. Couture is represented by a savage landscape with despairing nude man crouching down to slake his thirst at a thread of water from the rock; it is called "A Fugitive"; Monticelli, by single figures and groups, recalling Diaz; the cattle painters Troyon and Van Marcke by notable canvases, and Gustav Doré by a scene from Don Quixote in which Sancho Panza shares the night vigil of his master mounted on a horse of lath.

A stunning portrait of Richard Brinsley Sheridan is attributed to Gainsborough, and there are two self-portraits by Sir Joshua Reynolds. There is a very good likeness of Macready in the rôle of William Tell by Henry Inman, and a little half-length Saint John in adoration, assigned to another native, Benjamin West. To Sir Thomas Lawrence is attributed the portrait of the Italian sculptor Canova, who visited England early in the last century, and also the less-successful group of the children of J. J. Angerstein. Hoppner, Morland, Harlow, and Inskipp have representatives; there is a Constable so doubtful that perhaps "English school" would have been better than "attributed to." A slashing little bullfight, painted by Goya, with a matador impaled on one horn of the bull and a crowd of bullfighters and dogs streaming open-mouthed behind the beast, has all the nervous shock and the mad drawing of the famous etchings by the Spanish master.

Rembrandt in his earlier manner, without his corruscating color and broad, free brushwork, is seen in the likeness of Petronella Buys, a Dutch lady rather lantern-jawed and high of cheekbone, but clear-eyed, firm, and intelligent—a workmanlike performance; though the date, 1635, seems a little late for work so different from that of his maturity. Perhaps name and date were added later on, when Rembrandt's fame had become so widely known that owners of his portraits were proud to add it to the canvas.

THE J. P. MORGAN LAUNCHED.

She Is the Largest Fresh Water Steamer in the World.

CHICAGO, April 21.—A 600-foot steamer, christened the J. P. Morgan by Miss Blanche Hanks, was launched at the South Chicago shipyard to-day.

The vessel is one of two ordered for the United States Steel Corporation. She is the largest craft on fresh water in the world. Her length is 600 feet, and she is 58 feet in beam and has 32 feet depth of hold. Her capacity is 12,000 tons of freight. She will carry ore.

JURY FREES MRS. COOPER.

Her Plea That Killing of Northy Was an Accident Accepted.

AUGUSTA, Me., April 21.—Mrs. Alice F. Cooper, who was tried for the murder of Charles D. Northy, Jr., was acquitted to-day by a jury, in the Kennebec County Superior Court. The jury was out two hours.

The Government charged that Mrs. Cooper shot Northy, who was 22 years old, because she was jealous of his attentions to another woman. Mrs. Cooper's defense was that the shooting was accidental.

BILLS SIGNED AT ALBANY.

Amendment to Labor Law Regarding Sweatshop Goods.

ALBANY, April 21.—Gov. Higgins today signed the bill introduced by Senator L'Hommedieu, which compels a person instituting proceedings for the cancellation of a liquor tax certificate to file a bond for the bona fide prosecution of the case, and prohibits the discontinuance of proceedings when once begun without a court order.

Mr. Prentice's bill amending the labor law by authorizing the Commissioner to seize goods manufactured in violation of the Tenement House act and cause them to be disinfected at the owner's expense, was also signed.

PENSION FOR CURIE FAMILY.

No Ceremonies at the Funeral of the Discoverer of Radium.

PARIS, April 21.—The Council of Ministers has decided to have the Minister of Education introduce a bill in the Chamber of Deputies for a pension for the widow and children of Prof Curie, the discoverer of radium, who was killed in Paris last Thursday by being run over by a wagon in the Place Dauphine.

The funeral of Prof. Curie took place to-day. By his often expressed desire there were no ceremonies.

COMMERCIALISM IN LAW ATTACKED BY A JUDGE

Justice Bartlett Says Lawyers Should Have Fees Only.

HE BLAMES THE LAW SCHOOLS

Needless Litigation Is Fomented by the Desire of Lawyers to Get Rich, He Thinks.

While speaking at the Hotel Astor last night as the principal guest at the annual banquet of the Alumni Association of the New York University Law School, Justice Willard Bartlett, recently elected to the Court of Appeals, made an attack on commercialism in the legal profession.

He began by deploring that the law schools did not exert sufficient influence ethically. Not as if any school countenanced wrong, but too many students were let loose by them that were anything but an honor to the profession.

"I am thinking in particular of a large class of young men," Justice Bartlett said, "among whom commercialism is rampant. They are looking on their profession merely as a means of earning money and becoming wealthy. They are thinking of nothing but to become rich as quickly as possible. Under the law which permits them to accept fees from clients, they think themselves entitled to foment needless litigation for the sake of selfish gain.

"Success of the highest order is indeed impossible to him for whom money is the principal aim and object. There are times when, in order to do right and to live up to the highest ethical standards of the profession, he must forget all commercial considerations entirely. That this materialistic and commercial spirit has been able to invade the bar is much to be deprecated, I think. To defend a right cause rightly, whether it be the cause of poor or rich, that is a noble service, and the only service to which the lawyer should devote his full ability.

"If thus he serves in the right spirit, he may set forth as proudly as the young knight of old."

Judge Martin J. Keogh presided. Among the other speakers were Chief Judge Edgar M. Cullen of the Court of Appeals, the Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, W. Bourke Cockran, and Justice John Woodward. The guests included the following Justices and Judges:

David Leventritt, James A. Blanchard, Frederick E. Crane, Edward S. Clinch, John Proctor Clarke, Leonard A. Giegerich, Michael H. Hirschberg, George C. Holt, Theodore F. Hascall, Almet F. Jenks, Frank C. Laughlin, Nathan L. Miller, Chester B. McLaughlin, John H. McCarthy, Samuel T. Maddox, Morgan J. O'Brien, Edward F. O'Dwyer, Adelbert P. Rich, and Francis M. Scott.

BOYS' PROTECTORY BURNED.

Franciscan Dies of Fright and Firemen Are Injured Near Cincinnati.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, April 21.—A Catholic protectory for boys, managed by the Brothers of the Poor of St. Francis Seraphicus at Mount Alverno, Delhi Township, near this city, was destroyed by fire this afternoon. All the boys, 150 in number, were saved uninjured, but Brother Gregory, who was viewing the conflagration from a stable, dropped dead from heart disease, superinduced by fright, while District Fire Marshal Hurley and Firemen John O'Brien and John Varwig of Fire Company No. 24 were badly injured by falling timbers, and all the other firemen were hurt.

Three large brick buildings were destroyed the protectory proper, the chapel, and dormitory. The loss is estimated at $100,000. The fire started in the attic of the protectory and cut off telephone communication with Cincinnati, a mile and a half away. A messenger on horseback brought news of the fire, and this allowed the flames to obtain great headway before the firemen could get there.

Woman Speeds Auto Over Cup Course.

Two women in a lead-colored racing automobile caused considerable excitement yesterday among the residents of Mineola and neighboring Long Island villages by driving over last year's Vanderbilt Cup course at a high rate of speed. The car went so fast, say eyewitnesses, that it was impossible to decipher the number suspended from the back of the vehicle. The woman handling the wheel seemed to be intent upon getting the greatest possible speed from her machine, while her companion clung tightly to the seat, evidently not appreciating the situation as well as the fair and intrepid chauffeur. The unusual sight led to several speculations as to whether a woman was going to enter the Vanderbilt Cup race next Fall.

ROBBERS LOOT BANK.

Get $7,000, Fire on Citizens, and Escape on Stolen Horses.

WILLISTON, N. D., April 21.—To-day at Crosby, N. D., robbers looted the Bank of Crosby in broad daylight and secured $7,000.

They operated like the James-Younger boys, driving people off the street with volleys from their pistols. They escaped on horseback, with horses they had previously stolen.

HUSBAND COULDN'T SAVE HER.

Caught His Wife as She Jumped from a Window, but His Hold Slipped.

A few minutes after a woman friend and her fiancé had left her rooms in the tenement at Sixty-ninth Street and Columbus Avenue last night to go to a clergyman's house to be married, and with the wedding supper set for them on their return, Mrs. Mamie Neilson, 35 years old, threw herself from a front-room window and was crushed to death on the Columbus Avenue sidewalk, fifty feet below. Alexander Neilson, the woman's husband, attempted to save her, and succeeded in grasping one of her hands, but she jerked the hand free and plunged headlong to the pavement.

The police say that Neilson admits that he and his wife quarreled about a week ago over her Easter bonnet. Since Easter Sunday, Neilson's story goes, he tried to induce his wife to become friendly.

"She refused to make up," Neilson said, according to the police. "She declared," he continued, "that she would not be around to bother me very much longer. I left the room in which we were and went into the dining room, where the table had been set for the wedding supper. I heard my wife scream and, looking out, saw her hanging by her hands to the fire-escape. I reached out of the window and grabbed one of her hands, but she let go of the fire-escape, the hand I was holding slipped, and she fell to the sidewalk."

The woman struck on her head and was instantly killed. Neilson was arrested, but the police discharged him later on the order of the Coroner.

SHONTS BACK FROM PANAMA.

Chairman of Canal Commission Gets Here on the Colon.

Theodore P. Shonts, Chairman of the Panama Canal Commission, arrived in New York on the Panama liner Colon last night. The Colon had some trouble in getting tugs to assist her in docking, the result being that she had to anchor while the officials ashore telephoned along the water front for tugs. This delay seemed to annoy Mr. Shonts, and he was in anything but a happy frame of mind when he came ashore.

Mr. Shonts refused to discuss Isthmian affairs in any way, and as soon as the Colon docked left the pier. It was said by some of his fellow-passengers that his visit was an important one, and that he would proceed to Washington for a conference relative to the canal affair.

GOVERNMENT STARTS NEW ANTI-TRUST SUIT

Special Counsel Engaged to Fight Fertilizer Combine.

ITS BUSINESS IN THE SOUTH

Cases Will Be Presented to Grand Jury in Nashville — Indictments Expected.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 21.—Edward T. Sanford of Knoxville, Tenn., has been retained by the Attorney General as special counsel in the prosecution of the Fertilizer Trust. It is alleged by the Government that this trust, embracing manufactories all through the South, is conducting a business in restraint of trade, and it has been decided by the Attorney General to proceed against it.

The Federal Grand Jury has been called to meet in Nashville, Tenn., Monday, and before the end of the week it is expected indictments will be returned against a number of officials. The Government is said to contend that the entire fertilizer interests of the South are embraced in one vast combine to control prices, and the fight will take the nature of the one recently waged against the Beef Trust.

A. M. Tillman is the District Attorney at Nashville, and will have charge of the prosecution. Edward T. Sanford is a well-known Southern attorney, and has been selected by the Attorney General as special counsel owing to his familiarity with the details of the proposed prosecution.

There are several big phosphate plants in Nashville alone. Among them are the Tennessee Chemical Company, the Read Phosphate Company, the National Fertilizer Works, and the Federal Chemical Company. It is also alleged that both the Swift and Armour interests are involved in the fertilizing business of the South.

DOWIE WON'T PREACH TO-DAY.

Courts Give Voliva the First Turn at Zion City Tabernacle.

CHICAGO, April 21.—Judge Wright in the Circuit Court decided to-day that John Alexander Dowie could not occupy the pulpit in Zion City Tabernacle to-morrow, as he had planned to do.

The court, after hearing arguments from both sides, held that Overseer Voliva could use the tabernacle to-morrow and Dowie on each alternate day thereafter. Dowie, who had planned to visit Zion City to-day, at once abandoned his plan.

Attorney Wetten, Dowie's counsel, was informed to-day by Dowie's son, Gladstone, that if the elder Dowie appeared in Zion City he would be allowed to proceed to Shiloh, his former home, but that if he attempted to hold extempore meetings or conducted himself in other than a quiet manner violence might result.

At the request of Attorney Wetten the court directed that Gladstone be told that he would be held responsible to the law if in any manner he countenanced violence against his father.

THE ELSBERG BILL.

If Mayor McCLELLAN were sure that he heard the distinct and authoritative voice of the people calling upon him to sign the Elsberg bill he would be justified in giving his approval to the measure. But it stands just the other way. The Elsberg bill is a municipal ownership contrivance very thinly disguised. Its authors, promoters, sponsors, and backers are municipal ownership men. They are not Mayor McCLELLAN's friends—they are his enemies. They worked against him last Fall. They strove by speech and vote, by coalition and intrigue, by deal and bargain to beat him. They failed. The people beat them and elected Mayor McCLELLAN.

In the Mayoralty canvass the municipal ownership issue was put before the people clearly, distinctly, and noisily. They heard all about it, they listened to the argument, they scrutinized the programme and promises of the municipal ownership candidates, and took their measure. Then they voted them down, rejected them, and elected Mayor McCLELLAN. Certainly the Mayor can hear no mandate requiring him to sign this unsound and unsafe Elsberg bill, miserably false in principle and in pretense. By their votes the people declared that they did not want to try the experiment of municipal ownership and operation. If the Mayor has any mandate at all it is the mandate to send the bill to Albany with his veto.

The Elsberg bill has two purposes. It aims to destroy the Rapid Transit Commission, and it opens the way to municipal ownership and operation of new subways. The pretense that it provides for competition in the bidding for new subway construction and operation is nauseating humbug. It does just the other thing. By shortening the term of the contract to twenty years it effectively discourages competing bidders and gives the Interborough a monopoly of future subway construction, unless the municipal ownership agitators, as they hope, should obtain control of the City Government, in which case they would, under the provisions of this bill, at once put the city into the railroad business.

The people of the Bronx ought to see that the Elsberg bill is hostile to their interests. If it becomes a law subway construction in their borough will be indefinitely put off. But it is not the Bronx alone that would be harmed by making the bill a law. It is against the interests of the whole city and of all its people.

IS IT A REMEDY?

In his "immunity bath" argument before Judge HUMPHREY in Chicago Attorney General MOODY contended that the Beef Trust officials, in order to obtain immunity, must first enter a sphere "the gateway of which is marked 'Subpoena' and its exit 'Perjury.'" Mr. MOODY, as everybody knows, lost his case. Now Senator KNOX, in pursuance of President ROOSEVELT's recommendation to Congress last week to "enact a law declaring the true construction of the existing legislation so far as it affects immunity," has introduced a bill which contains this provision:

> Immunity shall be extended under the said provisions of the said acts only to a natural person who, in obedience to a subpoena, gives testimony under oath or produces evidence, documentary or otherwise, under oath.

Of Judge HUMPHREY's decision the President said in his message:

> If it should be followed, the result would be either completely to nullify very much, and possibly the major part, of the good to be obtained from the inter-State commerce law and from the law creating the Bureau of Corporations in the Department of Commerce and Labor; or else frequently to obstruct an appeal to the criminal laws by the Department of Justice.

But is Senator KNOX's bill a remedy? After the statutes have been made conformable to the President's purpose the Constitution is still to be reckoned with. In the Beef Trust cases Mr. GARFIELD, Chief of the Bureau of Corporations in the Department of Commerce and Labor, by direction of the President and as a result of admissions which he was empowered to extort from the packers, turned over to the Department of Justice the names of certain officials for indictment and prosecution. Under the Constitution will the Bureau of Corporations continue its work of obtaining incriminating testimony? The immunity clause of the Fifth Amendment has been broadly construed by the courts on the ancient principle that a witness may not by any process of law be compelled to give testimony tending to incriminate him or subject him to fines, penalties, or forfeitures. The seizure or compulsory production of a person's private papers to be used in a suit for a forfeiture for a violation of law is equivalent to compelling him to be a witness against himself, says the Federal decision in the case of BOYD vs. United States and in the case of McKNIGHT vs. United States. Mr. MOODY admitted in court that one of the objects of GARFIELD's investigation, as shown by the evidence, was to bring on the indictment.

It would appear that hereafter, according to the accepted interpretation of the Fifth Amendment, the Bureau of Corporations cannot act with the Department of Justice in securing criminal convictions. Nor, if Mr. KNOX's bill is enacted, will Mr. GARFIELD's task be measurably lightened of securing, except under oath conferring immunity—even for the use of Congress—information regarding evasions of the law by corporations. The Administration appears to be trying to cover up its own blunders.

THE FRANKLIN MEDAL.

There is a peculiar appropriateness in the act of Congress voting a commemorative medal to France on the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of FRANKLIN; and the circumstances attending the gift were equally in harmony with the spirit of the occasion. The medal was designed by loyal American artists of French descent, and executed by a house as well known in Paris as in New York, while the French Ambassador, who received the medal in the name of his nation, stands in the front rank of historians and critics of our literature. And among no other people in Europe is there more than in France a keen appreciation of FRANKLIN's fivefold title to remembrance as "printer, philosopher, scientist, statesman, diplomatist." Had "patriot" been added, as a sixth, to the inscription on the medal, the appreciation in France would have been just as keen, since it was the rare fortune of FRANKLIN to illustrate his own patriotism on French soil and mightily to contribute to the establishment of the ideas that have made French patriotism so closely akin to that of the sister Republic of the West.

Without straining the metaphor, it might indeed be said of FRANKLIN that during his long stay in France, in the pursuit of his complex and difficult task, he was in a sense the Ambassador of the Future. He represented at the proud Court of the most ancient monarchy of the Continent the forces of the human intellect and the human spirit that within a century were to overthrow or seriously to modify that monarchy and the rule of nearly all the "royal brothers" then on European thrones. And in the performance of his extremely delicate function he manifested the utmost tact, courtesy, sound judgment, and intimate knowledge of human nature, so that he was equally persona grata, and even gratissima, to the monarch and his advisers on the one hand and to the forerunners of the reign of republican and democratic ideas on the other. It is a commonplace of history that the aid of the French Government was accorded to the revolted colonies of England, not from any love for the notions that inspired the revolt or the system of popular rule under which it was conducted, but by jealousy and fear of the English Government, the secular enemy of France. That was the motive power on which FRANKLIN was obliged to count, and to which he had to appeal. It required an equipment, mental and moral and social, such as probably no other American of his day possessed, and certainly such as no other of our numerous delegates to European Courts managed to show.

On the other hand, the money and supplies which FRANKLIN obtained with more or less secrecy from the French Government were but part, and perhaps not the greater part, of the aid given to the United States. Along with these were the services of a considerable body of young Frenchmen in the American Army and private succor to the new-born American Navy, in men, in officers, and in material, all of which were in great degree inspired by sympathy for the cause of political liberty. When LAFAYETTE returned to France to join his influence with that of FRANKLIN for the advancement of the American interests, and the surrender of BURGOYNE at Saratoga gave the Government the excuse for an alliance, there was already in France a popular devotion to America that brought an intense pressure on the Government and counted much in its final determination. It was in implanting, encouraging, feeding this spirit of devotion, while keeping on the best terms with the Court, that FRANKLIN's powerful, comprehensive, and subtle genius was so strikingly manifested. With the single exception of WASHINGTON, it is a fair statement that the personality of FRANKLIN was of higher utility to his country than that of any other American of his day.

In the influence of that personality, his scientific and philosophic vogue was a most important element. For FRANKLIN, when he went to Paris, was probably more widely known by his experiments in electricity, on the one hand, and by the homely aphorisms of "Poor Richard" on the other, than any other foreigner, of whatever nation. And he was known with equal familiarity in the salons of the "intellectuals," in the homes of the bourgeois, and even in the homes of the peasants. The men and women of fashion treated him as a lion at the start, the scientists recognized him as a leader in new fields, the common people saw in him a guide who understood them and was understanded of them, and the Court soon learned at once to respect and to trust him. M. JUSSERAND spoke of FRANKLIN as "one who gave to France her first notion of what Americans were." Happy, indeed, was the Nation of whom so remarkable a man could be taken as a sample.

THE WORK OF THE ARMY.

There is great consolation in considering what modern conditions can do for the alleviation even of such calamities as have befallen San Francisco. Imagine what would be the plight of the 200,000 people rendered homeless but for the railroads, coastwise and continental, the steamship lines, and the telegraph which make the transfer of credit instantaneous and the forwarding of material succor a matter of hours against the days or weeks which would render succor vain.

In particular, consider that it is the agency which we maintain for the destruction of human life which suddenly becomes the most available and the most valuable of our agencies for saving it. How fortunate that we have at San Francisco one of the most important of our military posts and depots, and the headquarters of one of our military departments. Gen. FUNSTON has not waited for orders. The machinery of peaceful civilization having for the time broken down, martial law became the only means by which it could be substituted and restored. Without even any express proclamation to that effect, but by universal consent, the army took charge of the situation, and the failure of the usual guarantees of order has entailed nothing like anarchy. Where stern measures were needed they were taken. A few ghouls who were caught turning the universal calamity to their private advantage by looting were made examples of, and the examples were sufficiently deterrent. More than that, the curious spectators of the conflagration were converted, without the shadow of legal right, of course, into active and no doubt in almost all cases into willing workers for its extinguishment.

Orders came as fast as the lightning could carry them to relieve the local commander of the responsibility he had assumed and to enlarge his powers. The whole Pacific Coast has been stripped of all the military stores, and, by the co-operation of Secretary BONAPARTE, of all the naval stores also which could be available for the needs of the sufferers of San Francisco. Two hundred thousand rations from Portland, at least a day's food for all the people who might otherwise go hungry, are already available. All the tents and blankets available on the coast must be likewise on their way or on the point of shipment, and these supplies both of food and shelter will be supplemented by others as fast as trains can carry them from the military posts in the Far West, the Middle West, and even from the Atlantic Coast. Evidently there is no agency of civil life which could so expedite such a work of relief.

The "first aid" to the people of San Francisco comes from a source of which nobody ever thinks in connection with works of charity and mercy, and it comes by the application to such works of methods which have been evolved from the necessities of warfare, and which otherwise would not exist at all. More than that, the promptness and efficiency of the relief constitute, we may safely say, a special tribute to the United States Army. Special dispatches from London express envy as well as admiration for the Gordian manner in which the American sword cleaves the tangle of red tape which would hamper the effort to perform such a feat of prompt relief by means of the machinery of the British Army. And yet it is only eight years since it was shown that "the canker of a calm world and a long peace" had so infected the army that there was hopeless and inextricable confusion in the attempt to mass our little army in Florida. The departments of supply were shown to be without any mutual co-operation. But the army learned its lesson. Secretary ROOT's project of a General Staff is already abundantly vindicated. It seems quite certain that we shall not have another Tampa during this generation.

FRENCH SUNDAY LAWS.

"The Continental Sunday" and particularly "the Parisian Sunday" have so often been held up to American odium that it seems strange to us that there should be any Sunday laws outside of the English-speaking countries. No two phrases could be much more opposed than "to observe the Sabbath" in English, and "to make the Sunday" in France.

Yet there is an actual project of law now before the French Senate to compel the better observance of Sunday as a day of rest. Of course the project is put upon entirely secular grounds, and the object of the measure is expressed as being the preservation of "the weekly rest." A commission was appointed by the French Senate four years ago, and it is the report of this commission which is the basis of the new project. The report setting forth the advantages of "le repos hebdomadaire," purposes to prevent any employer from forcing anybody in his employ to work more than six days in the week. There does not seem to be any special insistence upon Sunday, but of course such a requirement would be in effect a requirement that nobody should be called upon to work on Sunday, except in cases of absolute necessity. In Germany there is already a law, some fifteen years old, limiting Sunday labor to five hours.

In the French project, the right of direct prosecution is given to the aggrieved persons, upon the ground that violations could not be detected and prevented by the official inspectors, unless they were greatly multiplied in number, and greatly overworked on the rest-day. The critics point out as a main defect in the law that it has not a word to say upon the subject of closing places of business on Sunday, and that without some provision on that point the law would be a dead letter. If shops served only by the families of the shopkeepers are allowed to remain open on Sunday, it would be a hardship to compel their competitors to close. The German law compels the closing of all places of business except for five hours, and this feature of it is commended for imitation in France.

THE YOUNGSTERS OUTCLASSED.

The billiard tournament, which was expected to "shine in the sudden making of splendid names," and to reduce the veterans below the newcomers, has had no such effect. SLOSSON and SCHAEFER played off at the finish for first and second place just as they have been doing for a time to which the memory of the man of billiards hardly runneth to the contrary. This is at once the surprise and what may be called the moral of the tournament, that in this form of athletics, if it may be called so, youth does not give the advantage that it gives in others, and that so long as eyesight is unimpaired and nerves are steady a billiardist may remain at his best. That SCHAEFER and SLOSSON should have come out at the top of the tournament is much more interesting and important than that one or the other should be the winner. The victory by SLOSSON with the score of 500 to 396 is only one more notch on one side of a very long tally-stick, comparable to the series of Oxford and Cambridge boat races, in which neither side has, upon the whole, much to be ashamed of or to boast about.

Rather curiously, the third in the tournament is also a veteran. If there were in billiard tournaments, as in chess tournaments, a "brilliancy prize," it would have to go to SUTTON, on the remarkable score of his game against HOPPE. As for HOPPE, who must content himself with fourth place in a field of seven, it pretty clearly appears that he is not another FRANK IVES. It is true that he has played some remarkable games, possibly the most remarkable being that against SCHAEFER, which was so close that the loser's average was actually higher than the winner's, the divisor being one less. In fact, no one of the leading five would be regarded as "out of it" if the tournament were to be played over again. But it is evident that the veterans are in no immediate danger of being outclassed.

GEN. CORBIN.

In the supplement of to-day's TIMES is a sketch of the new Lieutenant General of the army, one of the few veterans of the civil war who remain upon its active list. Seeing that forty-one years have elapsed since the close of the conflict, the remarkable thing, with a compulsory retirement at "the grand climacteric" of human life, is not that there should be so few, but that there should be any.

One of the latest acts of Gen. CORBIN is one of the most creditable to him. It is, so far as we know, unique. At his own request his promotion to be the ranking officer of the army is not coupled with his promotion to be Chief of the General Staff. Thus far in the short annals of the General Staff the two things have gone together. It was Gen. CORBIN who pointed out that in order to give the best results to the work of the General Staff the officer at its head should not be upon the eve of his retirement, but in his prime, so that he could not only take long views of military policy, but do much toward giving lasting effect to them. The principle is obviously sound, but it was at his own expense, so to speak, that Gen. CORBIN secured its adoption. He is entitled to the greater credit because he is the only officer of the United States Army we know of who has declined to take anything in the way of promotion that was coming to him.

THE NAPANOCH REFORMATORY.

No penal institution in this or any other State has had so much influence or been copied to such an extent as the Elmira Reformatory for young men. It rapidly grew beyond the proper limits of a single institution, and a dozen years ago the decision was made to erect another building to be called the Eastern Reformatory, which was to receive the same class of prisoners and to be under the same Board of Managers.

The Eastern Reformatory is at Napanoch. For reasons political rather than penological it was taken in 1900 from under the control of the Board of Managers of Elmira and placed under the nominal control of the Superintendent of Prisons. It has been well-understood, however, that the appointments made to that institution, which were almost all political in character, were made at the dictation of powers behind the throne.

The reformatory at Napanoch has for several years existed more for the support of its force of officers than for the reformation of prisoners. No commitments have ever been made to it by the courts. At present the 300 men who are there were nearly all transferred from Elmira. That institution has now more than 1,500 inmates, and to relieve the congestion the law has permitted transfers to be made to Napanoch. The young men thus transferred have no reformatory discipline. They are supplied with but little work and little instruction, nor have they the advantage of the industrial training they might be afforded if sent to Sing Sing or Auburn.

It has been, therefore, a reformatory only in name. The State Prison Improvement Commission has unanimously recommended that the Eastern Reformatory be placed under the Board of Managers of the Elmira Reformatory. This report has met the approval of the Governor, and is signed by CORNELIUS V. COLLINS, Superintendent of Prisons. Senator CASSIDY has introduced a bill embodying its recommendations. It has the support of the Prison Association of New York, the Board of State Charities, and the State Prison Commission. Senator CASSIDY's bill ought to be promptly passed.

An Albany message asserts that the prospect of repassing the Mortgage Tax bill is none too good because "practically all the Republican leaders in the Senate and a majority of the Assembly Rules Committee oppose the recording tax." The result will show whether this very poor reason is sufficient, and whether the Republicans will present their opponents such a splendid campaign cry as this: Where Gov. HIGGINS surrendered it ought to be sure that lesser lights will not assume to resist further. For "leaders" and "committees" to oppose a registered verdict of the entire Legislature is foolish or worse. The first dozen lines of Gov. HIGGINS's veto give all the reasons necessary for repassing the record tax in short order. What the Governor calls "an abrupt change of policy" has been decreed by overwhelming majorities, and under such conditions it is prudence to get out of the way rather than be run over.

The wicked Oil Trust, which limited its gift to San Francisco to $100,000, has raised its buying price for crude oil for the first time in six months—except for Kentucky and Kansas. Evidently legislation excluding the monopoly from the States where crude oil is almost unsalable does not fit the case. What is wanted is a law compelling the trust to buy dear and sell cheap. As it is, its buying has made oil worth 2 cents more except in those States from which it is excluded. Will it be invited back, and if invited, will it be willing to go and expose itself to discriminating legislation and State-aided competition? Refined oil is no cheaper in Kansas and crude oil is lower. Gov. HOCH should try again.

In the United States District Court at Kansas City Judge McPHERSON sustained the indictments under the inter-State commerce law for rebating by packers and their accomplices, the railways. This puts life into indictments against other offenders, for the ruling extends the operation of the law to all conspiracies against the Federal statutes. On the other hand, at Washington Senator LA FOLLETTE, quite the fiercest if not exactly the wildest railway reformer, made a destructive criticism of the pending legislation. It is especially worth while to call attention to the Senator's able remarks, because the Senate Chamber emptied itself as he began. It is impracticable to catalogue here all the good things which he said are omitted from the bill, or all the bad things which he said are in it. The point which it is desired to make at the moment is that the work of declaring the old law efficient and the new law inefficient goes bravely on. If anybody should infer that better prosecution is demanded and less legislative fussing, the inference will accord with that suggested hitherto in this place. A little pursuit of the rebaters in the manner of Mr. HUGHES or Mr. HADLEY would be worth all and more than Congress is attempting and not accomplishing.

Treatment of Self-Supporting Women.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I was much interested in your interview in THE SUNDAY TIMES of April 8, with Mr. Martin, owner of Trowmart Inn, a hotel for self-supporting women, which is now being built on Abingdon Square. Mr. Martin says in that interview there are to be no rules, that the girls may go to the theatre every evening in the week and no questions asked. He argues (and rightly) that girls who do not care for respectable society will not like the atmosphere of the Inn, and will leave of their own accord, to get among people of their own tastes and habits. Why is it that in theory we put women on a pedestal, claiming their natures are much finer than men's, but in practice we act toward them as if they were criminals, and must be closely watched and guarded by all kinds of ridiculous rules?

Another thing I have observed is that when houses are put up for men they receive the dignified title of "bachelor apartment houses," but if houses are put up for women they are called "homes for working women" or "hotels for working women." I heard a lecturer say once that there were two kinds of girls—"girls and working girls." It seems there is only one kind of man, and that is "mere man."

SPRINKLING THE STREETS.

Protest Against Giving Any Monopoly the Contract for a Term of Years.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your attention is called to a bill now being pushed through the Legislature creating a trust in favor of the Sprinklers' Association and fastening upon the city a monopoly of street sprinkling detrimental to the health and comfort of the entire community. No city in the world is so afflicted as ours with the dust nuisance in the Fall months and during February and March, when the city is covered by clouds of vile compound, which can only be laid by vigorous street sprinkling. No department of the City Government should have the right to contract out the street sprinkling for a period of six years to any association. The work ought to be performed by some branch of the City Government, be it the Street Cleaning Department or Health Department. If Commissioner Woodbury has lost the confidence of the public a new Commissioner may prove to be a second Waring.

The Sprinklers' Association only wets the streets from May to November, and then only if paid a fee by the property owner. An omission of payment by a few owners prevents effective sprinkling of any street, and during the windy months of February and March no attempt even is made to lay the clouds of vile compound which permeate dwellings and the lungs of individuals, producing epidemics of disease.

The Street Cleaning Department at a small expense can be equipped with the necessary apparatus effectively to water all the streets of our city at a minimum of expense to the taxpayer, and it is the logical department to handle the work. If the people are really desirous of owning their own franchises, why lease this important municipal work for a long period to a private monopoly? L. N. L.

THE PRESIDENT AND THE COURTS

Condemnation Rather of the Propriety Than the Justice of the Message.

From The Providence Journal.

With a President of Mr. Roosevelt's temper in office it is well to keep in mind the commonplace distinction of the functions of the three co-ordinate branches of the Government. Heretofore the energetic occupant of the White House has let the courts severely alone and exercised his characteristic disposition to interfere in the direction of the Capitol; but now, in his message of Wednesday to Congress, he gives a sharp thrust at a Judge of a United States District Court and through him at the entire Federal judiciary.

From The Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The President's exhibition of temper in his latest message to Congress in the matter of Judge Humphrey's decision in the case of the beef packers will not help to further a desirable and really necessary reform which is already half accomplished, although the President does not seem to be aware of it. After an uncalled-for attack on Judge Humphrey and an equally superfluous defense of Commissioner Garfield, both of whom were doing merely their duty under the law as it stands, the President demands a change in the law, which the House has already made, so far as it can contribute to that result—and on the day before the message was received. Moreover, the Department of Justice has been for years clamoring for a law giving the Government the right of appeal and review in criminal cases.

From The Baltimore News.

The immunity conferred by the decision upon the Beef Trust people as a consequence of their communications to Commissioner Garfield is a thing which was universally regretted throughout the country; and the President may be, and probably is, entirely right in desiring such change of the law as will make a recurrence of such an experience impossible. It is possible even that Mr. Roosevelt is right in thinking that Judge Humphrey was not justified in his decision by the law as it stands; but between Theodore Roosevelt thinking that a Federal Judge has misinterpreted the law and the President of the United States sending a special message to Congress expressing that opinion in harsh and unrestrained language there ought to be a great gulf fixed. But Mr. Roosevelt is notoriously unable, or unwilling, to draw any such distinction. He does not recognize his great office as imposing any restraint upon the utterance of his individual sentiments.

Property Rights of Wives.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There was recently presented in the Assembly a bill which proposed to give to the wife the same share in the personal property of the husband, dying without a will, that the husband now has in the personal property of the wife under similar conditions of intestacy.

This sensible and just measure was approved by the Committee on Codes, but when it was brought up in the Assembly for discussion an extraordinary scene was enacted. No less than seventy men sprang to their feet and declared with one voice, it would appear, that this bill must not pass, because if it should become a law the women would have no more babies!

What a strange, what an inexplicable state of mind this action discloses! Did these men really think that all the women in the State would be at once informed as to the meaning of this new statute and profoundly affected by it? Did they think that each and every one would be absolutely sure that she would survive her husband and that all these wives would be at once transformed, no longer loving mothers, but stern matrons rejecting the joys of maternity and gloating over the prospect of widowhood? What a singular condition of the mighty masculine brain is hereby disclosed! Will there ever come a happy day in which men will realize that women are human beings like themselves and are therefore entitled to equality of rights and of justice?

Plan to Reclaim Valuable Land.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Referring to a recent letter recounting a proposal to extend Riverside Park to the bulkhead line:

While we are about it, why not carry the streets from Fifty-seventh to Seventy-second Street and from Tenth Avenue to the North River, at a gradual down grade and, at the same time, overhead of the New York Central Railroad? We will thus reclaim for commercial purposes the river front for the benefit of the city and the blocks of space between the streets can be sold for tenement, commercial, and similar purposes. The map and the imagination can supply the necessary details of this practical and feasible plan.

Where the Churches Fail.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Many of us, especially churchgoing people, are much interested in visiting the very poor, bringing them to church and school, looking after the foreign element who are daily pouring into this country, and doing ever so many other things which we are wont to call charity. But to how many has it occurred to speak a kindly word to that other class of people also daily coming here? I refer to the young men and women from other States and Canada coming here to study and to earn their living in various ways. How large a percentage of these people attend any church in a year's time? Where and with whom does the fault lie? Cannot something be done to attract and keep these people in our churches?

A FABLE AND A MORAL.

Labor with "Muck Rake" Not Fragrant, but Ofttimes Effective.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

A miller, preparing to go to market, filled a sack with flour, and then placed a large stone in another sack. He attached the bags together with a rope and slung them across his donkey's back, a sack dangling on each side, so that one balanced the other. His son watched the procedure and did some thinking.

A short time after his father directed him to take a bag of flour to market. The son divided the flour into two sacks, joined them with a rope and placed the divided burden across the donkey's back. As he started to leave his father came upon the scene. Said he:

"Stop, boy, what are you doing?"

The son replied, "Making it lighter for the donkey." His father commanded: "Take them off. Put that flour in one sack and sling a stone on the other side. What's good enough for your father is good enough for you."

Now that is the attitude that a goodly portion of mankind assumes when an innovation is broached for the purpose of lightening the donkey's burden.

Respect for custom, which ofttimes breeds prejudice in the minds of conservative folks, is one of the obstacles which all reformers encounter in their efforts to ameliorate political and social conditions. That point of view is partly responsible for the cry that a "muck-rake" is being used in making over the surface of things, for the purpose (it is alleged) of seeking for filth. The conservatives would rather leave conditions as they are at present. But, good friends, it is necessary to dig and delve until solid ground is reached, so that we can build anew. To be sure, the labor is not fragrant, but it cannot be accomplished with a feather-duster and a bottle of cologne. Besides, they are not responsible for the creation of the muck heap. WILLIAM C. LICHTENSTEIN.

Earthquake Shock Felt in Brooklyn?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

At 6:07 this morning, in Brooklyn, I felt a distinct tremor of the earth. At once I was sure it came from earthquake, and at noon when I heard of the calamity in San Francisco I was not surprised, for the tremor of the morning made me expect some such news. The tremor lasted about three seconds, stopped for a second and then resumed for three seconds more. Recollection of the shock we experienced here on Aug. 10, 1884, made me confident that what I felt was a shaking of the earth. Can it be that this was a forerunner of what was to follow later on the other side of our continent? It certainly seemed so.

The Press Gallery.

From The Boston Herald.

The Senate press gallery figures conspicuously in debate on the floor again. When Senator Tillman was questioned as to his authority for his allegations concerning Banker Walsh of Chicago, he answered that his information came from a gentleman in the press gallery, and he added that the press gallery knew a great deal more about what was going on in the world than the Senators on the floor did. What a contrast to that memorable occasion when Senator Roscoe Conkling pointed up to the press gallery, and called it the buzzard's roost!

THE CIRCUS OF YESTERDAY.

In the days I carried water to the thirsty elephants
Or wormed a surreptitious way beneath the circus tents.
It seems to me the camels were a taller lot than now;
The lions' fretted roaring was more terrible, somehow;
The peanuts were a crisper sort; the lemonade, I think,
Was very much superior to what you get to drink
At any circuses to-day—in short, I'm frank to say,
The circus of my boyhood was much better than to-day.

The seats are so much harder now; the tent is not so high;
The elephants are not as big, as they go shambling by;
The toy balloons are not, I'm sure, as brightly red and blue
As those of twenty years ago; the sprightly kangaroo
Seems not, by half, as wonderful as those I used to see;
The polar bears are not as white as those that used to be;
They do not have such funny clowns; the show is not as vast;
I don't think they've improved upon the circus of the past.

The side show tent is smaller now; the banners out in front
Don't bear such splendid pictures as was formerly their wont;
The hair of the Circassian girl is not as long and queer,
She isn't half as pretty as she was that bygone year.
The tattooed man has faded some, the Punch and Judy show
Lacks half the bubbling humor that it had so long ago;
The wild man caught in Borneo is tame, and when I see Him smile I know the circus is not what it used to be.

I know they do the loop-the-loop and death-defying feats
That freeze the frightened people stiff with terror in their seats;
But as they feed the animals when the big show is through
My hair stands not upon its end as it was wont to do.
I do not feel that anguished hope—I know it was a sin—
That bade me stand out front and say: "Please, Mister, take me in?"
Nor do I seek the circus grounds, when all is moved away,
To mourn the vanished glory of the gladsome yesterday.

SCENES IN DOOMED VESUVIAN TOWNS

Saints' Images Placed to Stay the Lava.

FATE OF BOSCO TRECASE

Townsfolk, Expecting a Miracle, Rejoiced Too Soon.

RAIN OF FIERY COMETS

King Edward Saw the Spectacle —A Noteworthy Description, Prepared for The Times.

Special Correspondence of The New York Times.

NAPLES, April 9.—Little by little the awful eruption of Vesuvius is subsiding, leaving as its record one town destroyed and another partly so; a quarter of the huge mountain itself blown to atoms, and an untold number of tons of ashes scattered over the country for miles.

Right here in Naples, nine miles from the crater, the ashes which have fallen for the last four days lie more than an inch deep over the entire city, and yesterday's rain has turned sidewalks and roadways into black, sticky, granular mud, through which men and horses slip and slide like drunken creatures on glare ice.

The present eruption, which is declared by old Neapolitans to be the grand finale of the one which began Feb. 5, has stopped all traffic bound south from Naples by either train or boat, and has done millions of dollars of damage which cannot be repaired. To-day not a train nor a coasting steamer left for the south with passengers, and many tourists, terrified by the horrid noises made by the convulsed Vesuvius, fled north in haste.

King Victor Emmanuel, accompanied by Queen Helena, is here and has been one of the closest observers. With him was to be seen a large, elderly Englishman with a gray beard and merry eyes, a man one turns to look after—Edward of England.

The present destructive phase of the eruption, which has been proceeding slowly for about a year without doing any great mischief, began at a few minutes after midnight on April 4, when there was a violent upheaval which started a large, new arm of lava running down the southeastern flank of the mountain toward the sea. That was accompanied by a weirdly spectacular and furious discharge of fine dust, ashes, and small cinders. Hurled up some 5,000 feet or more above the crater, this vast mass rained down over the country for more than fifteen miles on every side.

Wherever the veering wind carried it, this dense dry rain of black coated everything thickly with the pungent atoms of the volcano's vitals. The land was covered with a dull brownish haze, like a London fog, and fully as impenetrable. Horses and men wept, coughed, sneezed, and choked as they lumbered uncertainly along through the noonday dusk. A little mucilaginous wafer pasted against the void told where the sun ought to be. Caps with long visors were a positive necessity, and many peaceful, inoffensive citizens who had never ridden in automobiles appeared as begoggled as the veriest scorcher. Locomotive engineers, motormen, cab drivers, porters, and newsboys made paper visors for their caps, and street gamins offered halves of newspapers folded and creased for the same purpose.

April 5 dawned misty and windless, with a terrible cloud of ashes ascending from the volcano. Naples was powdered thickly with ashes and dust, and the ordinarily unattractive and dirty city was smirched and streaked with drab until it lost all its usual character. "Wait," said the old men. "This is not all. That dust has not been seen for forty-two years. It means trouble. Wait till Il Vesuvio speaks! Then we shall see!"

We did see. Not a sound of any moment did the crater make until the evening of April 5, when heavy rumblings were heard, and the Vesuvian villages stirred slowly, as if conscious for the first time that something was afoot. Two o'clock in the morning of April 6 came, and with a roar like the explosion of a huge powder mill, a great piece of the southeastern edge of the crater hurtled up into the night, loosing a boiling torrent of lava, which belched forth and streamed down the mountainside toward the picturesque vineyards and town of Bosco Trecase.

That was the beginning of the end, for the last days of Bosco Trecase were at hand, and the terrified townsfolk spent the day watching the lava, packing and praying, for they are devout folk and loyal sons of the Church. But night fell, and the stream of stone had come little more than half way to the little city, so beds were to be thought of again in spite of the evil jumble of the swart monster whose hot breath and crushing hand were already preparing the grim blow which expunged the town.

Gathered in the Church.

All day the people watched. Early in the afternoon the lookouts reported the main stream once more in motion, and approaching the town at a velocity of some 200 feet an hour. Further down the hill, on that edge of Bosco Trecase nearest Torre Annunziata, the railway station for both villages, stood a quaint, rambling, whitewashed old chapel dedicated to the town's patron, Sant' Anna. She it was who had twice before saved the faithful from the devouring stream, and in her precincts gathered a little knot of the anxious parishioners, waiting for the priest and sexton to open the doors and lead the way.

A hurried message brought them both, and in a few moments the great image of the venerable saint, borne on the shoulders of half a dozen sturdy vineyard workers and preceded by two bearing a huge cross, came stately forth. The street filled and choked with an eager throng that uncovered reverently as the float passed by. Fear and faith mingled strangely in those strong, dark faces. Truly danger must be imminent when the presence of the saint was required. Out through the long, winding street of the town went the float and cross, climbing slowly upward to the little valley where the lava had dared intrude, accompanied by an ever-increasing horde of swart townsfolk, grave and earnest, and irresponsible tourists, armed to the teeth with repeating cameras and long-distance binoculars.

It was a beautiful sight. The town, old and gray and soft in its minor coloring, lent itself picturesquely to the scene. There seemed no incongruity, no mediaeval superstition in the faith of these simple wine growers in their clouted breeks and gay neckerchiefs, hob-nailed shoon, and their woolen stockings.

Frightened and anxious as they were, the people yet moved with determination and conscious pride, as if sure their faith would carry the day. There was no time to be lost, for already one poor house, well detached from the town and high on the lower reaches of Vesuvius, was ingulfed and partly crushed. The image moved rapidly, and ten minutes' hard climbing brought it to the valley of the shadow of panic and to the encroaching fire.

With a sigh the bearers set Sant' Anna down, close to the creeping snare of fire, and the cross poised unsteadily before it, while the great congregation, swelled to thousands and kept in bounds by strong guards of soldiery, knelt in prayer. Long and earnestly they prayed; and through the murmur of the petition the clank and rasp of the crawling lava made the grimmest of musical obligatos. Here and there some silly tourist laughed, but the fierce eyes of the worried townspeople checked the senseless brutality, and it died away in mutterings.

Then a dead silence fell upon the little vale of destruction as the good folk waited. It was a heart-rending sight, as pitiful as the procession had been picturesque. Scarce fifty feet wide at the bottom and not more than sixty or seventy feet deep, the narrow alley was full, and the hillocks forming its sides were rimmed and fringed with serrated humanity, black and clear against the sky.

An hour passed, the moments dragging interminably, and the stream coming steadily nearer. A cry rose from the watchers, a bitter, deep-throated wail, and the great float and cross moved back out of the blistering heat and pungent reek of the crumbling pile. The lava looked a live thing, sentient, portentous, evil. Its long brownish-red and gray and black mottled body rippled like the sea, scaled like an armadillo, gnarled like an oak, wound among the curves of the sloping mountain side and crept steadily downward, inch by inch. Steam and smoke and sulphur fumes hissed and rippled upward from it in thin bluish clouds, and heat waves rippled out from it in circles, scorching the faces and hands of the multitude. It looked like a vast moraine of coke and mud covering a live and palpitating body. Clinking and rasping, the cooler outside bits of stone chipped off and clamored down to either side and in front as the monster edged its way along. Each scale peeled off, each flake dislodged showed the giant's red tissue beneath.

The Sweep of the Lava.

To the peasants the sight was familiar, yet terrible. They, and they only, realized its full meaning. To the others the forastieri, or tourists, there was a majestic horror in the scene.

Another hour passed, and again the cry of dismay went up, sullen and heartrending, as the float retreated again. Four o'clock came in turn, and the smudged sun looked for the last time upon the blistered, cracking face of Sant' Anna as her bearers placed her sternly for a last stand.

Desperate now that all their homes were threatened and the saint seemed powerless to avert th impending catastrophe, the simple suppliants redoubled their efforts and the little valley sobbed with prayer. Slower and slower moved the oncoming stream. Little by little the heavy rumblings of Vesuvius quieted down. Bit by bit, instead of by small avalanches, ran the cooler lava, at last ceasing to approach. The image stood firm in the smoke and the cross wavered unsteadily not a yard away from the great mound. The victory was won—Sant' Anna had performed the miracle; the town was safe!

A swift-footed runner brought up a panting and red-faced young priest on the run, his red bands and long black cassock flapping in the murky evening air. Bareheaded and breathing hard, he stood on the mid-slope of the valley's edge and poured out a ten-minute address of such passionate thanks, prayer, and faith, as can be uttered only by the Latins, closing his address with a fluent benediction upon the town.

The crowd melted like the smoke about it, many following the float and cross into the town, where another impromptu thanksgiving was held at a crowded street corner. Into her dim chapel moved the saint, and in the barren churchyard the crowd gathered rapidly around some thirty or forty mascholi, tiny iron mortars well charged with powder and wads, as the sexton moved about quickly with a blazing portfire, touching them off rapidly in celebration of the triumph of faith over the powers of destruction.

Eager hands seized the smoking mascholi as fast as they were discharged, and reloaded them with prodigal liberality for a repetition of the salute. Horses reared and snorted, the crowd pressed close, and one eager stranger, full of zeal for curious mementos, willingly dropped a franc into the sexton's equally willing palm and vanished in the press with one of the stubby little iron tubes in his pocket, chuckling with foolish pride over his fraud upon the Church whose property he had confiscated.

That was at 5 o'clock, and the town was effervescing with life. Ten hours later there remained nothing but a huge mound of redhot, hissing lava, a few forlorn walls, and the ruins of an unusualy sturdy house in which lay the crisping bones of an old woman, too crippled and too feeble to flee while there was yet time. The celebration and thanksgiving had been too previous, and Bosco Trecase had gone the way of its sisters, Pompeii, Herculaneum, and many a less important town on the grim slope.

Flight of the Fugitives.

With the destruction of so flourishing a town as Bosco Trecase Vesuvius seemed content temporarily, and the lava began a very slow advance upon Torre Annunziato, moving about twenty feet an hour. All the roads were full, and fugitives by hundreds trudged warily through the still blinding rain of ashes, going they knew not whither. With daylight a few trains began to run, and every railway station along the line was packed. Tired mothers gave their peevish babies the breast sitting on the track, while grimy, heavy-eyed fathers and husbands looked gloomily on, too depressed even to talk. Children sank exhausted on platform or rails, crying and munching at great hunks of pasty-looking bread.

Soldiers were everywhere doing police duty; infantry in heavy marching order, with heavy goatskin haversacks; artillerymen, with huge pistols and clanking sabres and spurs; royal engineers in full kit, wearing mattocks, intrenching spades, axes, and crowbars fastened to heavy waistbelts. Class distinction was forgotten, and ragged peasants crowded into first-class compartments on the trains and in the stations without hindrance, regular passengers forgetting to protest.

But all this destruction and the death of the old crippled women were but the prelude for the disaster to come. Every eye and every thought was upon Torre Annunziata. Already the lava had destroyed the trolley railway and was clanking heavily at the postern gate of the cemetery and church of Santa Maria delle Neve, on the line between the railroad town and the smoking heap that was once Bosco Trecase. For an hour I stood upon the roof of the vaults there in the cemetery, camera in hand, watching the lava creeping up at my feet and crumbling the wall to bits. High overhead, hidden by vast clouds of rolling, greasy smoke, bellowed the infuriated volcano, invisible but menacing. The smoke and roarings increased. Lightning played fitfully through the torrential smoke, and the great image of the church inclosed in an icon-like blue and gold box, went down past the cemetery wall into the vineyard to stay the creeping arm that threatened continued destruction. That was noon. Six hours later the great vault walls were gone, and the cemetery was destroyed under tons of hot detritus that peeled the white plaster from the church and set its bell clanging a knell in pitiful peals of wild despair.

Evening waned and night fell. Fugitives had left all the towns along the shore, from Torre Annunziata to San Giovanni a Teducci. Apparently, however, no one dreamed of any danger threatening towns to the east and north, like Somma Vesuviana, San San Sebastiano, Ottajano, or San Giuseppe, far out of the line of the lava, and inconvenienced so far no more than Naples by the showers of dust and ashes. There, though, was where the real danger lay, and a few minutes before 7 in the evening, April 8, with a series of terrible explosions which blew up all that remained of the former cone of the crater, there began a horrible rain of stones and red-hot bits of lava.

The shock was terrible, the more so because the blowing away of the last section of the cone loosed the fresh torment mainly upon the towns to the east and north of the crater. Down pattered the fiery hail. The air was filled with innumerable tiny comets, and the earth glowed redly where they fell and sputtered. Great clouds of vaporized sulphur were belched forth, and the fumes and gases added to the flying peril.

Vespers and evening mass had filled the little church at San Giuseppe with about 500 anxious worshippers whose numbers increased rapidly during the first few moments of the fresh terror. In the incense and sulphur-laden air of the old stone house of worship the droning chant of priests and choir could scarce be heard above the Vesuvian pandemonium and the rattle of stones upon the roof. As the minutes fled, the uproar increased. The sharp staccato of small bits was punctuated roughly by the heavy thudding monody of huge ragged masses of glowing stone as the eruption momentarily augmented in fury.

Blinding and continuous flashes of lightning, striking panic to the stoutest of those peasant hearts, illuminated the church with a ghastly light and prayers and shrieks interrupted the service.

Suddenly, for the twinkling of an eye, absolute silence reigned. Indoors and out not a sound could be heard. Not a stone fell. Not a lip moved. No heart beat. That one second seemed like time poised on the brink of eternity. With a frightful, rending, splintering roar a fresh mass of huge red-hot blocks hurtled down, and the whole roof of the church crashed in upon the helpless worshippers. Again the volcano boomed its hideous minute gun of death, and the forked lightning writhed above the convulsed struggles of the maimed, and played blue and ghostly over the faces of the dead.

The struggle for life was maddening. Men fought like demons, tramping, crushing, striking, frantically endeavoring to get clear of the awful might of the fallen roof and the redhot rain of lava. Horribly mangled and contorted forms projected from under the binding edges of the roof stones, some silent, some crying dreadfully on death, some on life. Old women and babies, young men and maidens struggled feebly to beat out the fire from their smoldering garments. Before the catastrophe was complete more than two hundred souls had gone up in agony.

Repeated on a smaller scale in Ottajano, Somma Vesuviana, and scattered hamlets on the same side of Vesuvius, the rain of stones has crushed scores of houses, churches, factories, several stately palaces and villas, and piled the roads more than knee deep with fine lava about the size of coarse gravel.

Repeated efforts to get to the scene of this fresh cataclysm, except on foot, have been in vain, but by morning the railway will again be in operation, and it may be possible to survey the destruction. The local newspapers, through a service of Vesuvius guides accustomed to hot lava and ashes, have given meagre accounts of part of the occurrences and have rescued some of the bodies of the dead.

At Ottajano, grouped in a confessional of the Church of San Francesco, were found the bodies of three persons, two women and a child. Old Carmela Cunda, whose eighty-one years had been passed on the slopes of Vesuvius, lay with mangled face and constricted limbs upon a ragged mass of lava. Beside her they found Maria Aniella, but so dreadful was her appearance that reverent hands wrapped the aged husk in a cloth before laying it with the others in a shady nook of the ruined market place. The third victim, an unidentified boy of about 8, was curled up by the heat into much the position of a sleeping dog, his tiny limbs twisted under him, his face blackened and stamped deep with mortal terror and agony.

All the next day long processions of mourners filed along the nearly impassable roads, the women's hair loosed on their shoulders, their sacred images heavily shrouded, their grief-stricken chants full of agony and tears. To-morrow more of the dead will come forth, and the sad processions will wind slowly along the dusty mountain highways and trails, singing their dreadful refrain of "Madonna, have pity! Lift up our hearts and hear us!" for many a long day to come.

EARTHQUAKES IN ITALY.

Inhabitants Flee in Terror from Two Damaged Towns.

ROME, April 21.—Thirteen earthquake shocks in succession were felt this morning in the Province of Siena, Tuscany. Several buildings were damaged at Poggibonsi, nineteen miles south of Florence, and Colle di Val d'Elsa.

The buildings damaged at Poggibonsi included the Town Hall.

The population of both places fled in panic to the open country.

Poggibonsi is a small town of about 8,000 inhabitants. On the hill above it is the old Castle of Poggibonsi and the Monastery of St. Lucchese.

Colle di Val d'Elsa is a few miles from Poggibonsi and has about 6,000 inhabitants. It contains a cathedral and some old palaces, including the well-known Palazzo Coccerelli.

A DAY'S WEDDINGS.

CONKLIN—BRUSH.

Miss Jessie Kendall Brush, daughter of the late James K. Brush of Huntington, L. I., was married at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon to Roger Platt Conklin. The old First Presbyterian Church of Huntington, in which the ceremony was solemnized, was decorated elaborately to represent a forest scene.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. George T. Eddy, pastor of the church. The bride wore white chiffon, her veil being caught with orange blossoms, and she carried a bouquet of orchids and lilies of the valley. She was attended by Miss Hazel Brush of Huntington and Miss Nellie Hubbs of Brooklyn, and was given away by her mother.

CINCINNATI, April 21.—Augustus Richie Fisk of the New York banking firm of Harvey Fisk & Sons and Miss Edith Collings, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Crittenden Collings, were married at noon to-day in Calvary Church, Clifton, in the presence of a large gathering of society folk and large delegations from Louisville and New York.

ARMY OF LITTLE MOTHERS HAS AN EASTER HOLIDAY

Aid Association Charges for Once Rid of Nurse Duty.

"LITTLE DAVY," A WONDER

Only Eighteen Months Old, but He Can Eat Ice Cream with the Best of Them.

Seven hundred and three "Little Mothers," protégées of the Little Mothers' Aid Association, celebrated their Easter festival in Webster Hall, at 125 East Eleventh Street, yesterday afternoon. The children came from all parts of this city and Brooklyn, for the Mother House of the association, on Second Avenue, was represented with all four of its branches.

There was not a doubt of the feminine character of the gathering, for when the children were not eating or singing they talked so hard that it sounded like a mammoth afternoon tea party.

The most interesting feature of the party was the show of babies from the care of which the "little mothers" have been relieved by the day nurseries started by the Aid Association. These babies were out in numbers yesterday. The Sound Ferry Nursery had the star exhibit.

This institution has been started only a short time, and only one of its charges stayed away from the festival. This was a fourteen months' old baby, who, for convenience sake, was left behind. The others, thirty-four strong, included "Davy," who, having reached the dignity of eighteen months, sat up and ate ice cream and cake like a gentleman and was warranted not to celebrate with a pain later. The oldest baby from the Ferry was 4 years old, but they were all old enough to go up on the platform and sing about those who "come to nursery school and learn to keep the rule," and must "wash the face and hands with care."

Martha, a pretty little Syrian girl, with big, black eyes and curly hair, remembered that she must not sit down on the floor in the midst of the song, as she does sometimes when she is tired in the nursery, and wail, "Take me, Miss Randall."

Even little Davy sang with the rest. After the song, little Waheba Nahas, another small Eastern beauty, who couldn't speak a word of English when she came to the nursery a few months ago, said: "How do you do, Mrs. Burns?" to every one she met, for this address to the head of the Little Mothers' Association was her first lesson in English.

Members of the Mothers' Club of this city gathered around the babies to get a few lessons in child study, and it was said they laid out a few topics for discussion at their meetings next Winter. This is one of the topics:

"If two young women with two little girl assistants can take thirty-four children half way across the city in the public horse cars, why should one mother be exhausted in taking one baby?"

That was the way the South Ferry tots were managed and the harmony which reigned among them, notwithstanding the various nationalities brought together, made the mothers ask each other if a discussion of patience and discipline in the nursery might not be advantageous.

The children sang Easter, sewing, and cooking songs in excellent voice, time, and tune, but they didn't put more vim into them than they did into the popular songs they sang between times. They sang "Everybody Works but Father" at least five times, having from their positions as "little mothers," an appreciation of the sentiment, and shouted the "Good Old Summer Times" at the top of their lungs as they marched around to receive their bright-colored geraniums.

Among those present were Mrs. Alma Clader Johnston, the Honorary President of the Association, with Mr. Johnston; Mrs. Clarence Burns, the President; Miss Louise Schroeder, who was in charge of the festival with Mrs. H. F. Kiddle, Mrs. S. E. Draimse, and Mrs. Hattie Harms. Miss Abbott recited and a quartet, consisting of Miss Eleanor Colette, Miss Elsie Donnelly, Miss Carrie Finch, and Miss Mary Hodge, sang. There were solos by Miss Effie Stewart and John Lindley.

DEATH OF FATHER MERRICK.

A Prominent New York Jesuit Passes Away in This City.

The Rev. David A. Merrick, S. J., died at the St. Ignatius Loyola rectory, 980 Park Avenue, yesterday morning. Father Merrick was born in Cherry Street Feb. 19, 1833. Up to 1847 he attended various private schools, but that year he entered St. John's College, Fordham, which had just past into the hands of the Jesuits. He was graduated in 1850, and read law for a year in Charles O'Conor's office.

For a time he studied medicine, but finally in 1853 he entered the Society of Jesus. He was sent to France to make his novitiate and to study philosophy. He stayed in Amiens and Lava for six years. In 1864 he completed his theological studies at Fordham, and was ordained priest by Archbishop Bayley in the old St. Patrick's Cathedral, on Mott Street, Sept. 24 of the same year. As a priest Father Merrick's distinguishing traits were his tireless energy and his strength of will. He was stationed at various times in Montreal, in Boston, and in Philadelphia, but his most noteworthy work has been done in this city. The Church of St. Ignatius Loyola and that of St. Francis Xavier are both monuments to his zeal and activity. In 1903 Father Merrick celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his entrance into the Society of Jesus.

CHILDREN STABBED EACH OTHER, POLICE THINK

Victims Said Thief Did It—Are Too Weak to Talk Now.

ODD CASE OF JEWELRY SHOP

Miss Meyerowitz Thinks Robber Found the Knife in the Money Drawer of Maiden Lane Establishment.

The police of the Oak Street Station maintain that Bella Hecht, the sixteen-year-old stenographer, and Jacob Meyerowitz, the office boy employed by Meyerowitz Brothers, diamond dealers at 37 Maiden Lane, stabbed each other. They are, however, about the only persons who have reached any conclusion. Nearly everybody else who has any knowledge of the facts is mystified by the case.

It is surely far from certain that a man with a "fearful, furious face," which is the way the girl described him did not attack the two children when they were alone in the office Friday at the luncheon hour. That he was the worst bungler of a thief and the most inhuman one that has recently been heard from, if he really exists, is plain, for he could easily have frightened this youthful pair of diamond watchers into silence and taken what he wanted. As it was, nothing was stolen.

Both the girl and the boy were unable to help clear the puzzle yesterday. Bella Hecht's lip is almost severed, and the boy is also too low to make it safe to talk to him.

The police are trying to ascertain where the claspknife was bought with which the stabbing was done. This is what happened with regard to that knife, according to Rose Meyerowitz, a sister of the Meyerowitz Brothers, who was in charge of the office during the absence of her brothers:

Jacob had spoken to her about some men who had been glaring into the windows. On Thursday morning he found the big claspknife behind a box in the office. Taking it to Miss Meyerowitz, he said:

"See, Rose, what I have found. I tell you, they'll do you yet."

Jacob advised Miss Meyerowitz to let him take the knife to Mr. Lorsch, the owner of the building, and tell him where he had found it. Miss Meyerowitz declined to let the boy do this, however, because, as she explained last evening, she feared Mr. Lorsch would laugh at them. She allowed the boy to show it to the janitor of the building.

The knife was put in the money drawer, and it is the opinion of Miss Meyerowitz that the thief opened the money drawer, which was plainly in view, found the knife, and used it.

Another significent fact is that the girl's chief solicitude ever since the stabbing has been for the office boy, Jacob—"Yakob," as she called him. The assumption that the two children agreed to say that a burglar had attacked them, which is the view of the police and the Coroner, seems pretty far fetched to the friends of the boy and girl, who cannot bring themselves to believe that either of them could maintain such a pose under the pain of wounds.

There are other circumstances against such a theory. The suspicion was that the two had agreed to stick to this story while on their way to the hospital. Those who entered the jewelry establishment just after the stabbing, however, heard the girl say:

"He threw a towel over my head—he came in through that window."

The window which she indicated was one which opened on a skylight, and was the one at which Jacob said he had seen men looking in.

To Miss Meyerowitz Jacob said after the stabbing:

"You're lucky you weren't here—you'd have got it, too."

According to Miss Meyerowitz the boy, between gasps of pain, gave her a vague description of the man, saying:

"He was a fellow with dark hair coming over his forehead."

The Meyerowitz office is in the rear of the building, and is unusually well supplied with windows, everything going on in the office being observable from adjoining office buildings.

For several months men have been engaged in building an addition to the Lorsch Building. The top of this new addition is almost on a level with the windows of the Meyerowitz jewelry establishment.

The police closely questioned two men who were at work on this addition on the day of the stabbing, and convinced themselves of their innocence. Miss Meyerowitz said last evening, however, that there have been dozens of men at work there in the last few months.

Te theory of the police is that the children quarrelled, that Bella grabbed the knife and stabbed Jacob, and that Jacob snatched the knife from her and inflicted the wounds that are likely to cause her death.

But the boy has a wound in his chest which, after it was inflicted, must have left him pretty weak. Jacob, moreover, is one year the junior of Bella, and is slender and delicate. Even Bella's mother doubts the quarrel theory.

"She always spoke of him as the poor little greenhorn 'Yacob,'" was the way Mrs. Hecht put it.

One thing is certain: the injured boy and girl have neither by word nor look accused each other, and the first question they asked of Miss Meyerowitz, when they saw her after the stabbing, was the same. It was:

"Has anything been stolen! Did you look?"

WERE MARRIED MARCH 3.

Wedding of Reginald P. Sherman and Miss Warby Announced.

There was some surprise in Rye-on-the-Sound yesterday when it was announced that Reginald P. Sherman, a real estate operator, had married Miss Elizabeth Warby of Manhattan on March 3. Cards were sent out yesterday. It is believed that the delay in the announcement was because of the death of John A. Gwynne a few weeks ago. Mr. Gwynne was the father of Mr. Sherman's first wife. Mr. Sherman and Miss Warby were married at the Church of the Heavenly Rest, Manhattan.

Mr. Sherman is a member of the Apawamis Golf Club and the American Yacht Club of Rye.

CHICAGO, April 21.—Richard G. Ivens, convicted of the murder of Mrs. Bessie Hollister, was to-day denied a new trial by Judge Smith and sentenced to hang on June 22.

NIAGARA BELONGS TO NATION.

Griggs Declares the Government Is Entitled to Its Absolute Control.

WASHINGTON, April 21.—Ex-Attorney General John W. Griggs presented a legal argument to the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors to-day, representing the American Civic Association in advocacy of the Burton bill for the preservation of Niagara Falls.

The questions involved, he said, were the legal rights of the Riparian owner, which might be confined to the right to take water from the stream as it flowed by their property for domestic purposes; the legal rights of the State of New York which consisted of the ownership of the bed of the stream to its centre, for all State purposes; the legal rights of the United States and the legal status of the international agreements with respect to the stream.

The main question at issue was the right of the United States, and Mr. Griggs maintained this right was absolute, both with respect to the control of the stream to preserve navigation and because it was a boundary between this and a foreign country. Therefore Congress might do anything it chose in the way of regulating the taking of water from the stream or in any other respect.

On the feature of the Burton bill which prohibits the bringing in of electric power from Canada, he also maintained the right of Congress to act. The case was analogous to the landing of a cable in this country from a foreign country, which required a National permit.

J. Horace McFarland of Pittsburg, President of the American Civic Association, followed Mr. Griggs in advocacy of the bill; Charles M. Drew of Niagara, President of the Commissioners of the State Reservation at Niagara, also spoke for the bill, as did C. R. Woodruff, Secretary of the American Civic Association; E. H. Hall, Secretary of the American Civic and Historical Society, and Frederick Lamb, President of the New York Art Association.

REPORT WHICH CAUSED PROTEST BY ROOSEVELT

Garcia-Merou's Statements in the Argentine Pink Book.

OTHER NATIONS CRITICISED

President Credited with Saying That Argentina Was an Example to Neighboring Republics.

WASHINGTON, April 21.—South American diplomatists in this city were greatly interested to-day in the dispatch from Buenos Ayres, published this morning, regarding the protest of Charles D. White, American Chargé to the Argentine Government, against the report of the late Garcia-Merou, Argentine Minister to the United States, of a conversation between himself and President Roosevelt relating to Argentina and other Central American republics, which occurred March 31, 1905.

Perhaps no notice would have been taken officially of the statements of Minister Garcia-Merou had they not been published to the world in the Pink Book, the official organ of the Argentine Government, but in view of that publication, the President caused a note to be addressed to the Argentine Foreign Office declaring that he had been greatly misrepresented in the publication and not nothing was further from his mind than to reflect in the slightest degree upon any of the South American republics.

The report of Minister Garcia-Merou to which exception had been taken, is as follows:

"Mr. Roosevelt directed to us with the energetic and emphatic tone that is peculiar to him the following words, which I reproduce practically verbatim:

"'There could not be given to me a more pleasant or more desired opportunity than the present to inform you, Mr. Minister, of the high appreciation, admiration, and sympathy which which I feel the phenomenal progress of the Argentine Republic. Your country interests us greatly, and the power and riches that it has now obtained attract us and convince us that you are called to be to the south the defenders of the Monroe Doctrine, as we are in the north.

"'I do not wish to offend any nation, but I may say among us that I should desire that the States which border on the Caribbean Sea, Venezuela, Colombia, and the others, should rise and see beyond their mountains the example of the truly phenomenal progress (repeating the words) of Argentina, and see there a lesson and an example to imitate.

"'You are destined to form in the present century one of the great powers of the world, and your progress will be analogous and parallel to that of the United States. To the greatest extent possible I state and feel with the greatest interest the advance of the Argentine Republic, and I have a great affection for your country.'

"I begged permission to transmit to my Government his words in a prudent form, since I was certain that they would produce a grateful impression. The President said to me:

"'You are right in what you say with respect to the superiority of race of the Argentine people. Brazil is a great country, but has the misfortune that the greater part of its territory is situated within the tropical zone and consequently is not suitable to the white man. The same is true of Colombia, Venezuela, Peru, and Central America.

"'I have great consideration for Chile, but it cannot be forgotten that the territory of that country, which is but a very narrow streak between the mountain and the sea, offers but a slight field for the expansion of its people and cannot be compared with the greatness and wealth of the Argentine territory. Yours is a great nation, and has all the elements for a future greatness.'"

DIVIDES FRIARS' LAND MONEY.

Vatican Decides Question of $7,000,000 Received from Us.

ROME, April 21.—The Vatican has definitely settled the question of the division of the money—$7,000,000—paid by the United States for the friars' lands in the Philippines.

It has been decided that the interest on the amount shall be divided into three separate sums and be distributed yearly by the Vatican—one to the Philippine dioceses according to their need, another to the institution erected by the religious orders in the Philippines, and the third to the orders, largely for their missions in the Far East, and also to support the aged friars who were in the Philippines.

ART BEQUEST ENDANGERED.

Heirs of Stephen Salisbury Sue to Get Millions He Left.

BOSTON, April 21.—A clause in the will of Stephen Salisbury of Worcester, leaving the residue of an estate worth from $3,000,000 to $5,000,000 to the Worcester Art Museum, may not become operative if the heirs prevail in the litigation which has been begun in the Supreme Court. They seek to get all of the property in excess of $1,500,000, on the ground that the corporation cannot hold more than that amount under its charter.

A petition for permission to file quo warranto proceedings against the corporation, with a view to have it show by what right it holds more than the amount stated in its charter, was filed yesterday by Benjamin W. Hubbard and Nathalie D. Hubbard of Forest, Va., and Gorham Hubbard of Boston, cousins and heirs-at-law of the testator.

STRIKE IN MITCHELL'S HANDS.

Executive Board Turns Hard Coal Situation Over to Him and His Men.

INDIANAPOLIS, April 21.—The coal miners' Executive Board completed its work to-day and adjourned. The anthracite situation has been left entirely in the hands of the anthracite miners and their Special Scale Committee, of which President Mitchell is the head.

Secretary-Treasurer W. B. Wilson said to-day that no strike assessment had been levied on the membership now at work, but the board provided that an assessment could be levied as soon as it was thought necessary. Mr. Wilson said he believed that thus far none of the members had even drawn on their district Treasurers.

According to an estimate made by President Mitchell and Secretary-Treasurer Wilson to-day approximately 110,000 union miners will be at work next week. The total membership of the organization is 400,000.

SEARCHLIGHTS' NEW USE.

Long Island Life Savers to be Equipped with Them.

Special to The New York Times.

EASTPORT, L. I., April 21.—What promises greatyl to enhance the efficacy of the life-saving service on the Long Island coast is the introduction of powerful searchlights, which will mage objects clearly distinguishable at three hundred yards. Three stations have been already provided with these searchlights, which will enable the crews to work on the darkest nights.

It is expected that within a short time all the stations will be equipped with the lights.

"CAP & BELLS" TO GIVE FARCE

Williams College Actors Will Produce "The Man from Mexico" Here.

Cap and Bells, the dramatic organization of Williams College, will give "The Man from Mexico" at the Carnegie Lyceum on April 27. This presentation of the well-known farce is declared by those who have seen it to be much better than anything Cap and Bells has done in recent years. The struggles of the men who represent the female characters with the skirts and other necessary or unnecessary articles of feminine apparel are said to add not a little to the amusement created by the original lines and situations of the piece.

Between the acts, Selwyn Reed Pevear, the tenor soloist of the college, is to sing. Many well-known New York women are to be patronesses of the affair. They are:

FAMOUS GUNSTON HALL SOLD.

Gen. R. G. Smith Buys Estate of George Mason, Friend of Washington.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 21.—Gunston Hall, the Colonial home of George Mason, was sold to-day to Gen. Robert Gibson Smith of New Jersey. Gunston is a famous plantation, once embracing 2,000 acres, and situated just below Mount Vernon, on the Potomac River. The place is alive with noble memories. Close by the mansion house is the grave of George Mason, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, the author of the Bill of Rights, the first Constitution of Virginia, a legal pillar that Washington consulted; the companion of Thomas Jefferson, Patrick Henry, James Madison, and other celebrities of the period of the Revolution.

Mason was one of the founders of the Republic, and was accorded to be the wisest man of his period, and one of the ablest debaters the country ever produced.

The mansion house was built by Mason in 1755. He named it after his English ancestry. It is a fine example of Colonial architecture. The interior carvings and delicate tracery, much of it being of roseweed, were doubtless without a peer in Southern homes of that period. Even to this day architects come from far and near to admire and copy the exquisite details of the interior work done in the days when the Indian chief Piscataway paddled his canoe on the Potomac.

The mansion is eighty feet by forty feet, being built with brick twice the size of those made to-day, and brought over from Scotland. Great cellars underlie the whole house, and the masonry is in as good condition at the present time as when laid with oyster shell and mortar, which defies the ravages of time. On the south side, facing the Potomac River, is a small porch where Washington and Mason used to sit and play chess.

DROPPED EGGS ON ASPHALT.

They're Not Very Good, Thinks Mr. Nagle of Paterson.

Special to The New York Times.

PATERSON, N. J., April 21.—A large bullfinch, fighting with a sparrow, flew into the face of Cornelius Nagle of 211 Eleventh Avenue, early this morning, badly cutting his cheek.

Nagle was carrying a basket of eggs to a grocery store, and when the bullfinch flew into his face he dropped the basket to the asphalt. The bullfinch did for the sparrow. The fall settled the eggs.

EXPLOSION DROVE CROWD IN PANIC FROM CHURCH

Priest and Organist Badly Hurt in Passaic.

PICTURE MACHINE BLEW UP

Audience Rushed Terror stricken to the Street—Spark from Cigar Fell on Collodion.

Father Messerschmidt, pastor of St. Stephen's Church in Passaic, N. Y., was seriously injured by an explosion which occurred in the church last night, in the course of a moving picture exhibition. John Kantor, the organist, was so badly hurt that he may die.

A panic followed the explosion, and several hundred persons rushed pell mell into the street. Some cried that the city had been visited by an earthquake and the shrieks of the women in the audience added to the excitement.

It was some minutes before any one had sufficient courage to investigate the result of the explosion. By this time the interior of the church was on fire. Father Messerschmidt and Mr. Kantor were found lying in a half-conscious state ten feet from where they were standing when the explosion took place.

An illustrated lecture on the "Life of Napoleon" was being delivered. Mr. Kantor, the organist, was operating the picture machine. The lecture was nearly over, and the lights were still turned down, when some one lighted a cigar. A spark fell on the collodion used in operating the picture machine. There was a loud crash, and a column of flame shot to the roof.

Every one in the church was stunned for a moment, and then the audience rushed down into the aisles and made for the doors, the women and children screaming for help. Those who flocked to the church met the crowd struggling out. Near-by residents declared that their houses had been shaken, and expressed the belief that an earthquake had occurred.

It was some time before the frightened audience could explain that the explosion occurred inside the church. They were unable to account for it, declaring that a column of flame had suddenly shot from floor to roof accompanied by a crash.

Father Messerschmidt was unable to add to the explanation, and Mr. Kantor was so severely injured that he could only say that he believed a spark from a cigar was responsible for the explosion. Dr. Hiram Williams said that he was doubtful of the organist's recovery.

The fire resulting from the explosion was confined to the interior of the church, which was not badly damaged.

ANGLO-AMERICAN WEDDING.

Minister O'Brien's Daughter Bride of H. G. Chilton in Copenhagen.

COPENHAGEN, Denmark, April 21.—Katherine O'Brien, daughter of the American Minister, T. J. O'Brien, and H. G. Chilton, Third Secretary of the British Legation here, were married this afternoon.

The Countesses Lily and Suzanne Paben Levetzau were the bridesmaids, and R. S. Seymour, Second Secretary of the British Embassy at Vienna, was the best man. The attendance included the whole of the diplomatic body, the high aristocracy of Copenhagen, and friends of both families from abroad. A reception at the American Legation followed.

King Frederick, his daughters, and the Crown Prince, Christian, called at the American Legation this morning and congratulated the Minister, who received many cable messages from friends in America. The bride received numerous gifts from many countries and from members of the royal families of Denmark and Sweden.

PLOTTED TO KILL AUTOISTS.

Six Men Arrested — Plan Involved Wreckage of Motor Car.

Special to The New York Times.

YORK, Penn., April 21.—Chief of Detectives Charles S. White to-night arrested William Mummert, Wilbur Frey, Harry Grim, Oscar Eaton, Harris Hauer, and Harry Billett on the charge of trying to wreck an automobile and kill Dr. E. W. Brickley, an eye specialist, and John Myers, a dealer in automobiles, of this city.

A number of fence rails were picked across the road which were torn from a near-by fence as the men came dashing along in the machine. Myers was barely able to stop the machine in time. It is alleged that several of the men arrested have made a confession to Detective White. They have all been held for a hearing.

Question for the Rio Conference.

WASHINGTON, April 21.—The diplomatic representatives of the South and Central American republics held a meeting at the State Department to-day to consider proposed amendments to the official programme for the Rio conference. The only change of importance made was the addition of a few words to the fourth head, involving the famous Draco Doctrine, which will now read as follows: "A resolution recommending that the second peace conference at The Hague be requested to consider whether, and if at all, the extent to which the use of force for the collection of public debts is admissible."

RURAL CARRIER'S PLUCK.

Covered 23-Mile Route Daily for Three Weeks Over Bad Roads.

WASHINGTON, April 21.—Reports of surprising feats of pedestrianism by rural letter carriers have recently reached the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General. The country roads have been in bad condition for several months, many of them being impassable for vehicles, and some of the carriers have been compelled to traverse their routes on foot.

A record was established by Carrier Jordan I. Fox upon a rural route from Sunbury, Penn. This carrier covered his route on foot for three weeks, during which time he encountered two unusually heavy snowstorms. With the exception of two days, on which he was held back by snowdrifts, he covered the route of twenty-three miles every day.

The Fourth Assistant is much gratified with the loyalty and persistence shown by the rural letter carriers under the trying conditions that have existed during the Winter and early Spring.

USES OF THE WATER POWER IN NEW YORK

How the State's Rivers Are Being Harnessed for Electricity.

NIAGARA ONLY ONE OF MANY

Great Power Station on Upper Hudson That Is Turning Mill Wheels, Moving Street Cars, and Lighting Cities Miles Away.

Efforts now being made to preserve Niagara Falls from further spoliation by water power companies which have greedily been seizing upon the waters of the Falls as the source of almost fabulous power bring prominently forward the subject of water power companies in this State and the use which is being made of them for the electrification of railroads. The power generated by them at Niagara, on the Hudson River, and along other water courses in the State is of course being used for many other purposes than the operation of railroads by electricity, but it is this phase of the subject which presents the most interesting questions. The New York Central some time since entered into contracts with power companies both in the eastern and the western portions of the State, and quite recently other railroads, including the Erie and indirectly the Delaware and Hudson, have made arrangements for the operation of subsidiary lines by electric current derived from water power works in various parts of the State.

While in the west, at Niagara, the power companies are proceeding with their development plans only in the face of strong opposition, the development work undertaken by companies in the eastern portion of the State along the Hudson River and other streams is said to be welcomed by those interested in the preservation of the State's sources of water supply. In line with this assertion is the fact that both the State and the water power companies in the eastern portion of the State are interested in the damming of the lakes in the upper portion of the Hudson watershed and in the building of new reservoirs.

The water power companies that have been particularly prominent in connection with the electrification of railroads are the Hudson River Electric Power Company and the Ontario Power Company. These two companies are the companies with which the New York Central has contracted for its electric power to be delivered along the whole length of its line from Albany to Buffalo. Syracuse is the dividing point. West of that city the Central will secure its power from the Ontario Company, while to the east the source of supply will be the Hudson River Electric Power Company.

The Ontario Power Company, although representing largely the investment of American capital, is situated on the Canadian side of the Niagara River. The plants of the Hudson River Company are situated at Spier Falls, at Mechanicsville on the Schoharie Creek, near Amsterdam, and at Utica. The last-named plant is operated by steam. It was constructed to supply power to the New York Central in the neighborhood of Utica in advance of the construction of the transmission line, which will carry the water generated current from Spier Falls as far west as Syracuse. These plants have a present capacity of 47,000 registered horse power. While this total appears small in comparison with the 175,000 horse power or more generated by the plants on the Niagara River, it nevertheless represents a tremendous amount of energy. Some idea of what may be done with generators of 47,000 normal horse power capacity is indicated by the work that is now being done by the power supplied by the Hudson River Electric Power Company.

In addition to the operation of electric light and power companies at Glens Falls, Watervliet, Saratoga, and Ballston, all of which are directly owned by the Hudson River Electric Power Company, that company is operating the electric lines controlled by the New York Central from Little Falls to Rome, is supplying all the power for the General Electric Company's works at Schenectady, is operating the interurban and city traction lines owned by the Schenectady Railway Company and by the United Traction Company of Albany, and in addition is supplying power for the lighting companies of Albany and Troy and for a number of smaller undertakings at other places.

The present development of the company, although covering a broad field, is only the beginning of the company's plans. The plants now owned by the Hudson River Power Company and their capacities are: Spier Falls, 32,000 horse power; Mechanicsville, 7,000; Schoharie Falls, 2,000, and Utica, 6,000. This makes a total of 47,000 horse power, and, allowing for a maximum possible overload of 50 per cent., the company now is in a position to produce a maximum of 70,000 horse power. Further development already planned by the company and definitely announced will add 25,000 horse power more, which will be supplied by plants to be located at Ashley Falls and Horton Falls, on the Sacandaga River, and at Gays Falls, on the Hudson River, which is at a point between Spier Falls and Glens Falls. Apart from these definite plans, the company now controls various other sites available for water power plants, and it is its intention to develop these in due course. These developments will eventually give the Hudson River Power Company a total considerably in excess of 100,000 horse power.

The scheme is to interconnect all the power plants, or rather, to re-enforce the main power current at various points by running the currents from the subsidiary power plants into the main transmission line. This line will have a total length of 146 miles from Spier Falls on the Hudson to Syracuse, which is practically the dividing line of the territories served respectively by the Hudson River and Niagara Power Companies. This transmission line is to be built for its entire distance over a private right of way 100 feet wide. The cables, which consist of nine strands of copper wire, are carried on steel frame towers 50 feet high placed at distances varying from 500 feet to 750 feet. The cables are capable of carrying a current of 60,000 volts. Engineering difficulties in carrying current to a much greater distance than 150 miles practically prevent direct competition at present between the power companies at Niagara and those in the Hudson River Valley. Syracuse, which is 146 miles from Spier Falls, as the transmission line runs, is 158 miles from Niagara. Current carried a greater distance than that, it is said, cannot be sold on a profitable basis in competition with steam generated current. As it happens, the New York Central is able by the power secured from these two sources to cover its entire line through Central New York. Already the work of electrification of the West Shore tracks is under way from Utica to Syracuse, and it is generally believed that eventually the whole West Shore Road will be electrified, at least so far as its passenger service is concerned. The New York Central having secured control of a number of interurban electric lines in Central New York, requires power for their operation in addition to that which will be used directly on the West Shore's line.

The contract between the New York Central and the Hudson River Electric Power Company runs for about twenty-five years, and calls for a total of about 20,000 horse power. At present the New York Central is taking from the company about 4,000 horse power, but this is to be gradually augmented as the road's requirements for electric power increase with the gradual development of its plans for electrification. West of Syracuse the New York Central will secure its power from the Ontario Power Company, with which it has entered into a long-term contract. Should the plans of the New York Central eventually call for the delivery of electric current along the Hudson River Division between New York and Albany, it will be possible within the radius of 150 miles from the power stations of the Hudson River Electric Power Company to deliver power practically all the way to New York City.

The extent to which the Hudson River power companies can cover the eastern portion of the State is indicated by the fact that the field covered by the Hudson River Electric Power Company includes the following counties: Warren, Washington, Saratoga, Rensselaer, Albany, Schenectady, Montgomery, Herkimer, Oneida, Madison, Fulton, Columbia, Greene, Otsego, Schoharie, Onondaga, and Cortland. The company is already supplying power in the first ten of the counties named, and the others are within reach of its lines, as these have already been planned. It is claimed on behalf of the Hudson River Electric Power Company that it finds much readier sale for its power than the Niagara power companies, owing to the numerous and varied industrial undertakings which are located in the northern portion of the Hudson River Valley, and through the Mohawk Valley. The price secured for its current by the Hudson River Electric Power Company is said to be considerably higher than that secured by the Niagara Power Company. This, no doubt, is accounted for in large measure by the superabundance of power at Niagara Falls. Comparisons between the possibilities in the way of power development along the Hudson River and its tributaries and at Niagara are highly interesting.

The Hudson River at Spier Falls has a maximum flow of 6,000 cubic feet per second, which in the dry months of the year sometimes falls to a minimum of 2,000 cubic feet per second. The Niagara River at the Falls has a flow of 27,000 cubic feet a second, or nearly five times the maximum flow of the Hudson River at Spier Falls. Moreover, the heads possible at Niagara are far in excess of those obtainable along the Upper Hudson. The turbines of the Spier Falls plant of the Hudson River Electric Power Company are operated under an 80-foot head. Those of the Niagara Falls Power Company are operated under a head of 210 feet. The power generated by this one company at its Niagara River plants amounts to 105,000 horse power, and this is not much more than half of the total power now available at Niagara Falls. When the companies now operating there are developed to the full extent planned a stupendous amount of power will be developed; in addition to the Niagara Falls Power Company's 105,000 horse power, that company, through the plant which it controls on the Canadian side, produces 40,000 horse power, and it is intended to increase this to a maximum of 110,000 horse power. The Ontario Power Company, which is also located in Canada, now has installed generators producing 20,000 horse power which will be increased shortly to 60,000 horse power, while the total development planned by this company calls for 200,000 horse power. This makes a total for these three companies alone of 415,000 horse power.

It is not surprising that plans calling for such tremendous power as this should call forth protests from those who fear that such draughts upon the power available at Niagara may prove a serious menace to the scenic grandeur of Niagara Falls. That the protest against the spoliation of Niagara Falls is to be an energetic one is shown by the interest which the present Administration is taking in the question, and the recommendations that have been made by President Roosevelt on the subject of a law intended to prevent further heavy inroads upon the water supply at Niagara Falls.

FIRST TURBINE LAUNCHED.

Built for the Eastern Steamship Company in Pennsylvania.

Special to The New York Times.

CHESTER, Penn., April 21.—The first turbine steamship ever built in the United States was launched at the Roach Shipyard, this city, to-day. The vessel is the Governor Cobb, and is destined for the Boston-New Brunswick trade of the Eastern Steamship Company of Boston. Outwardly, the new vessel resembles in appearance the Governor Dingley and the Calvin Austin, also of the Eastern Steamship Company's fleet, which vessels, propelled by reciprocating engines, have been in service for some time.

The Governor Cobb is 200 feet long and 51 feet wide and has 14 feet draught. She has a double steel bottom and four decks, known as main, saloon, gallery, and dome decks. There are 175 staterooms. The motive power will consist of Parsons marine steam turbines, which have been constructed by the W. & A. Fletcher Company of Hoboken.

There are three propellers. Steam will be supplied by six Scotch boilers. The vessel will be completed at the Fletcher works in Hoboken.

DOCTOR STILL THINKS THE M'CANN GIRL LIVES

Specialist, However, Says She Is Unquestionably Dead.

HER CONDITION UNCHANGED

Child's Appearance Due to Natural but Unusual Causes, Bellevue Pathologist Says—Burial Postponed.

In a tenement house in White's Place, an alley running from 214 West Eighteenth Street almost through to Seventeenth Street, the body of Veronica McCann, 11 years old, lies either dead or in a state of catalepsy. Although she is in her coffin and surrounded by mourning friends and banks of flowers, the burial certificate has been rescinded and the funeral postponed. All this because there is still a difference of opinion as to whether the little girl is dead or alive.

While Dr. William Willard Armstrong, pathologist of Bellevue Hospital, who lives at 250 West Thirty-ninth Street, declares the child is dead and attributes all the remarkable features of the case to natural if unusual reasons, Dr. Joshua M. Fraser, also a graduate of Bellevue, is supported in his belief that the child still lives by a post-graduate nurse, members of the McCann family, and Father Magrath of St. Francis Xavier, the priest who first noticed the lifelike appearance of the girl.

The puzzling symptoms are these: Veronica was supposed to have died at 5 o'clock on Wednesday morning. For four days she has been in the coffin without showing the usual signs of death. Rigor mortis has not set in; at times the temperature of her body has been higher than usual in a dead person; her face shows a tint of lifelike color through the usual pallor of a dead person, while her eyes, when the lids are raised, are quite clear, as of one who is asleep.

Veronica McCann, the eldest of three sisters, is a daughter of John McCann, who is in the employ of a dry goods firm. Ever since she was two years old the girl suffered from heart disease. For years she was attended by Dr. Frazer of 278 West Thirty-eighth Street, whose address is now the Hotel Bartholdi. He became much attached to his little patient.

On Tuesday evening Dr. Frazer was called in to attend Veronica, whose heart had suddenly failed. At 5 o'clock on Wednesday morning, after a violent fit of coughing, the girl suddenly became unconscious and her heart ceased to beat. Dr. Frazer issued a certificate of death and left the house.

The body was turned over to E. A. Copeland, an undertaker, of 210 West Thirty-fifth Street. Veronica was dressed in a white silk frock with white stockings and put in a coffin in her parents' home in the alley. The funeral was arranged for Friday afternoon. The hearse and carriages lined up on Eighteenth Street and Father Magrath arrived to read the services. When he had finished he asked permission to look at Veronica. He laid his hand on her, then cried out:

"What is this?"

He then took her hand and raised it. A brief examination showed that the body was perfectly pliant, and that the feet were slightly warm. Father Magrath told the parents that he was not versed in such matters, but would advise the funeral to be stopped and a physician called.

Dr. Frazer went to the house, and after a glance at the girl in the coffin ordered that the funeral be stopped until a further examination of the body was made. He then notified his colleague, Dr. Armstrong, that the case of Veronica McCann presented some extraordinary features and requested him to come to the alley. Dr. Armstrong brought with him to the house a post-graduate nurse, Miss Rose Hart. At the first glance Miss Hart, the nurse, said:

"Why, this girl is not dead."

Dr. Armstrong, who has had experience with catalepsy cases, was inclined to agree with her. Dr. Frazer, who had not seen the body since Wednesday morning, was much agitated by the new development and naturally inclined to the belief that the girl was not dead.

The two physicians applied every test known to their science to ascertain if life was present. The girl did not respond to the blood test; consequently, when the body responded to another test applied by Dr. Armstrong, the two physicians and the nurse were greatly surprised. Although the girl had been dead, apparently, for nearly three days, Dr. Armstrong noticed that the eyes were quite clear, as he later said, "seemingly consciously intelligent." He also found no trace of rigor mortis. A mirror placed over the girl's mouth was slightly clouded.

Notwithstanding these facts, Dr. Armstrong, without giving his reasons for thinking so at the time, stated that, in his opinion, the girl was dead. Dr. Frazer, however, was not convinced, and even went so far as to have the death certificate rescinded. The nurse was positive in her opinion that the girl was in a state of catalepsy.

Dr. Frazer stayed through the night until yesterday morning watching the girl. When he went away he left a woman to watch for any sign of returning life. This woman said later that Veronica had moved and whispered something. This was scouted by the father of the girl, who had also sat up all night. The woman's statement, together with the wild rumors that circulated throughout the neighborhood, were attributed to the hysteria such an incident would produce among susceptible women.

John McCann, the father, said yesterday that he personally feared the girl was dead. His wife clung to the doubt raised by Father Magrath and Dr. Frazer. Neither of the parents would agree to interment until that doubt was settled.

Yesterday the girl still lay in the casket, with no apparent change decisively indicating life or death. Dr. Frazer called at the house twice, at noon and again at 5 o'clock in the afternoon. After the last visit he left the house, evidently much unnerved. When asked if he had reached a decision, he shook his head.

"There is a doubt," he said when pressed for a definite answer.

"Is there any change since Dr. Armstrong's examination twenty-four hours ago?" he was asked.

"None," was the reply.

Dr. Frazer also stated that the body would not be buried before to-day, and even that was doubtful.

"There have been such cases before," was all that he could be induced to say further.

Dr. Armstrong was asked for the reasons supporting his theory that the girl was dead.

"This is the most remarkable case that has ever come under my notice," he said, "and at Bellevue I have seen many. Nevertheless, I contend that, in spite of the many puzzling features, the girl is dead.

"The principal test was the mirror over her mouth. The fogging came from the fact that the glass was of a higher temperature than that of the body, upon which, I learn, ice had been laid.

"The girl died, I am sure, from the breaking of a tendon in the ventricle of the heart. The break caused sudden death, and therein lies the secret of these unusual symptoms. When death is not sudden, the slow diminishing of the heart's action fails to keep the blood in circulation. In this case, as in some I have known, the sudden stoppage of the heart's action left the blood with every drop at its post of action. That accounts for the color in the girl's face, the clearness of her eyes, and the fact that she responded to some of the tests made. The real blood test—which should have shown the blood slightly in motion, even had she been in a cataleptic trance—failed.

"The warmth of parts of the body was what most deceived me at first. I have decided in my mind that this was caused by the reflection of sunlight from a point of the window. The absence of rigor mortis is simply due to the fact that it had already come and gone.

"Taking the whole case into consideration, I think it a remarkable series of coincidences, and I hardly blame Dr. Frazer even now for harboring a doubt about the death of a patient whom he had tended for years."

The incident provoked a morbid excitement in the neighborhood of White's place and the difference of opinion still existing between the doctors and among friends has not tended to allay it.

Coroners' Physician O'Hanlon viewed the body of the child last night, and reported to Coroner Harburger that there was no doubt that she was dead. The doctor said he found unmistakable evidences in support of this opinion.

BULGARIA'S BOLD MOVE.

Petroff to Visit the Powers and Urge Absolute Independence.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, April 21.—The Orient Correspondenz of this city reports that Gen. Petroff, head of the Bulgarian Cabinet and Minister of Foreign Affairs will shortly leave Sofia on an important political mission to Vienna and Berlin, whence he will go to Paris and St. Petersburg.

It appears that notwithstanding the troubles in Macedonia, Bulgaria considers the time favorable to press for absolute independence of Turkey.

NEW FRENCH LINER SAILS.

The Provence Expected to Make the Trip Here in Six Days.

HAVRE, France, April 21.—The new French Line steamer La Provence left here to-day on her maiden trip to New York. The new liner is the largest ship in the French mercantile marine. She measures over 627 feet from stem to stern, is of 14,200 tons, and her normal speed is of twenty-one knots, permitting the trip across the Atlantic to be made in six days.

Accommodation is provided for 400 first-class passengers, 200 second, and 900 third. The crew consists of 500 men, under the command of fourteen officers. In addition, there is a staff of 150 waiters, stewards, stewardesses, &c., making a total of 2,000 persons on board when all her cabins are filled.

The main saloon of La Provence is in Louis XVI. style, in white and gold, and lighted by a large dome. The dining saloon seats 250, and is decorated in Louis XV. style. Besides these there are smoking rooms and boudoirs, which together with the staterooms are all furnished in the most artistic and comfortable manner. There are six suites de luxe, each provided with special bathroom and electric heating apparatus. An elevator has been installed to convey passengers to and from the three upper decks.

An interesting feature of the new steamer is the elaborate system of precautions for the safety of passengers. All the lifeboats, numbering twenty, together with six rafts, can, it is claimed, be put into the water in forty seconds by means of an ingenious apparatus requiring only four men to work it. Each cabin, besides, is provided with lifebelts. Against the danger of fire a network of indicators connects every part of the ship with the bridge and the engine room. The officer of the watch can close every watertight compartment from his post. Finally, La Provence is fitted with wireless telegraphy apparatus.

LABOR RIOTS IN FRANCE.

Strikers Erecting Barricades and Fighting the Troops.

LENS, France, April 21.—Comparative calm prevails here to-night, strong patrols being on duty throughout the district, with fixed bayonets and drawn sabres. By the order of the Prefect all saloons are closed. Sixteen battalions of infantry and four squadrons of cavalry are expected to arrive to-night.

During the day the striking coal miners erected barricades, destroyed the railroad, and pulled down telegraph and telephone wires. Four army officers were wounded during a charge by the troops against the strikers.

VALENCIENNES, April 21.—An encounetr occurred to-day between 5,000 striking miners from Denain and a detachment of troops detailed to prevent the miners from interfering with non-strikers at Trith-Saint-Leger, about four miles from here. Many officers, soldiers, and strikers were severely wounded.

LORIENT, April 21.—The general strike inaugurated by the trades unions on Thursday is in full operation. Afrays between the troops and strikers are frequent, and the cavalry has been forced to charge mobs. Ten arrests were made to-day.

BRITISH OFFICERS PUNISHED.

Col. Cuthbert Loses Command as Result of Lieut. Kennedy's "Ragging."

ALDERSHOT, England, April 21.—The decision of the War Office in the case of the officers of the First Battalion of the Scots Guard, charged with the "ragging" of Second Lieut. Clark-Kennedy of the regiment because he was unable to meet certain regimental expenses, was promulgated to-day in the presence of all the officers.

By the decision, Lieut. Col. G. J. Cuthbert was relieved of his command, Adjt. Capt. R. G. Stracey received a light sentence, and four Lieutenants charged with connection with the affair lose a year's seniority. Lieut. Clark-Kennedy has left the regiment.

Lieut. Clark-Kennedy, after a mock court-martial, was stripped and bathed with motor oil, covered with feathers, and had his hair smeared with jam. He escaped from his tormentors by jumping through a window and taking refuge in a hotel.

BALTIMORE, April 21.—Dr. Esther Van Deman, who took degrees in the Michigan and Chicago Universities, and who for the last two years has been instructor of law in the Woman's College, has been appointed holder of the Carnegie Fellowship of Classical Research in the American School of Classical Studies in Rome.

The honor is considered to be an especially high one.

Ladrone Leader Surrenders.

MANILA, April 21.—Vilafarte, the Ladrone leader in Malolos, fifteen miles from Manila, surrendered to-day to the constabulary here. He will be paroled if he will return to the mountains and assist in the capture of the Ladrone chief Sakay.

Any one who lost a seventy-five-pound keg of giant powder on St. Paul's Avenue, near Newark Avenue, Jersey City, some time on Friday night will find it at the Oakland Avenue Police Station. Chief Murphy believes the keg was stolen from the Lackawanna tunnel, at Eighteenth Street.

Brown Not to Displace Newman.

It was given out officially at the offices of the New York Central Railroad yesterday that W. C. Brown is not coming here from Chicago to displace President Newman. Mr. Brown is to make his headquarters here to facilitate his work following the Central's policy of centralization. The officers of the road will remain the same as for several years past. Mr. Brown is the Senior Vice President of the Central's system.

RUSSIA OPENLY BIDS FOR FOREIGN CAPITAL

Invites Investments to Develop the Nation's Resources.

MONARCHISTS MAKE PROTEST

Oppose the Parliament and Urge the Czar Not to Permit Foreigners to Exploit the Country.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 21.—The Government to-night in an official communication made a direct bid for the investment of foreign capital, declaring that the convocation of the Russian Parliament will mark the end of the vexatious restrictions heretofore existing upon the exploitation of Russia's resources.

Siberia and Central Asia especially are pointed out as fields for development, and at the same time two rather rosy statements concerning the internal situation, financially and politically, are published.

Emperor Nicholas has received a dispatch from the Congress of Monarchists, in session at Moscow, laying at his feet the unanimous conviction of the delegates that the "unlimited" autocracy should be continued and at the same time humbly protesting against the exploitation of Russia by foreign capital.

The Gosudarstvo says it considers that the temper of the Reactionists of Moscow, where the Extremists even went to the length of proposing to prevent the assembling of Parliament, to be a grave danger, and says:

"It is apparent that the new régime will have to fight on two fronts, namely, with the Right as well as with the Revolutionists, and it is the duty of the real friends of liberty to aid the Government in its heavy task."

The radical papers have been filled with attacks upon foreign countries for furnishing funds to the Russian Government in the present crisis, declaring that these will only enable the Government to continue its war against the liberties of the people. Some of the newspapers are seriously undertaking a campaign in favor of boycotting goods from France and the other countries which participated in the loan.

MOSCOW, April 21.—The sessions of the Congress of Monarchists here have been characterized by the most inflammatory speeches.

Vladimir Gringmuth, publisher of the Moscow Viedomosti, declared that "Holy Russia must be saved from the Revolutionists, the chief conspirators of which are the Armenian and Catholic priests and the Jewish rabbis."

Prof. Nicholsky, the noted Reactionary, said that the Parliament could only advance the interests of non-Russians, adding:

"If the iron hand of power does not rescue us Russia will witness outrages from which God save us and the Jews."

A semi-official communication issued to-day declares that the agrarian disorders predicted for the Spring are now impossible, as the troops everywhere in the empire have been considerably reinforced and distributed in the localities where disorders were anticipated. The communication also says that the recruits have completed their training; that the reservists have been disbanded, and that the police have been thoroughly reorganized and increased by 55,000 men. It says, also, that there is every indication that the peasants are peaceful.

Another communication says that, despite a decrease of $3,000,000 in railway receipts, the revenue for February was $7,000,000 greater than that for February, 1905, and that the greatest increases were attained in the revolutionary districts.

RESENT TREATMENT OF GORKY

Russian Newspapers Call Americans Pharisees and Swine.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 21.—Throughout the week the newspapers have made features of numerous letters and articles in denunciation of the treatment Maxim Gorky has received in the United States, some of them stigmatizing Americans as Pharisees and fat swine, and denouncing them for their hypocritical adherence to conventionalities.

The Twentieth Century, formerly the Russ, sneeringly remarked that the Americans were touched by Gorky's tribute to the "bronze idol" of liberty in New York Harbor, but were terribly offended when he attempted to put his ideas of liberty in practice. The paper declared that every book of Mark Twain, whom Russians previously have esteemed, hereafter will be branded as shamebul hypocrisy because he joined the persecutors of the "defender of the rights of man." It also severely criticises Gorky for presenting excuses for his action to the "country of bourgeoisie."

ATHLETIC TEAMS READY FOR THE OLYMPIC GAMES

World's Greatest Athletic Festival Will Start To-day.

AMERICANS' CHANCES BRIGHT

Royalty Will Witness Carnival Which Opens in the Stadium at Athens —Programme for Series.

ATHENS, April 21.—Foreign athletes from all quarters of the globe are arriving in numbers to-day, preparatory to the opening of the Olympic Games here to-morrow. Fully 500 visiting contestants will be in attendance when the carnival is officially opened by King George in the Stadium. The track there is overrun to-day with practicing runners, and the trials are being watched with the keenest interest by the populace. The Hungarian, German, Danish, Swedish, Norse, and Austrian teams arrived this afternoon, and, with the American and English contestants who reached here yesterday, practically complete the lists.

From the trials which have been witnessed in the Stadium to-day there is a pronounced conviction that the majority of the events will be carried off by the American and English athletes. They in their work showed excellent condition as a rule, and the greatest proficiency. Among the athletes of other countries there appeared occasionally a performer of especial merit in an individual event, but the Anglo-Saxons show a general proficiency that is astounding to the Athenians.

The Americans were visited in their quarters to-day by United States Minister Jackson. On returning he said that they were delighted with their reception and with the facilities for their comfort and convenience. Not a single complaint did he hear on any side from any one of the American contingent, and all seemed to be in the best of spirits and perfectly confident of the issue. "There has been some difficulty experienced with the physical condition of a few of the men," he said, "but there is nothing very serious the matter with any of them."

Harry L. Hillman and James S. Mitchell are still suffering from the effects of the injuries received on shipboard, though Hillman is recovering the full use of his knee very rapidly, and hopes that it will bother him very little. Mitchell believes he will be able to contest in his events; though he will certainly be handicapped by his injured shoulder.

Eli B. Parsons and Fay Moulton have both had a slight attack of tonsilitis, which, while it will not incapacitate either, has made both feel very badly, and has prevented anything like effective practice. The rest of the men are in the best shape, and appear to have felt no bad effects from their long sea trip and the consequent inability to practice. James E. Sullivan, the official American representative, expressed himself as thoroughly satisfied with the arrangements for the games, for the care of the American team, and with the team's prospects.

The great athletic event will take place in the Panathenaic Stadium, which has just been restored to all its classic beauty of snow-white marble by the munificence of the Greek merchant whose statue stands before its gates. It is a very different arena from that which was used at the first revival of these historic games in 1896, and will now accommodate 70,000 spectators, with 40,000 reserved and numbered seats. It is the largest amphitheatre in the world, built of Pentelic marble, and forms a worthy background for the setting of a scene that recalls the athletic triumphs of the Greek world at Olympia.

Great distinction will mark the festival by the presence of the King and Queen of England and the King of the Hellenes and other members of the Greek royal family. At one time it was thought that Emperor William of Germany would attend, but he has abandoned his Mediterranean trip. Many other distinguished American and European persons will be spectators during the festival.

The Marathon race, which is the feature of the games, will probably be held on Tuesday, May 1, and close the actual contests.

The following is the programme of the games and the accompanying festivities:

April 22—Official opening of the games in the Stadium, gymnastic competitions by teams; demonstration by the Swedish team, and the illumination of the Acropolis in the evening.

April 23.—Morning—Opening of the shooting and fencing competitions and athletic games, football, and lawn tennis. Afternoon—Cycling competitions, followed by a reception of the athletes and gymnasts in the evening.

April 24.—Morning—Rowing and swimming competitions, 100 and 600 meters. Afternoon—Fencing and swimming competitions and other games; excursion to Salamis.

April 25.—Morning—Continuation of fencing, shooting, and athletic games. Afternoon—Close of the athletic games. Evening—Gala performance at the opera.

April 26.—Morning—Swimming, 400 meters; fencing and other competitions. Afternoon—Finish of fencing competitions. Evening—Reception of the Parnassus Club.

April 27.—Morning—Visit to the Acropolis. Afternoon—Foot racing, field events, and gymnastics in the Stadium. Evening—Venetian fete.

April 28.—Afternoon—Foot racing and other sports and gymnastics. Evening—Illumination of the Acropolis and surrounding fields.

The American Olympic Games Committee selected the athletes who represent the United States. They come from all parts of the Union, and, with one or two exceptions, they represent the best athletic skill in the country. Although nearly all the nations of Europe will be represented, the struggle for the premier honors will be between the American, British, and French athletes.

For the 100-meter race America will be represented by Charles R. Parsons, W. D. Eaton, W. A. Schick, Archie Hahn, Lawson Robertson, and G. A. Queryouze. England has entered S. Abrahams of Cambridge University and champion of England; R. McPherson of Edinburgh, A. H. Healey of London, and R. C. Reed of Durham University. With the absence of W. H. Morton, the fastest sprinter in England, the Americans should capture two or three prizes in this event.

K. Cornwallis of Oxford University is the most favored for the 400-meter race. The other Britishers in this event are J. W. Horne, Cambridge University; Lieut. Haswell, Edinburgh, quarter-mile champion; R. C. Reed, Durham University; W. D. Anderson and R. McPherson, Scotland, and S. Abrahams, Cambridge University. If H. L. Hillman, Jr., is in good condition he should make Cornwallis run his best to win; Robertson, Schick, and Moulton should also give a good account of themselves.

In the 800-meter race Cornwallis again appears prominent. His best time is 1:54 4-5, which is better than any other entry. England's string, which is a strong one, in this event follows: Lieut. J. W. Horne, Cambridge University; J. McGough, one-mile champion of Scotland; R. P. Crabbe, Cambridge University; Lieut. Haswell, W. D. Anderson, and R. McPherson. J. D. Lightbody of Chicago University has a record of 1:57 2-5 for this event and is running better this year than ever. Eli B. Parsons of Yale, intercollegiate half-mile champion, ran the distance in 1:56 last year, and should repeat; Howard V. Valentine, New York Athletic Club, is the American, Canadian, and metropolitan champion, with 1:57 3-5 as his best time. America will have several other good men in this event, but they do not class with Lightbody, Parsons, and Valentine.

America will be strong in the 1,500-meter race, with J. P. Sullivan, 4:22 2-5; George V. Bonhag, J. D. Lightbody, M. Spring, and C. J. Bacon. But they will be pitted against the fastest milers in England, including K. Cornwallis, A. R. Churchill, and F. M. Edwards, Cambridge University, all of whom are good for 4:20 or better. This event promises to be one of the most interesting of the festival. M. Scalhat of France may prove a contender. He holds the French record for the distance, 4:08 1-5.

For the five-mile race George V. Bonhag, Harvey W. Cohn, and Michael Spring will represent the United States, but A. R. Churchill of Cambridge University is probably the best man in the world at the distance. The other English entrants are F. M. Edwards, Lieut. Hawtrey, S. H. Carnelly, and H. G. Weber.

A big field will compete in the Marathon race. Joseph Forshaw, Missouri A. C., Western champion, will have the assistance of M. Spring, Harvey W. Cohn, J. J. Fowler, W. G. Frank, and G. V. Bonhag. England will send a big delegation for this event, including H. C. Hawtrey, H. G. Weber, S. H. Carnelly, A. R. Churchill, and J. E. Fowler-Dixon. Ireland's representative will be J. J. Daly. J. N. Cormack will compete for South Africa, and Roffi, who won the French Marathon race, with Bonheure, winner of the 1904 race, will represent France.

In the jumping events the principal entrants are: Meyer Prinstein, 24:07¼, and Hugo Friend, 22:10⅛, America; P. O. Connor, 24:11½, Ireland; C. Leahy, 23:04; S. Abrahams, D. Walters, and A. H. Healey, England, are the most prominent in the broad jump. Ray Ewry and Meyer Prinstein should have little difficulty in winning from P. O'Connor and C. Leahy in the standing jumps, while H. W. Kerrigan will be pitted against O'Connor and Leahy in the high jump. Molinie, the French champion, cannot do better than 5:09, and can hardly be considered a contender.

The hurdle events should prove interesting. The Americans on form should win with Hugo Friend, R. G. Leavitt, and H. L. Hillman, Jr., as W. D. Anderson, D. W. Walters, and A. H. Healey of England are much slower than the Americans, and Europe has no hurdler of note. The discus throwing will bring together M. J. Sheridan, the all-around champion of America, and Robert T. Edgren of America; G. Robertson, Oxford University, and Tison of France. Ray Ewry has little to fear in the pole vault, as England has no polevaulter capable of clearing over 10:06.

The accident to James S. Mitchel may affect the Americans' chances in the weight events. Mitchel had his shoulder dislocated on the voyage, and may not be able to compete. Martin J. Sheridan and Robert T. Edgren should be strong enough to win from the foreign contestants in the absence of Mitchel.

With C. M. Daniels, Joseph W. Spencer, and Marquand Schwartz representing America, and J. H. Derbyshire, H. Taylor, and J. A. Jarvis of England, the swimming races should be productive of new records. The entrants are the fastest men in their respective countries, and the much-mooted question of superiority of the American and English styles will be determined. F. A. Bornaman will compete in the diving contests for America, while England's representatives will be G. Melville Clark and N. Smythe.

America will have no entries in the walking, gymnastic cycling, or gymnastic Penthalon events, but England, France, Denmark, and Germany have sent men. I. Niflot of St. George A. C. will be America's sole representative in the wrestling events.

RAM'S HORN, FROM WEST, WON IN A BIG GALLOP

Newcomer in the East Took the Queens County Handicap.

BELMONT COLTS RAN ONE, TWO

Curriculum and Okenite Led the Field Home in Stake Race at the Aqueduct Track.

The record attendance at the Queens County Jockey Club's racing on the Aqueduct track was attained yesterday, when the summerlike weather, aided by an attractive programme, drew a crowd estimated at 15,000 to the races.

Two stakes were run in the course of the afternoon, and both went to the post choices, though in the case of the Queens County Handicap winner it took quite a lot of Western money to settle the betting in a positive way at the close and make the Western horse Ram's Horn the favorite.

Red Knight, ridden by the crack jockey Radtke, was the favorite in the early betting, but went back to the place of second choice as the money came in on Ram's Horn, while Race King and Bohemia each received steady support. The race, run as the fourth event of the card, made about as spectacular a contest as the season has furnished to date. Red Knight broke best and went on to race in front, followed in the opening strides by Race King and Ram's Horn, in a pace that strung out the field after the first few jumps. Race King showed much of the speed that he had in the race for the Carter Handicap, but Ram's Horn had more speed at all times, and the contest around the far turn and to the head of the stretch took on the aspect of a quarter sprint, as the rivals battled for the lead. With his advantage at the send-off, Red Knight lasted in front to the middle of the turn, but there gave way to Ram's Horn, and from that point on to the winning post Ram's Horn held his place in front, and won in a big gallop, two lengths clear of another Western horse, Batts, at 50 to 1, which was well up all the way and which got second place by a margin of about a length from Race King.

For the Canarsie Stakes only seven horses ran, but the number included two entries each from the stables of August Belmont and James R. Keene. The Belmont entry, Okenite and Curriculum, always held the place of favorite, and started at odds-on, Okenite supposedly being the better of the pair. As the race was run the stable estimate required revision, for from the first jump to the last Curriculum raced the better horse, breaking in front and holding his place in the lead to the last strides. For the first furlong Okenite was second, Merrill and Solly M. then passing him and trying after the leader, but with all the horses at the whip in the final furlong Curriculum lasted best, while Okenite there passed the others and fought it out with his stable mate. Both horses were ridden out at the finish, Curriculum winning, hard pressed, by a half length, while Okenite was a similar distance before Solly M., third. For the steeplechase, Coppera was a steady favorite.

Waterbearer, favorite in the maiden race, got second place, after meeting much interference in the last half mile, Aya, a well-backed "good thing," winning under pressure. Summaries:

BETTING ON BIG HANDICAPS.

The Picket Backed to Win the Brooklyn Again.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, April 21.—Since the opening of the New York racing season and the running of the Carter and Montgomery Handicaps speculation on the Brooklyn, Suburban, and Brighton has quickened considerably, and some sharp changes are announced here at the office of B. J. Weller's future books. The bulk of the play this week, it is said, has come from New York, though The Pickett has been supported strongly from Kentucky, as well as from the East.

From 15 to 1 at the opening of the week, The Picket was played to 12, then to 10, and finally to 8 to 1 for the Brooklyn. Consequently, Sysonby no longer is such a pronounced favorite, especially as other horses have been well played for the Brooklyn this week. Rosebeu has been backed from 15 down to 10, Merry Lark from 20 to 15, Rapid Water from 30 to 20, Red Knight from 40 to 20; Aucassin from 40 to 30, and Ormonde's Right from 30 to 20. Sysonby remains first choice at 6 to 1, and Hermis at 15 and Oxford at 20 have been backed fairly well.

For the Suburban Sysonby and The Picket have been played briskly this week. Weller has been forced to cut the Keene champion's price to 5 to 1 and The Picket's from 20 down to 15.

For the Brighton The Picket has been backed from 30 to 20 and Ormonde's Right from 40 to 30. Sysonby's price remains 8 to 1.

TO ENFORCE FOOTBALL RULES

Central Committee Announces Plan to Insure Uniformity.

Chairman James A. Babbitt of Haverford College yesterday announced the plan of action adopted by the sub-committee of the American Intercollegiate Football Rules Committee for the government of officials during the next football season. The plan contemplates the subdivision of the country into sections over each of which local committees will be appointed with general jurisdiction. It will be the function of each of these committees to instruct officials to secure proper and uniform interpretations of the rules and to generally furnish information to the colleges within its district. It will be the function of the Central Board, constituted by the whole sub-committee under Dr. Babbitt, to compile and publish lists of competent officials selected from the names nominated by colleges and individuals interested in the game throughout the country. While these officials need not be employed by any colleges in their games, the list will afford a guide to the various institutions in their selection of officials. The plan to fix prices for various classes of games has been abandoned, the suggestions of those who have furnished the Central Board with data being so diverse as to forbid formulation.

Four of the sectional committees will be appointed at first to serve in districts geographically defined. If further division of the country is demanded, others will be named. The Chairman of these four committees have been determined upon, but the personnel of the entire committees will not be settled until the next meeting of the Central Board, on Friday of next week. Dr. Babbitt's formal statement of the plan adopted by the committee on Friday is as follows:

1. This committee has been appointed by the American Intercollegiate Football Rules Committee to act in securing a proper and sportsmanlike interpretation of the new football rules.

2. This committee does not wish to impose its views upon any college or football association, nor does it desire to assume the appointment of officials in any case, but it stands ready to render any assistance in its power to those who desire its aid in the selection of officials.

3. While this committee has not yet definitely formulated its whole plan of action, it has been deemed wise at the present time to merely divide the country into convenient geographical groups, and while not intending to disturb already established relations or fixed arrangements, to appoint in each of these groups when feasible local committees, where competent men can be found, to assist the Central Committee in its work. Further, it is proposed to encourage at once the appointment of four such representative committees—one in the New England States, a second in the Middle Atlantic States, including New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Maryland; a third in Ohio and West Virginia, and a fourth to include the Middle Western States. If other sections of the country in the South and West desire to adopt the same plan the Central Committee stands ready to assist.

4. At a later date announcement will be made of the members of the local committees, and lists of officials, with proper addresses, will be prepared by the Central Committee, assisted by the local committees, and placed in the hands of such football managers as desire them.

5. The committee finds it impossible, owing to varying conditions, to make any suggestion or assume any responsibility as to the amount of compensation to be paid for services rendered by officials.

6. This committee earnestly bespeaks the cooperation of all colleges in the attempt to secure a proper and efficient enforcement of the rules.

But there is a bigger question than this football question that will develop out of this movement, which will shortly confront the college athletic world, and will find its expression in the Football Committee.

The question is, How is the successor of the present Football Committee to be chosen? Half of the present body of fourteen derives its authority from the intercollegiate conference, which appointed it last January. When this conference meets again next Winter this half of the committee will report to the conference and probably be discharged. When the question then comes up as to the successor of the present committee, there will be no so-called "old" committee to coalesce with. Will the sixty-eight colleges comprising that body—or the hundred and fifty as present promises forecast—be willing to have an equal representation with seven individual institutions on a new committee? Will not the seven be a part of the 150, as Harvard now is? If they are, how will the places on the next committee be apportioned?

C. T. DURNELL'S HORSES SOLD

Sir Wilfred Went for $16,000 to Roy A. Rainey.

An even dozen horses owned when they last raced in the name of Charles ("Boots") Durnell and commonly reported as really belonging to John W. Gates were sold yesterday by the Fasig-Tipton Company at Aqueduct. The sale was made necessary by the ruling off the San Francisco Jockey Club of Durnell. In the sale yesterday they realized only a fraction of their actual value, the sale being conducted in the name of Mr. Laffan, who formerly acted as agent for Trainer Durnell.

The surprise of the offering was Sir Wilfred, regarded as one of the best 3-year-olds in America, which went to Roy A. Rainey for $16,000, or about one-half the sum that he was estimated as worth by the stable. The details of the Durnell sale follow:

Crescent Wins Lacrosse Match.

The Crescent Athletic Club defeated the Swarthmore team at Bay Ridge yesterday in a spirited lacrosse game by a score of 9 to 4. The collegians were no match for the crack Crescent players and were never dangerous, though at times they displayed some pretty plays. The attack of the Crescent team was fast and well together, and the ball in consequence was most of the time in the neighborhood of the Swarthmore goal.

The fine day brought out a gallery of fully a thousand spectators, who lined the lawns in front of the clubhouse and gave the grounds an almost midsummer aspect. O'Flynn and Liffiton made their first appearance of the season for the Crescents, while a notable addition was Gladney, the old Toronto University player, who has joined the Crescent ranks. Line-up:

Crescent, 9.	Position.	Swarthmore, 4.
Rose	Goal	Rowlands
Madden	Point	Millman
De Casanova	Cover point	Perkins
Dobby	First defense	Walker
Liffiton	Second defense	Booth
Sherreff	Third defense	Baker
O'Flynn, Miller	Centre	Bromwell
Gladney, Gill	Third attack	Ashton
Kennedy	Second attack	Eastwick
Wall	First attack	Price
O'Rourke	Outside home	Vernon
Moses	Inside home	Darlington

Goals—Moses, (4,) O'Rourke, (2,) Gladney, Kennedy, Wall, Vernon, (2,) Ashton, Price. Referee—L. J. Doyle, Crescent A. C. Umpires—Don Ford, Crescent A. C. and J. Bromwell, Swarthmore. Time of game—Twenty-minute halves.

Short-Stop Dahlen Suspended.

President Pulliam of the National League evidently intends to protect his umpires from the insults of players, for following the suspension of Manager Chance of the Chicago Club for three days for impeaching a decision of Umpire Johnstone in a vehement manner, "Bill" Dahlen, shortstop of the champion New Yorks, left the Polo Grounds yesterday under suspension for using unbecoming language to Umpire Conway in the game between New York and Brooklyn at Washington Park on Wednesday last. Dahlen was caught "napping" in the sixth inning and was clearly out. He protested Conway's decision vigorously, and the punishment yesterday was the result. Manager Chance resumed playing yesterday.

NEW YORK INVADED AGAIN BY EASTERN YACHTSMEN

Effort to Take Big Sloops and Schooners Away in Midseason.

READY TO LAUNCH NEW BOATS

Conflicting Statements Regarding the Clark Craft Being Built by Herreshoff at Bristol.

Having taken away from New York the big schooners for which plans were being made for early July by both the New York and Larchmont Yacht Clubs, the Eastern Yacht Club is now planning an inroad on the big sloops. A cup has been offered by Rear Commodore Gordon Abbott of the sloop Gloriana for competition between the seventy and sixty footers in the race from New London to Marblehead to start June 30, and special invitations have been extended to the Yankee, Mineola, and Rainbow, the Neola, Weetamoe, and the new sixties, F. M. Smith's Effort and Walter Clark's Herreshoff racer, to compete. If these seven boats, which will be the mainstay of all racing in New York, should be withdrawn at a time when so many regular events are scheduled to occur, it would mean the practical failure of some of the best regattas of the year.

There has been some feeling among New York yachtsmen that the arrangement of the Eastern race conflicts with long-standing annual fixtures in local waters, particularly as the schooners were depended on for big races in the weeks which the Eastern plans took them away from New York. This feeling in a measure subsided after a time, but the proposition to take away what remains to New York is likely to rekindle it with redoubled intensity, and in future years to bring reprisals upon the Eastern Club. The schooners were in a measure obligated to contest in the Eastern race by the fact that they accepted its invitation last year and won its races, but the sloops are in no way pledged to it, and there is almost no chance that any of them will accept the proffer.

There is the usual mystery surrounding the Herreshoff yacht that surrounds all his work. There have been no official data announced concerning her either by Herreshoff or by Commodore Clark. Two widely different statements have been made as to her form, and it is difficult to say what she will be except that it is very safe to assert that she will be fast. About her will certainly centre the principal interest of the early regattas when she is expected to make her debut with the new Effort in races against the old twin bronze boats. She is expected to take the water some time next week, although no definite date has been set as yet. She will be delivered about May 20.

THE SUMMER BALL PROBLEM.

Interests of the General Student Body Demand Its Proscription.

Before the Graduate Club of the Teachers College President Gulick of the American Physical Education Association in the course of an address on the "Philosophy of Athletic Control," spoke of the Summer ball question. Among other things he said:

"Why should not a boy who is a good baseball player use this skill to help pay his expenses through college? To play ball professionally is a legitimate way of earning money. A man should no more be criticised for using his ability to play ball to help himself through college than he should be criticised for using his knowledge of Latin or of mathematics in tutoring to help himself through college.

"But should such a boy be eligible to represent his college in intercollegiate contests? is a different question. These contests exist professedly as means of pleasant social recreation. They have become great spectacles.

"While there is nothing immoral in professionalism when it becomes worth while for a man to go into sport because of the income there is in it, his whole relation to it is different. He is enabled to put an amount of time and effort into the game which would be wholly unjustified were it merely a recreation. A team composed of such young men will play the game in a superior way, and may be admirable students, courteous gentlemen, and in every way suitable to represent their institution, but they are men whose living in part depends upon their winning, and are excluding those who cannot make a business of the game. The man who goes into athletics for the fun of it will speedily be left far behind by the man whose livelihood partially depends upon it. This is the foundation reason for the distinction between the professional and the amateur.

"When a man who is playing Summer ball for a salary, or who has in any other way to secure all or part of his living because of his athletic prowess, goes to college and then swears or otherwise attempts to deceive the authorities with reference to his being a professional, then we have the common and serious situation which now obtains in many institutions. It is all right for a man to play professional baseball; but it is all wrong for him thereafter to claim that he is an amateur. The object of athletic control on this point is to separate these two classes.

"When we attempt to state the precise point at which the lines should be drawn, great difficulties will inevitably be encountered. The amateur pursues sport for its own sake and secures from it no financial return whatever, either directly or indirectly; the professional includes all other classes. Professional athletics are legitimate, but they ruin amateur athletics when the two come in contact. Hence they must be kept absolutely separate."

VAN CORTLANDT LINKS OPEN.

Health Commissioner Darlington Competes in First Club Handicap.

There was great glee among the golfers who use the public links at Van Cortlandt Park, for after being closed for more than a month the course was thrown open for play yesterday. Health Commissioner Darlington was one of the early arrivals, and he competed in the opening handicap of the New York Golf Club. He took 115 strokes, while Gilman P. Tiffany, an ex-champion of the links, made the best record of the day, 85.

The mild weather brought out several hundred men and women, and two or three park officials stood at the first tee all day long keeping order and seeing that the players did not start too rapidly. The fourth hole has been shortened a few yards, and later in the season part of the sixth green will be cut away in order to widen the road near the railroad station. The playing distance is 5,400 yards for the eighteen holes, and the greens are in very fair condition for this time of the year.

The club handicap will be used as a basis upon which to make the new ratings for the season. That accounts for the large number of scores that were turned in. They are:

Gilman P. Tiffany, 85; L. I. Taylor, 88; J. P. Larkin, 92; P. F. Gilmartin, 94; C. Floyd, 92; J. Stafford, 93; J. H. Monahan, 94; D. H. Thomas, 98; C. M. Marshall, 98; A. Dudley, 95; H. A. Haines, 96; C. S. King, 97; R. R. Hollister, 96; E. M. Barnes, 97; J. H. Duff, 96; F. P. Deshon, 90; A. Boyd, 97; Francis Kelly, 98; A. Watson, 100; T. S. McLaughlin, 100; T. M. Sweeny, 100; A. B. Ripley, 100; R. F. Wallace, 108; A. McDougall, 102; W. L. Hall, 109; W. H. Beers, 106; W. L. Stevenson, 109; H. Gahim, 103; J. W. Weston, 105; F. U. Adams, 97; T. R. Crull, 113; J. G. Cannon, 113; W. J. Tucker, 116; Health Commissioner Darlington, 115; C. A. Carmell, 119; H. G. Leslie, 115; H. B. Millan, 120; Thomas Headley, 119; P. S. Campbell, 125.

New Bunker for Fox Hills Golfers.

Handicaps for Class A and Class B members were played yesterday on the Fox Hill golf links, Staten Island. A new cop bunkker, five feet in height, has been added to the course in place of the long trap bunker from the first tee. W. P. Lough won the Class A event with a net score of 80 strokes, and H. B. McClellan took the Class B event with a net score of 81. The results:

Class A.—W. P. Lough, 88, 8—80; H. Walser, 90, 5—85; W. P. Kendall, 89, 0—89; J. J. Warrall, 96, 6—90; B. T. Allen, 95, 5—90.

Class B.—H. B. McClellan, 94, 13—81; W. Lambert, 105, 20—85; L. W. Donnell, 106, 18—88; L. F. Young, 111, 22—89; D. A. Bullock, 111, 20—91; R. McClain, 112, 18—94; C. L. Smith, 122, 27—102.

YACHT RATING FACTORS.

Figures on Leading Racing Boats and an Interesting Theory.

Concerning the boats that will be prominent in this season's racing, promising to be the most interesting for some years in New York waters and certainly most important, some interesting data was gleaned from the notebook of a prominent yacht designer in this city a day or two ago. The data was produced during a discussion of the measurement rule—in which, by the way, he is not too thorough a believer—and was secured direct from the measurements taken by the official measurer of one of the leading yacht clubs in New York. It revealed the carefully guarded secrets of displacement, quarter beam length, and sail area, that go to make up the rating of many of the most prominent racing boats.

The argument it sought to prove was that there was no need for the inclusion of a displacement factor in the present rule, since the tendency of yacht designing was to increase the displacement of boats in the development of greater speed.

"Examine the records of the old racing boats in every class," he said, "and you will find that almost without exception their speed increases as their displacement increases—not proportionately, of course, but corelatively. Name the boats in the order of their speed and you will find that their displacement progresses in the same order, with one or two exceptions, the heavier the boat the faster. Of course, as in all cases, there must be normal conditions in other dimensions for this to be true, and there is a limit to the extent to which it may be carried but as a general proposition I should say without respect to the present rule or any other, if I were going to produce a boat to-day that would defeat one of the old boats, boat for boat, on the same water line, I should build a craft of larger displacement than they had."

His figures showed much that was interesting beside illuminating his theory comparing Vigilant and Sybarita.

A most interesting comparison is possible between the Irondequoit, Mira, and Gardenia, that will race in the 40-foot class. So, too, the figures reveal something of the peculiarities of the New York thirties and Mimosa III., which are interesting. The figures for the sloop class are:

The schooners, the designer declares, illustrate the point finely in the 90-foot class. These figures, too, show much of pertinent interest among boats that will race this year. The table follows:

BIRD COLER BUYS FLAGSHIP.

The Schooner Rusalka Will Fly His Pennant on Gravesend Bay.

Bird S. Coler has bought the centreboard schooner Rusalka and will fly from her the Commodore's pennant of the Brooklyn Yacht Club. The purchase was made in Providence from Dr. F. T. Rogers, who owned the trim Lawley designed craft, and the boat is to be taken to Greenpoint and overhauled at once to be placed in commission in time for the opening of the Brooklyn Yacht Club season on May 26, when the ocean race from Gravesend Bay to Bermuda for the Lipton Cup will be started.

She is a wood vessel built in South Boston in 1896 and developed quite a turn of speed, though essentially a cruiser. She measures 63 feet over all, is 45 feet on the water line, and would rate well under the present measurement rule if the Commodore decided to re-enter her in the racing lists. Her extreme breadth is 15 feet 7 inches and her draught 8 feet, while she carries a generous sail spread for her inches and type. Her registered tonnage is 28.8.

This will not be the first time that the Rusalka has carried a Commodore's flag. For two years she was the flagship of the Rhode Island Yacht Club, when the late F. F. Olney was its chief officer. Afterward she was sold to Dr. Rogers.

POLO PONIES SOLD.

Squadron Syndicate Disposes of 22 Texan Mounts for $6,273.

An auction sale of ponies that possessed many novel features was held yesterday at the Squadron A stables at Van Courtlandt Park. A carload of twenty-two polo ponies recently received from Texas was disposed of at public sale, members of the Squadron, however, being the chief purchasers. The ponies have all been tried out at polo in Texas, and for the past week they have been put through considerable practice at Van Courtlandt Park. The twenty-two ponies brought a total of $6,273, an average price of $285 apiece. The highest price was $540, paid by Leavitt J. Hunt for a splendid gray pony known as Monte Carlo.

The ponies were brought on by a syndicate of Squadron A men. The members were allowed first choice and then the sale was thrown open. Those in the syndicate were R. C. Lawrence, Leavitt J. Hunt, Joseph H. Hunt, W. S. McGuire, J. G. Nichols, P. D. Robinson, Herbert Barry, and Alfred Borden. Mr. Lawrence and P. D. Robinson bought three ponies each and Leavitt Hunt and Jospeh Hunt got two apiece. Robinson will use his ponies on the polo field of the Essex County Country Club this season at Orange. Other purchasers were Herbert Barry, Porter Stone, Harold Weekes, George Dyer, and W. S. McGuire. The lowest priced pony was $200.

Championship Basket Ball.

The senior basket ball team from Public School 62 and the juniors from Public School 25, both champions of Manhattan Borough, won their places in the finals yesterday for the Greater New York Public Schools Athletic League basket ball championship by defeating the schools from the Bronx, which were represented by the senior and junior teams from Public School 9. The seniors score was 49 to 3, and the juniors was 24 to 2. The games were played in the Twenty-second Regiment armory, Sixty-eighth Street and Broadway. The line-up:

Wrestlers in Form for Match.

All indications point to a stubbornly contested wrestling match when John Piening, the "Butcher Boy," the champion Graeco-Roman wrestler, and Fred Beell of Wisconsin meet at the Grand Central Palace on Tuesday night. Both men have trained carefully for the event, and notwithstanding Piening's excellent record the Western man has many supporters, who believe he will spring a surprise on Tuesday night. In addition to this match, Harvey Parker, the "Little Demon," and George Bothner, the lightweight champion, will settle the long-standing question of superiority between them in a contest at catch-as-catch-can style. Both wrestlers have hosts of admirers in this city, and the wrestling will undoubtedly be up to the men's best form.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL WON THE MACCRACKEN PRIZE

Garden City Boys Scored Third Victory in N. Y. U. Games.

HACKETTSTOWN'S GOOD WORK

New Comer in Local Interscholastic Athletics Ran Close Second to the Winners.

The first interscholastic outdoor athletic meet of the season was held yesterday on Ohio Field under the auspices of the New York University. Nearly 500 schoolboys representing twenty of the leading preparatory institutions competed for the silver challenge trophy given by Chancellor MacCracken. St. Paul's School of Garden City, L. I., won the cup outright after having two legs on it. The cup was to become the property of the school winning it three times. Up to yesterday St. Paul's School had won it twice, and Dwight School and Brooklyn Boys' High School once each. St. Paul's School athletes were weak in the track events, but exceptionally strong in the three jumping events, which decided their victory.

The feature of the games was the showing made by the Centenary School of Hackettstown. Although a new comer in the field of interscholastic athletics, the representatives of the school ran St. Paul's School close for the cup, the scores being 24½ to 30. H. W. Faraday was the leading point winner for the school. He won the 100 and 220 yard runs, and it was due to his fast sprinting that his team won the relay race.

Only one interscholastic record was broken, A. H. Middleton of St. Paul's School clearing 10:06½ in the pole vault, which is 2½ inches better than the previous record. Middleton won the pole vault event with 10:03½. The bar was then raised to 10:06½, and he cleared it in the first trial. G. Hurlburt of De Witt Clinton High School broke the interscholastic mile record for the track, covering the distance in 4:44 3-5. He won the event without an effort, finishing nearly 100 yards ahead of the second man.

In nearly every event the performances were very good. H. W. Faraday of Hackettstown ran 100 yards in 0:10 2-5, and 220 yards in 0:23 2-5; E. Lynch of Manual Training School covered half a mile in 2:10 4-5; R. W. Bacon of Hackettstown ran the quarter in 0:53 4-5; Ware of Commerce High put the 12-pound shot 44 feet 4 inches; W. O. Waters of St. Paul's School cleared 20 feet 7½ inches in the broad jump, and W. Canfield of the same school was credited with a high jump of 5:08.

The meet, which was a big success, was arranged by the New York University authorities to bring the university and its advantages under the notice of the preparatory schoolboys, who were entertained by the college students on Friday night. Summary:

SOLDIERS AT THE GARDEN.

Military Show Opens To-morrow Night with Attractive Programme.

The tenth annual tournament of the Military Athletic League will begin to-morrow at Madison Square Garden. The various committees, under the guidance of Col. W. F. Morris, President of the league, have arranged an attractive programme of events. Officers and men of the United States Army from Fort Jay, Governors Island, and Fort Ethan Allen have been practicing special drills for the show, which will be one of the features. Troop C of the Fifteenth Cavalry, under Lieut. Van Leer, will give a series of rough riding and musical drills, and Company A, Fifth Infantry, from Fort Jay, commanded by Capt. Stanley M. Ford, will appear in their famous Butts manual drill and battle exercises, company drill, volley firing, and platoon drills, also making and breaking camp. The United States marines, commanded by Capt. John T. Myer, will give bayonet and other exercises.

The artillery exhibition will be by Major Henry S. Rasquin's Third Battery, National Guard of New York. Their flying platoon drill, which won so much applause last year, will be repeated. Corporal Lamothe and Private Crispen of the Seventy-fourth Regiment, National Guard of New York, will give exhibitions in contests with the sword and the bayonet, in tent pegging, lemon cutting, and mounted sword contests.

For Friday and Saturday nights the Duke of Cornwall's Own Rifles, the Forty-third Regiment Canadian Militia, from Toronto, under command of Lieut. Col. Henry M. Pallett, will give their review and exhibition drills in addition to the other features on the programme. The review on Monday night will be taken by Hon. Herman A. Metz, Controller of the City of New York, Col. William F. Morris commanding, and reviews on subsequent evenings will be taken by Rear Admiral Joseph B. Coghlan, United States Navy; the Hon. William H. Taft, Secretary of War; Major Gen. Frederick D. Grant, Brig. Gen. Nelson H. Henry, Adjutant General of the State of New York, and Brig. Gen. Albert L. Mills, from West Point.

Sloop Ogeemah Goes to Larchmont.

The Ogeemah, the crack 22-footer that last year won the championship of Gravesend Bay in her class against the More Trouble, Saetta, Cockatoo II., and other notable new boats that attract such widespread attention among yachtsmen, has been sold by Alfred Mackay to a member of the Larchmont Yacht Club, and she will make her debut in the early races for her class in the Sound, where she is expected to duplicate her triumph on the lower bay.

The boat was designed by John R. Brophy, the amateur designer of the Brooklyn Yacht Club, and was built in 1903. She measures 30 feet over all, 20 feet on the water line, 7.5 feet beam, and 5 feet draught. She carries a moderate sail spread, has a generous displacement, good lines, and rates about 21. She is a remarkably able and speedy boat.

Alfred Mackay has given carte blanche to Mr. Brophy to design a new 22-footer to win in her class in 1907.

GIANTS ARE ADVANCING TO HEAD OF COLUMN

One Game Separating Them from Pittsburg Leaders.

AMERICANS AGAIN BEATEN

Cleveland Loses First Game, but Still First — Boston Going Down Hill.

New York's fourth victory over Brooklyn yesterday places them within one game of the ex-champion Pittsburgs, who now lead in the race for the National League pennant. As generally anticipated, Boston has failed to keep up the gait it struck in Brooklyn, and the result of yesterday's inglorious defeat at the hands of Philadelphia removed them from the top of the column to an equal position with the Quakers in third place. The games in the American League did not affect the standing of the two leaders, but the Greater New Yorks fell back from third to fifth place, while the Detroit and Washington teams made a slight advance. St. Louis won its first game.

GIANTS WIN BY A RUN.

Pitching of McGinnity and Stricklett Features of Game with Brooklyn.

McGinnity, the "Iron Man," and Stricklett, who has generally received the credit for originating the wet ball delivery, were the conspicuous figures in the game between the champion New Yorks and the Brooklyns at the Polo Grounds yesterday. Barring the first inning, McGinnity's delivery was an absolute puzzle, while Stricklett pitched one of the best games of his professional career. The champions just managed to pull off a victory in the ninth inning by a score of 2 to 1. Each team earned a run, the Giants' first tally of the game being due to Lewis's wild throw.

Another big crowd was present, numbering at least 15,000, and much enthusiasm was manifested when Browne crossed the plate in the ninth inning with the winning run. This was the result of the right fielder's tantalizing bunt, which dropped alongside of the plate and rolled so dangerously near to the third base foul line that Bergen, Stricklett, and Casey were deceived into believing that the ball would go into foul ground, and no effort was made to gather it. Donlin, after a tremendous high hit into the right field "bleachers," sent the ball safely into left field for a base. McGann's clever sacrifice advanced each runner, and Mertes hit a long fly to Maloney, which was accepted, and Browne scored the deciding run.

The Brooklyns became dangerous in their part of the ninth, even after Dr. Casey was caught out on a long fly by Browne. Gessler was placed at first on called balls, and landed on second on McCarthy's lucky hit to Strang, who made a good stop. Then the "Iron Man," appreciating the dangerous situation, gave one of his old-time exhibitions of deceptive pitching, although Bresnahan had much to do with the successful result. McGinnity had no trouble in striking out Lewis, who hit at three bad balls. Hummel followed, but he, too, struck out, leaving Gessler at second and McCarthy at first.

McGinnity did not make an encouraging start, for in the first six balls pitched a three-base hit and a single were made, one man reached first by being hit by pitcher, and a run was scored. Lumley led off with a triple to left field, and scored on Maloney's one-baser in the same direction, and Casey went to first on being hit by a pitched ball. Both players were advanced by Gessler's hit, which McGinnity made a good try to field, and the bases were filled, with no one out. McCarthy hit up a high fly back of first, the ball bounding out of McGann's hands into those of Gilbert, and Maloney, with poor judgment, attempted to reach the plate. He was nicely caught by a fast throw of Gilbert to Bresnahan, thus effecting a double play. After Lewis had got to first on called balls, Hummel put out a long fly to right field, which Browne accepted. For seven innings thereafter only two Brooklyn men reached a base, and one of these was on called balls.

The champions' first run in the second inning was scored by Capt. McGann. He hit sharply to Lewis, who could not put out the runner at first, but his throw was so bad that McGann reached second. A nice sacrifice by Mertes placed McGann on third, and he scored on a safe bunt by Strang. Stricklett then gave a fine exhibition of pitching, only two safe hits being made off him in the next six innings, and only one man got as far as second base. The score:

PHILADELPHIA, 18; BOSTON, 8.

BOSTON, April 21.—Philadelphia defeated Boston to-day in a game full of heavy batting and poor fielding, by a score of 18 to 8. Nichols, who started for the visitors, was wild, and was supplanted by Duggleby in the second inning. Pfeifer was batted out of the box in the seventh and McCarthy, who succeeded him, fared little better at the hands of the visitors. The score:

WADDELL IN GOOD FORM.

Puzzles the Greater New Yorks, and Quakers Win by 3 to 1.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, April 21.—Waddell pitched in his best form to-day, and the Athletics again downed the Greater New Yorks by the score of 3 to 1. It was a battle of pitchers, in which Mack's erratic "southpaw" had the better of Hogg. The latter also displayed good form, allowing but six hits in seven innings, and only one earned run was made off him, but the Athletics profited by the misplays of the visitors and chances afforded to score, and this won them the victory.

The warm weather made it an ideal day for the sport, and more than 15,000 persons passed through the gates. The police forced the crowd to find room in the stands, and this prevented ground rules being necessary. The score was close at all times, keeping up the interest, while several spectacular plays aroused the enthusiasm of the spectators at various stages.

Conroy made of the most sensational catches ever witnessed in this city, when he pulled down Harry Davis's hard drive in right centre field. Conroy started with the crack of the bat, and, as the ball was sailing over his head, he bade a flying leap and grasped the soaring sphere with his gloved hand. The impetus carried him off his feet, and he turned a complete somersault, but held tightly to the ball, and the crowd cheered him liberally as he got upon his feet. Hoffman made two fine catches after hard runs.

In the eighth inning Dougherty was declared out at third by Umpire Evans. It was a close decision, and Manager Griffith created a scene by running into the field and jostling the umpire several times. The police interfered, and it looked for a time as if there would be serious trouble, but Griffith finally subsided, and was allowed to take his place on the bench. In addition to pitching a fine game Waddell finished with a clean batting record for the day, securing three hits, half the number made by his team. The score:

COLUMBIA, 3; WEST POINT, 2.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST POINT, N. Y., April 21.—In its annual game here this afternoon the Columbia University team defeated the cadets by a score of 3 to 2. Twice during the game poor base running alone kept the cadets from scoring. In the sixth inning, with the bases full, Bonesteel's hit should have scored two men, but indifferent base running allowed the New Yorkers to get in a double play and end the soldiers' dream of victory. Beaver's work in the box was fine, Columbia being unable to bunch hits on him. Columbia's fielding was ragged. The score:

Rules for Women's Chess Congress.

Regulations governing the tournaments of the Women's Chess Congress to be held in this city during the second week of May have been announced by Miss Eliza Campbell Foot, President of the Woman's Chess Club. The first-class contest will be for the women's championship of the United States, the winner to get a valuable emblem in token of supremacy. The games will be played at the rate of two a day on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, May 7, 9, and 11, the players being so divided into sections that no one player will be required to contest more than six games. There will be a time limit of twenty-four moves an hour. William E. Napier, ex-British chess champion, will be the referee and adjudicate unfinished games after four hours of play.

Mrs. F. W. Lynn of Chicago is the best-known player who has entered thus far, and she will make a strong bid for the championship. Other entries are Miss E. H. Burgess, a sister of Bishop Burgess; Miss E. Campbell Foot, Mrs. M. Wilkinson-Robertshaw, Miss Mylorede M. Walker, Miss Estelle Whitney, and Miss Frances Peters.

SLOSSON IS CHAMPION AT 18.2 BILLIARD GAME

Defeats Schaefer in Deciding Match of Big Tournament.

TIE FOR SECOND PLACE

"The Student" Increases His Average in His Last Game—Garden Concert Hall Crowded.

George F. Slosson won the 18.2 balk-line world's billiard championship last night, defeating his old-time rival, Jacob Schaefer, by 500 points to 396. Slosson was in the best of stroke, and throughout the match in the concert hall of the Madison Square Garden he held the lead at his command. His average was 33 5-15, and he made two runs of more than 100, respectively 116 and 113. Schaefer is now tied with Sutton for second place, and they will meet to-morrow night.

As the two veteran billiardists entered the hall there was a spontaneous outburst of applause. They stood laughing and joking together for a while, then shook hands and wished each other good luck. The opening fell to Slosson, who counted 4 before missing a cushion carrom shot. Schaefer failed on a three-cushion drive and left the ivory globes in perfect position for the "Student," as he did in the following three innings, but Slosson's stroke had not become attuned to the sensitive spheres and he was only able to gather the carroms in small clusters, 4, 7, and 16, which brought his total up to 31, while Schaefer had only scored 5.

There was promise of a considerable addition to Slosson's string as he began his fifth turn at the table. He made good use of the short table until at the eleventh count the balls kissed and spread. Slosson used his skill at angles to lead the balls toward the foot of the table. He was in a fair way to accomplish his object when the balls lined at the thirteenth count. A long bank at a hopeless angle was the only possible shot, and Slosson missed it by a hair's breadth.

The globes were somewhat spread when Schaefer went to take his turn, but he coaxed them together in two shots, and then began a nurse across the face of the object balls as he led them along the short line and turned the red and the white down the long rail to the far corner. The ivories responded, so prettily to the master's cue that it amused the spectators. The balls seemed to obey the cue's will.

In the corner a twist threw the white off three feet out of range, and Schaefer stopped at 58 by his attempt to execute a long massé, which went astray. Slosson immediately demonstrated that he was at the pinnacle of his game by controlling the balls at close range along the short table. His method of keeping both object balls before him displayed the perfection of his stroke to a nice degree, and he rapidly counted 30, yielding the table to Schaefer upon the latter's claim of a foul touch as Slosson essayed a massé.

The next opportunity Slosson got he attained an even greater mechanical accuracy in his short-table manipulation and dead-ball driving than in his preceding inning. He was carefully deliberate, and with remarkable speed for him he rolled off 116 carroms before miscalculating a long left-hand draw to the cushion. During the progress of this run, which sparkled with prettily effected carroms, a spectator sitting beside the table made audible derogatory remarks as to Slosson's ability and play with the evident intention of causing him to break his stroke. The "Student" ignored the comments for a time and then appealed to Referee McLaughlin.

Stimulated by his opponent's run Schaefer made a splendid effort to overtake him in his portion of the seventh inning. Again the incomparable line and rail nurse was in evidence, the crowd continually applauding during one period of it as a score of carroms were counted within a few inches of space, the globes only perceptibly moving at each carrom. Schaefer appeared on his way to topping Slosson's run, but a carelessly played follow brought the run to an abrupt end at 71.

Bad breaking of the rolling spheres caused Slosson to experience difficulties upon his next two turns, while Schaefer gathered clusters of 30 and 42, passing into the lead at the conclusion of the ninth inning, with the tally showing 218 to 212 in the "Wizard's" favor. It was during the latter run that Schaefer indicated his unchallenged right to his sobriquet. By the most phenomenal cue handling he accomplished the wonderful performance of leading the balls straight down the centre of the table with only three drives to the side cushion for nearly the entire count. As he got them near the end rail and bent his arm over them to shoot Slosson bent down and peered under his arm so as to claim a foul in the event of a touch. Both the "Wizard" and "Student" engaged in a game of hide-and-seek for a few minutes, as Schaefer changed his position several times and his movements and those of Slosson entertained the crowd.

Close range billiards by Slosson and another brilliant display of cue manipulation by Schaefer, which brought out the beauty and potency of delicate nursing and massé strokes, produced large runs in the next inning. Slosson counted 84, while Schaefer's 85 kept him in the lead by 2 points. During his session at the table Slosson used the bridge very effectively, even for left-hand shots, and terminated his run by a miscue in attempting a draw. Schaefer also retired on a shot of the same character.

Two turns later Slosson found the globes attuned to his stroke, and, while he hitched and played the wrong shots at the beginning, the ivories were kindly disposed toward him, and he finally got straightened out and began to play a close and deft nurse. At the sixty-second count a scratch helped him to hold his position at the table, and as he essayed to engage the balls at close range the crowd hung breathless upon each carrom as it was made, the room being so quiet that the music of the circus band in the arena could be distinctly heard. Slosson kept the balls rolling perfectly up to 113, and then with the three in one corner he miscalculated a nipping follow shot of a few inches and was kissed away from the carrom.

Schaefer valiantly endeavored to make up the lost ground, but he found all the holes around the balls, while Slosson finished easily. The summary:

Slosson—4 4 7 16 13 30 116 17 5 84 13 113 36 5 37. Total—500 points. Average—33 5-15. High runs—116, 113, and 84.

Referee—Edward McLaughlin.

Louis Cure, the French billiardist, won the tie match for fifth place in the tournament at the matinée session. He defeated Albert G. Cutler, the Boston ex-amateur, by 500 points to 413. Little Leonie Cure, as her father made the winning shot, rushed to him and presented him with a dainty bouquet, which he appeared to value more highly than the fact that he had won the money prize, which will amount to $1,600 as his portion of the purse. The summary:

Cure—0 31 2 43 0 15 26 76 0 6 6 0 0 29 3 29 49 5 21 22 49 0 0 0 23 0 15. Total, 500 points; average, 18 14-27; high runs, 76, 50 and 49.

Schools in Baseball Tourney.

A baseball tournament is the latest contest that the Public Schools Athletic League has undertaken. Entries for the contest closed yesterday. Manhattan entered 81 schools representing 22 districts, Brooklyn entered 32 schools out of 14 districts, Queens has 9 schools from 4 districts, Bronx has 6 schools from 3 districts, and Richmond has 4 schools out of 2 districts. Schools in each district will play for the district championship, the winner then playing for the borough championship. The winner of the borough games will compete in the city championship games.

Columbia Outclassed by Stevens.

Columbia was no match for Stevens in the lacrosse game played yesterday afternoon at the St. George Cricket Grounds, Hoboken, between the two collegiate teams. The Jersey boys won by a score of 7 to 2, and gave a sterling exhibition in both attack and defense, excelling especially in the latter play. Time and again Columbia had good opportunities to score, but the massing of the Stevens players in front of their goal was so compact that it was almost impossible to get the ball through.

At the end of the first half Stevens had scored 5 goals to Columbia's 0. The Stevens boys seemed to let up in the second half, and each team scored twice. The teams lined up:

Stevens, 7.	Position.	Columbia, 2.
Sturken	Goal	Lage
Hamilton	Point	Aigeltinger
Pinkney	Cover Point	Willis
Comstock	First defense	Baum
Demarest	Second defense	Richards
Starzenski	Third defense	Lismon
Murray	Centre	Moore

Goals—Roberts, (3,) Davis, (2,) Davey, Helms, Evans, (2.) Referee—W. S. Bird, Johns Hopkins. Goal umpires—Mr. Norris for Stevens; Mr. Barlow for Columbia. Timekeeper—Mr. Thayer for Stevens; Mr. Bissel for Columbia. Time of halves—Twenty-five and twenty minutes.

Reid Leads St. Andrew's Golfers.

The St. Andrew's Golf Club, near Chauncey, Westchester County, opened its links yesterday with a members' handicap in which the first eight qualified to meet at match play. John Reid, Jr., the ex-club champion, made the best gross score, 84 strokes, and, although handicapped at plus 2, he tied with Alfred Craven at 86 for the lowest gross score. The eight who qualified for the cup are:

John Reid, Jr., 84, plus 2—86; Alfred Craven, 95, 9—86; J. W. Edginton, 93, 5—88; W. C. Flanders, 98, 10—88; C. W. Barnes, 98, 8—90; Walter T. Stern, 90, 0—90; J. N. Hunt, 103, 12—91; Austin G. Fox, 109, 15—94.

The draw at match play is: Reid vs. Fox, Craven vs. Edginton, Hunt vs. Barnes, Flanders vs. Stern.

Automobile Notes of Interest.

President John Farson of the American Automobile Association will arrive in the city this week from Chicago, and he will probably confer with the Racing Board regarding plans for the Vanderbilt Cup race. Mr. Thompson, the Chairman, said yesterday that, while the entry blanks had not yet been sent out, several inquiries had come to him from manufacturers intending to enter cars, and the indications are that a large number of entries will be received at an early date.

J. Pierpont Morgan, Jr.'s, chauffeur will leave for Europe within a few days to secure from the Gobron-Brillie factory in France two new cars ordered some time ago by Mr. Morgan. The cars will be shipped to America as soon as possible.

Automobilists are wondering if Paul Deming and his A. A. A. Touring Committee are ever going to meet and make a definite announcement regarding the Glidden Cup tour this Summer. In view of the general uncertainty regarding the route and the methods of awarding the cup there is a natural inclination to ask that some clear statement be issued at an early date.

In reply to the challenge of the Olds Motor Works for hill-climbing contests, the Maxwell-Briscoe Motor Car Company has issued a counter-challenge to the Olds Motor Works or any other company for a hill-climbing contest. The Maxwell-Briscoe Company will compete at any time and place under the same conditions as in the case of the Maxwell-Reo match, which is to take place at Bridgeport on May 15. These conditions call for the purchase of a $100 cup by the loser to be presented to the winner.

The 60 horse power Lozier touring cars will be ready for delivery in a few weeks. This car has been in preparation for the past year, and there are no radical departures from the structural practice and features of the Lozier 40 horse power cars. The 60 horse power car has a wheel base of 120 inches, being 3 inches longer than the regular lower-powered car. The wheels are 36 inches in diameter, the frame of pressed steel with deep section. The car sells for $7,000.

Among the cars sold by Smith & Mabley during the past week are 35 horse power Mercedes to J. S. Watson and C. Josephs; 24 horse power Panhards to E. F. Hensen and W. N. Dykeman, 20 horse power Renaults to Joseph Bromley and H. L. Terrell, and 35 horse power Simplex cars to C. Edwin Webb and Louis Tim. A number of orders have been taken for cars to be delivered in Europe.

The Olds factory at Lansing, Mich., maintains probably the best half-mile race course in the country, having fallen heir to it in their purchase of their Lansing property from the State Fair Grounds, and the Oldsmobile Vanderbilt car will be speeded over the course until ready for trials on the open road.

The Rossel Company of America, sole agents in the United States and Canada for the sale of F. Rossel & Cie's automobiles, made in Sochaux-Montbeliard, France, has just opened an office in the Knickerbocker Building, Thirty-ninth Street and Broadway. The company is incorporated under the laws of the State of New York, with a capital of $100,000. Harry N. Fletcher is President, Francois Rossel of Sochaux-Montbeliard, France, Vice President, William H. Ottman Treasurer, and Count Manuel de Caserta of Paris Secretary. Four types of cars are made, ranging from 22 to 65 horse power, selling for $6,000 and upward.

AUTO RACES AND TESTS REVIVE MOTOR ACTIVITY

Many Tours Planned for This Week's Atlantic City Meet.

FAST CARS LEAVE TO-DAY

Every Type of Gasoline Machine Likely to be Seen in Two-Gallon Efficiency Test.

With the automobile races this week at Atlantic City and the completion of the plans for the two-gallon efficiency test by the Automobile Club of America on May 5, owners of motor cars who delight in competitive meets will find plenty to attract their attention within the next few days. These events have added a decided stimulus to the activity of the season, and this has been augmented naturally by the mild weather and drying up of suburban roads, a combination that always brings the automobiles out of the garages with a rush, showing that the real touring interest has set in.

"The country roads are much better than many of our city roads," said the manager of a big garage yesterday. "The numerous holes in the asphalt roads of the city are an abomination, not only to autoists, but to other users of the streets. In the country districts, especially in Westchester and through the popular Jersey suburbs, a long tour can now be made with genuine pleasure, and the chauffeurs are all getting busy."

As there will be no track races in the metropolitan district this year, those who are interested in speed contests must go to Atlantic City for their fun, and the prospect of some excellent contests among the fifty-eight machines entered for the three days' meet, beginning Wednesday, will carry a large delegation of local autoists to the beach track. A big majority of the visitors will make the trip in their machines. Several racing and touring cars will leave to-day, and a big delegation will start to-morrow. H. N. Harding will drive his English Daimler, just fitted with its new motor, to Atlantic City to-day, and the fast Wayne car, to be driven by A. L. Kull, will also leave. Many of the high-powered racing cars are already on the beach, and some fast times are looked for in the trial spins.

In addition to the ten racing cars which will meet in the big contest, a dozen events have been arranged for high-class touring cars, and their performances will do a great deal toward giving the public practical object lessons on the speed and reliability of the machines now on the market. In many of these events amateur drivers will appear.

Among the racing machines and drivers entered are the thirty horse power Grout steamer, which Harry Maynes expects to drive in 30 seconds; the eighty horse power Darracq, to be driven by the Boston amateur, William Wallace, Jr., and which covered a mile at Cape May last year in 38 seconds; Walter Christie, with his remodeled 110 horse power racer; W. H. Hilliard, who will drive the eighty horse power Napier; Guy Vaughn or S. B. Stevens, with the eighty horse power Darracq with which Hemery won the Vanderbilt Cup contest and the Havana road race; Montague Roberts, with the Thomas car; E. Cedrino, with the record-holding Fiat, Jr.; R. L. Lockwood, with the Reo Bird, and A. L. Kull, with the forty horse power Wayne.

YOU MAY HAVE A FINE looking and expensive stable, but if you have not proper drainage you make a great mistake. A well-known fact among scientific men is that brick, cement, and asphalt are porous, therefore unsanitary. Logan's Stall is the only perfect one in the world and is everlasting. It means health and economy, guaranteed to pay for itself in one year, can be adapted to new and old stables. When purchasing see that the name M. Logan is on each drain pan, for your own protection. SAYS DIME NOVEL'S DAY IS GONE FOREVER HERE

SCHOOLS START THEM RIGHT

New York Education Board Runs One of the Largest Circulating Libraries in the World.

Additional ammunition with which to continue the war on dime novels, sentimental rubbish, and other forms of so-called literature undesirable for children will be received by the Principals of the public elementary schools to-morrow in the form of their annual apportionments of school funds for library purposes. The total appropriation for such ammunition this year amounts to $53,052, and will be divided among 468 elementary schools.

Of this fund, Manhattan will receive $23,063.22; Brooklyn $19,285.08, Queens $4,555.48, the Bronx $4,321.43, and Richmond $1,345.67. Manhattan receives the most money, not necessarily because the dime novel microbe is most active here, but because it has many new schools which have no school libraries and must be equipped. Each school's share of the appropriation is based on the number of books which it reported it possessed on Feb. 15.

"The largest number of books are used by the fourth-grade pupils, who range from 10 to 12 years of age. At this period the mechanics of reading have usually been thoroughly mastered and the child begins to find it easier to read," said Claude G. Leland, Superintendent of Libraries of the Department of Education. "He discovers the pleasure to be gained from interesting books, and reads omnivorously. Probably more books are read at this time than during any other period of his life.

"The great number of good books eagerly read by the school children of this age seem to indicate that the day of the 'yellow back' and the lurid dime novel is over.

"The annual report on the condition of school libraries called for at the end of the first term shows that of the 11,883 classes in the elementary schools 10,017 have class libraries, and that these libraries contain 371,437 books. In the teachers' reference libraries there are 138,528 volumes, making a total of 509,965 books in the school libraries of New York City.

"The recorded circulation for the first half of the year, that is, the number of books drawn and taken home by the children from September, 1905, to February, 1906, is 3,438,171, a gain of 612,229 over the same period of last year.

"In nearly all of the larger cities library appropriations are based on the number of books circulated. The school library of New York City, with 450,252 books, had during the ten months of the school year, September, 1904, to June, 1905, a recorded circulation of 5,872,371, an appropriation from the city of $21,530.15, and an equal amount from the State, all of which was by law accounted for in books. The expense of operating these libraries, owing to the fact that the teachers act as librarians, amounts to but $4,600, for salaries of Superintendent and office force, making a total expenditure of $47,660.30.

"It should be remembered that the Board of Education, under the present system, is operating one of the largest circulating libraries in the world with practically no expense except for books."

ROOT FELICITATES VETERANS.

Congratulates Them on Being Still Unafraid of Dinner Table Perils.

Congratulations that they are "still able to face the dangers of the dinner table" came from Elihu Root, Secretary of State, to the Seventy-first Regiment Veterans at their dinner in the Harlem Casino last night. There were a hundred and fifty of the veterans there, and they made merry until early this morning in celebration of the forty-fifth anniversary of the departure of the regiment to Washington in 1861. The letter from Secretary Root was as follows:

> I regret very much that I cannot accept your kind invitation to be present at the anniversary dinner of the Veterans of the Seventy-first Regiment. It is difficult to realize that forty-five years have passed since they marched away from New York to the relief of Washington. I beg you to give them my good wishes and my congratulation that they are still able to face the dangers of the dinner table. How happy they should be with the glorious memories of a youth fortunate in being passed among great affairs and in being a great part of them.

Col. Bates responded to the toast, "Our Regiment," and spoke of the devotion of the officers and men since fire destroyed the armory four years ago. At the time of the fire the regiment numbered 700 men; now it numbers 665.

President Boyd of the Veterans' organization expressed their sympathy for the San Francisco sufferers.

Gen. Augustus T. Francis and Capt. James E. Place told stories of the campaigns of 1861 and 1898.

JERSEY RETAINS CHOATE.

He'll Act in Litigation Over the Morris Canal Basin.

Joseph H. Choate, ex-Ambassador to England, has been retained by Attorney General McCarter of New Jersey to conduct the litigation to be set on foot by the State to determine the right and title of the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company to $2,000,000 of property at the Morris Canal Basin in Jersey City.

The settlement of the question whether the title to the basin rests in the State or in the railroad company is the important incident preliminary to the abandonment of the canal for canal purposes.

The Lehigh Valley is the lessee of the canal company. The State's contention is that its grant was made to the canal only for canal purposes, and that when the canal is abandoned it reverts to the State, along with all the other franchises conferred upon it.

For years the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company has been trying to persuade the Legislature to permit it to go out of the canal business and keep all the water and land rights conferred by the State upon the canal company to facilitate transportation operations.

BABY'S SCATHELESS FALL.

Tumbled from Elevated Train to Brewery Wagon and Was Unhurt.

To fall from a moving Third Avenue elevated train into a brewery wagon on the street and escaped unhurt was the unusual experience of Theodore Sachnin, the two-and-a-half-year-old son of Mrs. Rose Sachnin of 627 East 142d Street yesterday morning.

Mrs. Sachnin was reading a paper and did not notice her boy as he climbed on top of the railing of the open car in which they were going up town. The boy was on top of the railing when the passengers realized his danger, and, before assistance could reach him, lost his balance and fell off. He landed on the canvas covering of a brewery wagon, and when the ambulance surgeon who was summoned examined him he said that he was unhurt. The accident happened at Third Avenue and Sixteenth Street.

WON'T BAR MEN THIS TIME.

They'll Be Allowed to See Barnard Girls Play "The Critic."

The annual dramatic performance given by the Undergraduate Association of Barnard College promises to be an interesting event this year. The usual policy of admitting only the girl friends of the students has been abandoned this year at the suggestion of Dean Gill, so that fathers and other males are also looking forward to being there.

The play is to be "The Critic." The enterprise is being managed by Marie Louise Fontaine, '06, with the following committee: Marjorie F. Brown, '05; Evangeline Cole, '07; Agnes Miller, '08; Eva Von Bauer, '09.

There are to be three performances, as follows: April 27, at 2:20 P. M. and 8:15 P. M., and April 28, at 8:15 P. M., the evening performances to be followed by dancing.

HOSPITAL IN NEED OF FUNDS.

Money Required to Continue the Post-Graduate Tuberculosis Annex.

The New York Post-Graduate Medical School and Hospital is in need of funds to carry on the work of its annex for tuberculosis at 322 East Nineteenth Street. Several apparent cures of tuberculosis have been effected there. It costs about $7,200 annually to care for eight patients that can be accommodated in the building.

This money, supplied by an anonymous friend, is sufficient to carry on the charity until June 1 next, but after that the hospital officials will have to depend upon donations from other sources. Checks should be made payable to Dr. George N. Miller, Treasurer of the Hospital Association.

LIGHTING CONTRACTS READY.

Commissioner Ellison Will Submit Them to the Mayor To-morrow.

Commissioner Ellison of the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity has completed the preparation of the gas and electric lighting contracts on the basis of the bids submitted by the companies on Feb. 1, and expects to lay them before Mayor McClellan to-morrow.

Corporation Counsel Delany already has gone over them, and it is expected that as soon as the Mayor gives his assent the contracts will be signed. Commissioner Ellison believes that this will be done by Wednesday, thus giving the lighting companies contracts for the first time in three years.

MAY BE A DEAD-LOCK ON APPORTIONMENT

The Odell-Parsons Fight Hits Legislature To-morrow.

SENATE STRONG FOR ODELL

Assembly Probably for Parsons Plan—May Adjourn Without Action, Despite the Constitution.

With the adjournment of the Legislature only two weeks away, Republican leaders now fear that there will be a dead-lock between the Senate and the Assembly on the apportionment issue, which may result in a failure to adopt any apportionment this year, as it specifically required by the Constitution.

Both the Odell-Halpin plan, which has been indorsed by the Republican County Committee, and the Parsons-Wilson plan, which County Chairman Parsons is fighting for, will be laid before the Legislature to-morrow or Tuesday, and it is the contest between the two factions in New York County that threatens to block the adoption of any plan of apportionment at this session.

Odell leaders declared yesterday that the Legislature would be in duty bound to stand by their plan, as it has the indorsement of the regular organiation in the county. They declared frankly that the Parsons fight, even if it has the backing of President Roosevelt and Gov. Higgins, is a fight against the will of the party oranization here, and therefore a fight of malcontents. Thus they place squarely on the shoulders of the Parsons men all blame for sidetracking an apportionment if it is to be sidetracked.

That the Senate will stand by the Odell-Halpin plan the Odell leaders confidently expect. They also look for the Assembly to get back of the Parsons-Wilsan plan, as the friends of the President and the Governor, who gained the election of Speaker Wadsworth against the candidate of the Odell forces, are believed still to control the situation in the lower House. This, the Odell men believed, will cause a dead-lock in the Legislature.

The Parsons men make no secret of the fact that they are counting on the Assembly to back them up in their contest to put through their apportionment plan, but they say they are confident that this action of the Assembly, with the support of the President and of the Governor, will compel the Senate to recede from its probable stand for the Odell-Halpin plan and either accept the Parsons-Wilson plan or agree upon a compromise.

That the influence of Gov. Higgins will be used to the utmost to compel Senators to abandon the Odell-Halpin plan is expected.

In spite of this, the Odell contingent expresses confidence in the ability of the State Chairman to handle the situation and to have the Legislature either put through the plan which has the indorsement of the county organization, or at least to prevent the adoption of any other plan presented by the malcontent minority, even though it has backing from high places.

There was a general sizing up of the strength of the two sides yesterday, and all now is in readiness for the battle that will be begun in Albany to-morrow and which promises to make the closing days of the session the liveliest in years. Neither side expects to see the Legislature in session beyond May 5, at the latest, and they believe that, if the apportionment cannot be settled by that time, the entire matter will go over for the year.

If that is done there may be litigation as a result, there even being some talk that proceedings might be begun to mandamus the Legislature into obeying a Constitutional mandate. Of course the Legislature is subject to no control except that of the Constitution, but, as a novel proposition of law, a Republican attorney yesterday advanced that the courts might have power to mandamus a Legislature to obey a mandate of the Constitution, just as the courts might mandamus a Board of Aldermen to obey a statute of the Legislature.

THE MAYOR ON POOLROOMS.

His Indorsement of Dr. Slicer's Campaign Was Marked "Personal."

It was said at the Mayor's office yesterday that a speech made by the Rev. Dr. Thomas R. Slicer Friday night, in which he referred to a letter he had received from Mayor McClellan and conveyed the idea that the Mayor had approved what is known as "sterilised betting," was somewhat misleading. The Mayor's approval of Dr. Slicer's campaign against the poolrooms, it was added, was contained in a single paragraph of a letter marked "personal," which the Mayor's secretary wrote in reply to a communication also marked "personal" received from Dr. Slicer.

The paragraph read:

"I think you are to be congratulated upon the progress you have made in arresting the poolroom evil. Your efforts have the hearty indorsement of myself and every officer of my administration."

CHILDREN'S SOCIETY GOT 'EM.

Even Though the Audience Withheld Its Vegetable Ammunition.

A picturesquely red-headed youth sat in the front row of the Family Theatre, at 117 East 125th Street, Friday night discussing with a friend the probable merits of the performance they were about to witness.

They had with them potatoes, eggs, green-looking lemons, and other vegetation. It was "amateur" night at the Family Theatre, and the crowd was there to do as it pleased.

The first "artist" to appear was one "Kid" Barclay, who essayed to entertain his audience with a song and dance. His first notes evoked a shower of potatoes and cabbages. The "Kid" was agile and ducked, but before he could continue a man with a fifteen-foot pole with a hook on the end reached out from behind the wings, encircled his neck, and dragged him off the stage. He didn't reappear.

After the refuse had been swept aside another vaudevillian appeared and met the same fate. He in turn was hooked. Then came others to be treated likewise.

Finally the announcer said that the "cel-ebrated Sisters Monahan" would appear and do a turn. They did, and the crowd liked their work. They ran off the stage, happy, but were promptly taken into custody by three agents of the Children's Society, who held them to appear against William W. Ely, manager, and William P. Nolan, stage manager of the theatre, who were arraigned before Magistrate Cornell in the Harlem Court yesterday on a charge of permitting children to appear upon their stage.

It was stated that one of the sisters was 12 and the other 14 years old. Ely and Nolan were paroled in the custody of their counsel until to-morrow, when they will have a further hearing.

RIGO'S VIOLIN ATTACHED.

He Says It's Worth $20,000—He's Sued for $1,650.

A violin, said by its owner to be worth $20,000, the property of Rigo, who eloped with the Princess Chimay, was attached yesterday by Deputy Sheriff John J. Murray at the Hotel Carlton, Broadway and Fifty-fourth Street, where the violinist has been living.

Rigo, or Rigo Jancis, as he is named in the complaint filed in the City Court, made a contract with Michael Pollak, by which the latter was to furnish him with nine musicians, for whose services Rigo was to pay Pollak $300 a week. Rigo declared that he was not satisfied with the services of the men furnished, and sent to Hungary for others.

After Rigo returned to this city from a tour, Pollak demanded $1,650. The violinist refused to pay, and suit was brought against him. Justice McCarthy issued the order for the attachment of the violin, on the representation of Pollak's counsel that Rigo is a non-resident.

Arthur L. Fullman, Rigo's attorney, will apply to Justice McCarthy to-morrow for an order to vacate the attachment. Pending the motion, Rigo, through his counsel, Charles Bornhaupt, deposited the amount Pollak demands, and thus obtained the temporary release of the attachment.

Rigo says that Pollak, and not he, is guilty of breach of contract.

FIRST STRAW HAT APPEARS.

It Shows Up in Times Square—Owner Has a Lecture on Comfort.

The first straw hat of the season made its appearance in Times Square yesterday. It was worn by a serious-looking young man, who was attired in blue serge and a negligé shirt, in harmony with his headgear, and who rode uptown in a hansom. Just as he reached Forty-fourth Street he stopped to talk to a group of friends on the corner.

"You're runnin' ahead of your ticket, ain't you, Jack?" asked one of them.

"Not at all," replied the man with Summer raiment. "To-day is as warm as many days in June will be. You ought to be wearing the same thing. The difference between you and me is that I have the courage to assert my convictions on comfort and you haven't.

"Now," he added, as he drove off, "you can perspire over that a while."

FOREST FIRE THREATENS ROCKEFELLER'S HOUSE

He Watches His Men Fight Blaze at Lakewood.

WIND SHIFT SAVES HIS HOME

Neighbor Ingalls Was Burning Some Brush and the Fire Got Away from Him.

Special to The New York Times.

LAKEWOOD, N. J., April 21.—For several hours to-day John D. Rockefeller's home in the Ocean Avenue Boulevard was in danger of being destroyed by a forest fire.

Several acres of timber land owned by Mr. Rockefeller were swept by the fire and the house stood directly in the path of the flames. A sudden shifting of the wind from the northwest to northeast saved the place.

The fire started in a piece of woods owned by William Ingalls, a neighbor of Mr. Rockefeller. He was clearing away the brush in the timber and, raking up a pile, set fire to it. The dry branches and twigs blazed up like a flash and spread to another pile of brush.

The blaze soon got beyond Ingalls's control and in a few minutes had swept across the Ingalls place to the timber land owned by Mr. Rockefeller. Ingalls's neighbors and all the employes at the Rockefeller country place joined in fighting the fire.

William Forrester, Mr. Rockefeller's Superintendent, directed the work. He set men at work digging trenches so as to bar the spread of the fire, and at the same time other men were kept busy shoveling dirt on the flames.

Three hours' hard work brought the fire under control. Mr. Rockefeller has a water tower on his property and complete apparatus for fighting fire. All his employes are drilled in fire duty, and their work to-day showed the effect of the drill.

Mr. Rockefeller watched the fire, and several times reports were made to him of the progress of the flames.

SICK WIFE YARN DIDN'T WORK.

Pickpocket's Moving Tale Failed to Fool His Victim.

Charles Gunther of 133 East Eighty-fourth Street felt someone tugging at his coat pocket on the rear platform of a Lexington Avenue car at Eighty-fourth Street last evening. The platform was crowded, but as the car stopped he saw a young man get off. Gunther followed, and saw him enter a near-by grocery store. When the man walked into the street again Gunther demanded his pocketbook, which he missed in the meantime.

"You got it on that car," he said, "and I want it."

"Ferget, son; I never saw you before," replied the other. "I jes' been in the store here buying a pound of butter for the baby."

Gunther followed and demanded the pocketbook with such persistency that the man finally said:

"Say, I've got a sick wife and six children. If I give you the pocketbook will you let the matter drop?"

"Prove your story and I will," Gunther promised. The man at Eighty-fifth Street attempted to board a moving car. Gunther yelled for help, and Policeman Ahearn of the East Eighty-eighth Street Station responded and locked the man up. The prisoner said he was Joseph Golberg of 235 East Eleventh Street. The pocketbook was found in one of his shoes.

WIFE SHOT, HUSBAND HELD.

Coroner Gibson of Suffolk County Disbelieves Mieneke's Story.

"I find that the wound that killed your wife could not have been self-inflicted, and, as you aver that you were the only person besides her present when the revolver was fired, I must hold you for the action of the Grand Jury," said Coroner Gibson of Suffolk County, to Charles Mieneke yesterday upon the completion of the inquest into the death of Mrs. Mieneke of Melville, who was shot and killed in her home last Tuesday evening.

Mieneke was at once taken to the County Jail in Riverhead. Frequent quarrels are said to have taken place between him and his wife. Mrs. Mieneke was shot through the right forearm and breast. Mieneke and his little six-year-old son told the same story at first, to the effect that Mrs. Mieneke had taken a revolver from the table; that it had dropped, striking upon the hammer, which discharged the weapon. Later the husband said the weapon was discharged when he was trying to prevent his wife from committing suicide. The Coroner found no powder marks on the body, and thinks whoever held the revolver must have been some distance away.

THREW HIM INTO A TREE.

That's Where Broker Maxwell Landed When His Horse Ran Away.

Horace Maxwell, a broker, of 7 East Seventy-fourth Street, went out driving behind a spirited horse, drawing a light runabout, in Central Park yesterday afternoon. Returning to the east entrance to the Park, at Seventy-second Street, the horse bolted and galloped toward Madison Avenue.

In front of the house at 27 East Seventy-second Street the runabout swerved and Maxwell was thrown out. He was pitched into the air and alighted upon a small tree about fifteen feet high next to the curb. He landed in the branches of the tree and then fell to the pavement. The break in his fall saved him from serious injury.

The runabout was turned over and smashed. The horse was caught at Madison Avenue and Seventy-third Street by a policeman.

Military Athletic League Dines.

Sayles, Twenty-second Engineers, United States Army; Capt. Ford, Fifth United States Infantry; Col. Duffy, Sixty-ninth Regiment, and Lieut. Johnston, Fifteenth United States Cavalry.

Won't Forbid Change of Motive Power.

Justice Clinch of the Supreme Court has denied the application of the Mount Morris Bank to restrain the New York Central and the New York and Harlem River Railroads from constructing pipes, conduits, and wires for the change of motive power from steam to electricity on the viaduct in front of the premises of the bank at 125th Street and Park Avenue.

Money for Dead Firemen's Families.

William H. Page, Jr., of 32 Liberty Street, sent to Fire Commissioner O'Brien yesterday $250 for the families of the four firemen who lost their lives in the Downing Street fire some weeks ago. Mr. Page said that the contribution was a slight recognition of the splendid work which the firemen had done in saving his home at 47 West Seventy-fourth Street.

FIRE HORSES DASHED THROUGH 5TH AV. CROWD

Mounted Policeman Stopped Them, Though Thrown.

LETTER CARRIERS HELPED

Engine Driver Fell on His Horses Trying to Pull Them Up by Hydrant—That Scared Them.

An alarm for a fire at Fifty-ninth Street and Sixth Avenue was received at the engine house at Broadway and Fifty-eighth Street yesterday morning. Dan Mahoney, the driver, jumped into his seat, grabbed the reins guiding his three horses, and the big five-ton engine, with Lieut. Thomas Smith and Engineer Birmingham on the tailboard, swung out to Fifty-ninth Street.

The three horses were still galloping when the alarm box was reached, but Smith and Birmingham jumped off to make the hose connection. Mahoney put his foot on the brake to slow up, but he slipped, and, pitching forward, fell upon the horses and to the asphalt.

Frightened at the driver's fall, the horses jumped forward with renewed speed. Mahoney, by great good fortune, escaped their hoofs, and with rare presence of mind turned over quickly and rolled into the gutter and out of danger of being crushed by the heavy engine.

The three frightened horses broke for Fifth Avenue, and at the Sherman Statue turned to go uptown. The streets were alive with traffic, and several accidents were narrowly averted.

Turning the corner of Fifth Avenue, the horses made a straight line for a carriage containing two women being driven downtown. They saw their danger and began to scream.

"Jump!" yelled a dozen persons on the pavement in front of the Hotel Netherland.

"Sit still! I'll make it!" the driver yelled back. The women sat down, and as they did so their horses jumped forward under the whip barely in time to avoid a collision.

Just then Mounted Policeman Daniel J. Daly, on his horse, Babe, galloped up, and as the fire engine horses started up Fifth Avenue he started in pursuit. He caught them within a block and laid hold of the nearest bridle. As he did so his own horse stumbled and threw him. Daly was half stunned by the fall, but held to the bridle he had seized.

"Let go!" yelled twenty men in the crowd.

"Drop it or you'll be killed!" cried others.

Daly, however, held on, and after dragging him for two blocks at full gallop the three horses began to slow up. As they did so two letter carriers ran to the policeman's assistance and stopped the runaway. Daly was bruised in several places, and Mahoney was also hurt. Babe suffered an injured knee. The alarm was a false one.

AMMON TO VISIT LAW LIBRARY

Convicted Lawyer Will Prepare Briefs Under a Sheriff's Guard.

Under an order issued yesterday by Justice Keogh of the Supreme Court, Robert Ammon, who is serving a sentence in Sing Sing on a charge of having received stolen goods from the Miller 520-per-cent. syndicate of Brooklyn, will be allowed to visit the law library at the White Plains Court House in the custody of the Sheriff while he prepares a brief covering irregularities which he alleges exist in his sentence.

The convicted man will work all day Sunday on his brief and the Librarian has been ordered to supply him with any books or documents that he may require. Ammon's wife will help him in the preparation of the brief. At night the prisoner will sleep in the County Jail, guarded by a keeper. Robert Taylor of the District Attorney's office in New York at first objected to granting Ammon's request.

"He drove me out of my office in New York," said Mr. Taylor, "and wrote briefs a yard long. Later he spent two weeks in the Tombs, where he wrote more of them." Mr. Taylor withdrew his objection when he learned that Ammon would be a prisoner in the custody of the Sheriff.

MACHINISTS WANT 8 HOURS.

They Are Planning Now to Make a General Demand.

Preparations are being made by all the locals of the International Association of Machinists throughout the country for a general demand for the eight-hour work day, to go into effect on a date to be fixed in a week or two.

James O'Connell, President of the International Association, is due in this city in a few days to confer with the officers of Local No. 15 of the machinists in reference to the demand. This local has jurisdiction over Greater New York, and the demand affects 100,000 machinists throughout the country.

At present most of the machinists throughout the country are working nine hours a day. James Wilson, business agent for Local No. 15, said yesterday that the machinists expected the active coöperation of the other organizations in the metal trades. Among these are the iron molders, boilermakers, blacksmiths, coremakers, metal polishers, brassworkers, coppersmiths, sheet-metal workers, and brass molders. Edward Hourigan, Secretary of the Greater New York local of the machinists, said:

"The eight-hour idea is spreading, and all the shop trades are expected to make an eight-hour demand this Summer. There is a great demand for machinists at present, and we were never in better shape for winning the demand."

WIFE MAY DIE OF BEATING,

But She Forgives Her Husband—He's Held Without Bail.

Philip Hammer, a contractor's foreman, of 228 Cook Street, Williamsburg, was arraigned in the Manhattan Avenue Court yesterday and held without bail to await the result of injuries inflicted upon his wife, Mrs. Kate Hammer, 37 years old, on Friday night. The woman is now in the Eastern District Hospital, in a critical condition. The couple have four small children.

On Friday night Hammer, it is said, knocked his wife down and kicked her. The woman feebly told Coroner Kennedy that her husband had often threatened to kill her.

After Hammer's arrest he was taken to the hospital, where his wife expressed her forgiveness, and said she was willing that her husband should go free if he promised that in the event of her death he would care for their children.

Genesis of New York's "Crack" Military Organization --- Its Early Officers --- What It Has Contributed to the Regular Army --- Its War Record.

THE Seventh Regiment is going to celebrate. A hundred years ago, when the gunners on the British ships outside the harbor of New York were improving their marksmanship by firing on every American vessel that entered the Narrows, the military spirit of Manhattan was aroused, and the population began to talk fight. Then it was that the four companies of artillery—the germ of the present Seventh Regiment—were organized.

Now the time for the centennial is at hand, and Saturday, the fifth of May, has been set as the day the Seventh celebrates. There will be a grand parade up Fifth Avenue, with the rifles and the uniforms glittering in the sun, with four proud drum majors leading four regimental bands, and with Secretary of War William H. Taft on a reviewing stand to see the paraders pass by. The triumphal procession will end at the armory, which covers the whole block bounded by Park and Lexington Avenues, Sixty-sixth and Sixty-seventh Streets. There games, oratory, and feasting will fill out the end of a joyous day.

Just as the Seventh Regiment is about to bring its hundred years of existence to a splendid and glorious climax, some inquiring persons, imbued with the recently overdeveloped sense of investigation and discovery, have cast doubt on the age of the regiment.

"To celebrate a centennial is all very well," writes Faithful Reader, "but why not wait till the hundred years are up—and that won't be until 1 47? There wasn't any Seventh Regiment until 1847. They are celebrating forty-one years too early."

As a matter of fact, sure enough, there wasn't any Seventh Regiment until 1847. But for twenty years before that it was the National Guard of New York, being part of the Twenty-seventh Regiment, and still before that it was the Second Battalion of the Third Regiment, and if you want to go a little further back, it was part of the Battalion of Artillery which paraded up Broadway under Col. Sitcher in 1807.

The genesis of the Seventh Regiment, according to the records in its possession, was as follows: Four companies were organized in 1806 and soon after became a part of the Battalion of Artillery commanded by Major Sitcher. In 1807 the Third Regiment was formed and the four companies were then known as the Second Battalion of the Third Regiment. In 1812 the militia organizations were numbered by lot, and the Third Regiment became the Eleventh. Later the Second Battalion left the Eleventh, under the executive order separating the infantry from the artillery, and joined the Second. In 1826, when the battalion had grown into six companies, Gov. Clinton issued an order which transformed it into the Twenty-seventh Regiment.

In 1847 it was decided to renumber the regiments. The Twenty-seventh was bitterly opposed to the change. It had borne its name twenty years and more, and was proud of it. But its protests were of no avail. "Well, let us have a name that will remind us of the old one," said the men, and so they came to be called the Seventh.

No part of the Seventh but the first four companies makes any pretense to being a hundred years old—the others know they will be if they wait long enough. Companies A, B, C, and D, as they are now called, have the place of honor; they are the original Seventh Regiment. In the parade two weeks from next Saturday these four, the elect, will parade by themselves, as a separate organization.

The procession will form at the Seventy-first Regiment Armory, at Thirty-fourth Street and Fourth Avenue, according to the present plan. At 4 o'clock in the afternoon the march, eastward to Fifth Avenue, will begin. Then it will turn north, and, with bands playing and flags flying, will proceed up Fifth Avenue. Col. Appleton, of course, will be in command—the Grand Marshal.

The parade will be in three divisions—the regiment, the original four companies, and the veterans. This last class swelled so in size and importance through the first half century of the regiment's existence that they had to form themselves into a distinct organization, and they call it the Veterans' Association. In it are men prominent in every branch of life in New York—lawyers, financiers, merchants, physicians, teachers, and preachers. They will all be in the parade—all of them that are well and without corns on their feet. The veterans themselves are subdivided into three parts, these being the main body, the war veterans, and the uniformed veterans. The total number of paraders will be in the neighborhood of 2,500.

The personnel of the Seventh Regiment presents an interesting study. When you look over the roster you begin to think it's a sort of family affair. Father and son, brother and brother drill beside each other or give each other orders. John Daniell, for example, the wealthy merchant, who has a store on Broadway, is a private in Company G, and his son is Sergeant Major of the regiment. In business hours, perhaps, the younger Daniell may have to submit to his parent, but it's different up at the armory—for the son is boss there, and when he says "'Bout face!" then Private Daniell begins to revolve neatly on his heel.

Second in command is Lieut. Col. Kip, and he has a son who is Second Lieutenant of Company D. Major Lydecker's son is a Corporal in Company H. Major Fisk has both a brother and a son in the Seventh, the former a Lieutenant and the latter a Corporal. Quartermaster Walter G. Schuyler's brother James is Captain of Company B, and Battalion Quartermaster William H. Folsom's brother is a private in Company I. Quartermaster Sergeant Scriven has a son in Company C. Private Bavier's two sons are in Company C, and Private Morgan and his son are both in Company H. And there are many more such instances of kinship.

The Seventh, aside from its usefulness as a guardian of public safety, has been a great training school in its hundred years. Men who learned the rudiments of the science of fighting in its successive armories have gone abroad to help strengthen other regiments, both militia and "reg'lar." Fully fifty commissioned officers in the United States Army came out of the Seventh Regiment. There are said to be seventy-five of its veterans holding commissions now in other New York regiments, and all over the United States it has sent men to tell the country "how they do it in New York."

It is somewhat surprising that this regiment, as long as it has flourished, has had such a small number of commanders. Altogether there have been only thirteen—and only two since the close of the civil war. The only living ex-Colonel is Andrew A. Bremner, who was in command away back in the forties, during the Mexican war. Col. Emmons Clark, who wrote the voluminous history of the Seventh Regiment, served as Colonel twenty-five years, from 1864 to 1889, and Daniel Appleton has been at the head ever since. On the other hand, there was one Colonel who was in command but fifty days, and one or two more who served only a year each.

Nowadays most people have forgotten that the Seventh was the original possessor of the name National Guards. It was adopted in 1824, and was an exclusive privilege of the regiment until 1864, when the Legislature adopted the name for the entire State militia. Indeed, so jealous was the Seventh of its name that once there came near being serious trouble because another military organization in New York took a fancy to it. The original National Guards raised a cry and denounced the pilferers. It went so far that denunciatory resolutions were published in The New York Courier and Inquirer. Two Generals sought to come between with a flag of truce, but it did no good. The Sixth Brigade had to abandon the name or there was going to be trouble. The Sixth Brigade gave in.

That the original four companies came to call themselves the National Guards was almost a matter of pure chance. It is remarked that a group of officers were lolling in Battery Park one day in 1824, waiting for the boat with Marquis de Lafayette on board to come up the bay. Major Wilson, alluding to the connection of Lafayette with the famous National Guard of Paris, asked idly of his fellow-officers: "Why not call our new corps the National Guards?" The suggestion met with instant favor among the officers and later the men backed the choice up by loud approval.

The Seventh has not always been as well liked by New York as it is now. It was reviled and stoned by the populace in 1849, on the occasion of the Forrest-Macready riot. Marching down Lafayette Place to protect the English actor from the fury of Forrest sympathizers, the regiment was the target of sticks, stones, and bad fruit. The Mayor would not let the men fire on the mob, so they had to endure the pelting.

Finally their sufferings were beyond enduring, and they fired. Thirty men in the mob were killed on that May day fifty-seven years ago and more than a hundred seriously injured. This did not serve to increase the popularity of the regiment. For a long time afterward it was subjected to insults whenever it appeared on the streets.

The regiment regained its popularity, though, by its faithfulness in going to Washington during the civil war. Three times it made the journey—and three times returned. About the nearest the Seventh ever got to an actual fight was when it crossed the Potomac at Washington and helped put up earthworks to protect the city. The men were always anxious to go forward, but the Secretary of War as often decided that they must return to New York.

Though it did not take an active part in the war as a regiment, the Seventh gave many brave men and officers to the Union Army, and did valuable work toward the protection of Washington. On the first trip down, in 1861, it had to forsake the Baltimore route, railroad connections having been cut, and go to the capital by way of Annapolis. The Secretary of War issued a special order thanking and complimenting Col. Lefferts for the promptness with which his men made the trip.

The present home of the Seventh Regiment is the most splendidly appointed armory in New York. As large as Madison Square Garden, it is fitted in every way for the purposes of a crack military organization. There are a rifle range 300 feet long, a mammoth drill room, reception room, library, veterans' room, officers' board room, and rooms for the Colonel and his staff, for the Quartermaster, and for the Superintendent.

"An Englishwoman in New York": As to Household Bills

Our Kindly Critical Visitor Discovers Another of Our Inconsistencies and Makes Some Interesting Comparisons Concerning the Payment of Domestic Expenses.

FOR many weeks after my arrival in this city I did little else than admire the New York shopkeepers and expatiate by word of mouth and also in THE SUNDAY NEW YORK TIMES upon their liberality.

They were always giving me things and overloading me with benefits. I filled my desk with free blotting pads and calendars, and I waxed fat upon free luncheons at various "demonstration booths." I would buy a yard of silk, pay for it, change my mind about it, and lo! out would come the shopkeeper's hand to take it from me and hand me back my money.

Under such a system of whole-souled philanthropy I could never understand how American tradespeople made a living, much less became millionaires, as I knew many of them did become. I would be given pickles for nothing at the restaurants, bread and butter and potatoes were always "thrown in" with a meat order. I would be transferred from tramcar to tramcar till I seemed able to encircle, almost, the whole of Manhattan and its outlying districts for a beggarly tuppence-ha'penny. I would go to the theatre with a fifty-cent ticket and find myself sitting among the elegancies of the orchestra circle merely because I had responded with a quarter of a dollar to a whispered something from a gentlemanly usher.

Ordering merely ice cream, I would get a bit of cake with it for which I had not paid. All over New York I was continually coming across the most desirable acquisitions to my toilet and my wardrobe labeled "Take one!" and I always took one. I have purchased no face powder since I arrived here, and every week I try a new kind of sweet-scented soap, finding each sort better than its predecessor—soap handed out to me by smiling-faced drug clerks who tell me they hope I'll like it and to call again.

It is a sad thing to have one's illusions dissolved, one's idols demolished, one's little gods broken in bits.

The first shock came a month or more ago, when I began negotiating with New York landlords for a flat. With all the conformity possible to my British nature I paid a "deposit down" and the rental money a month in advance, though I had every sympathy for my Aunt Louisa in her reiterated protestations that such method of procedure had no "precedent" in England except among the working classes who might be said to live from hand to mouth.

But the landlord was not a shopkeeper, so I was still left to worship at the shrine of the philanthropic New York shopkeeper. And after setting up in the flat the first thing that happened in connection with our chosen local butcher was a touching and beautiful thing.

Every morning Aunt Louisa and I begin the day with a rasher of bacon, waferlike in thinness and streaked in variety. I do not like American-cured bacon so well as English-cured, and at the only large shop where I found the English brand which I wanted they declared that they could not cut it, no, not if I paid double the price per pound for it. So I had it sent to the flat all done up in the thin muslin which can be so nicely turned into two handy dustcloths, and then sent the small maid around to the butcher's to ask if we might hire him to cut it into thin rashers. He knew it was not bought at his shop, and, declaring that he never did such a thing before and he hoped he'd never do it again, he proceeded to cut it into fifty rashers, and scorned the money that was offered him in payment for his work. So straightway I engaged that butcher to cater to our small necessities in the way of meat. He has cut our bacon several times now, always under protest, and without a glimmer of understanding why we cannot eat his brand of bacon, but he will not charge for the cutting.

I called Aunt Louisa's attention to the butcher's philanthropy, and she admitted that it was as much "without precedent" as was the payment of deposits and rental in advance.

It was that same butcher, however, who on a Saturday afternoon rang the bell, thrust a bill in my face, and stood and waited. The very original maid who serves us had admitted him to the only hall we have, and called me to come to him in a quaint way she has, addressing me generally as "Say." I am saving Aunt Louisa all the unnecessary shocks that I can, and so it was upon me that the butcher thrust his little account of something over $2. I took it and asked innocently:

"What would you like? Why have you called at this time in the afternoon, when I am entertaining visitors to tea?"

"Two dollars, sixty-seven!" he remarked.

"What do you mean?" I asked.

"That's the amount," he said.

"Oh, is it?" I answered. "We should probably have discovered that on looking it over. I must ask you to excuse me."

I returned to the drawing room trying to repress my anger with the remembrance that this man was from the shop where they cut our bacon for nothing, and directed the maid to show him out. I had returned to tea drinking when that young person entered with:

"Say, the butcher's waitin' for the money, and he's awful mad, 'cause he's so busy and got no time to lose."

I passed a calming hand over Aunt Louisa's back, and going again into the hall said: "What do you mean by waiting here for money?"

"Where else shall I wait?" he asked.

"I never had any one wait for the money before—" I began, when he interrupted with:

"See here, do you mean you can't pay a bill of $2.67?"

Hastily I found $2.67, informed the man that he need no longer serve us with meat, and returned to quiet Aunt Louisa's inquiries with the information that we were the victims of some sort of mistake.

⁂

It was the next morning that my 7 o'clock nap was disturbed with the announcement:

"Here's the milk bill."

"What do you mean by waking me to give me a milk bill?" I asked of the small personage.

"Ain't you got the change?" she asked.

"What change?"

"It's 56 cents, seven quarts at 8 cents."

I scrambled out of bed, found a purse, counted 56 cents, and directed that the milkman be discharged.

The maid returned to say: "He wants to know if you've any fault to find with the milk? He knows it's the best milk in New York, and one-third cream, and he says it's only fair to his firm to say what's the matter with the milk."

"Mary Ann," I said solemnly, raising on my elbows and stretching out a warning hand from the bedcovers, "I am not a bad-tempered mistress, but certainly something fearful will happen to you if you don't discharge that milkman without further parley and allow me to rest in peace. I cannot enter into a discussion about the merits of his milk."

"I guess you better go. She ain't just right, and her aunt's worse'n her, so you better not wake the old lady up. They're what you call 'peculiar.' My father says so, but he says they're all alike, these furriners."

Mary Ann is to me a very bright spot in the New York firmament. She is, as we should say in England, "obliging" us while we are engaged in searching for a proper maid. She is the janitor's daughter, just 16, and small of her age. It is she who has eaten the $2.67 worth of meat. She serves for us in a rather unceremonious style our breakfast of coffee and bacon, and does the work of the flat after a fashion, while a caterer supplies us with luncheon and dinner. Mary Ann and Aunt Louisa do not hit it off, my aunt regarding her as an impertinent young person, which she undoubtedly is, though she does not mean to be. Mary Ann and I, however, are great friends. She amuses me, and, incidentally, buttons my bodices up the back, and I know I shall greatly miss her when Aunt Louisa succeeds in finding that "nice young person" for whom she is daily advertising.

So when I heard Mary Ann confiding to the milkman her opinion of me I merely laughed and decided to get up early.

"The telephone man!" announced Mary Ann when the clock hands indicated 9:30.

"What does he want?" I asked.

"Four dollars and a half!"

"Discharge him. Tell him to take the telephone out!" exclaimed Aunt Louisa.

"She says to take the telephone out!" repeated Mary Ann, flying into the passage. "She" is always Aunt Louisa. I hope Aunt Louisa will never know that to Mary Ann this is her name. Even in addressing me concerning my aunt, Mary Ann invariably will say, "She says she's ready to go now," or "She wants to know if you have a safety pin."

While the telephone man pondered over the sudden instructions concerning the removal of the telephone Mary Ann opened the door and announced the landlord's agent, who bowed and smiled and gave it as his opinion that it was a pleasant day, and declared he hoped we found the steam heat satisfactory and had plenty of hot water.

I informed him that both the heat and the water were all that could be desired, and then, looking about the drawing room, he complimented us on the taste with which we had fitted it up. We thanked him, and both Aunt Louisa and I stood waiting for his next remark, which was to the effect that he hoped we found the janitor attentive and that our garbage was removed every morning at 9 o'clock sharp, according to rule. We assured him that we presumed the rule was followed, as Mary Ann never mentioned anything to the contrary.

We still stood, and he walked to the window to examine the fire-escape, pointing out to us the fact that this building was absolutely fireproof, and that the fire-escape was merely there as a matter of conformity to the law.

He is a pleasant man, the agent, and looks carefully after the wants of his employer's tenants. He had been particularly kind in allowing us to change our minds three times about the shade of the dining room wall paper, and we did not like to seem rude, but it was really so extraordinary for a landlord's agent to call on one in this way without explaining his reason for doing so, that finally I said:

"We are going out this morning, Mr. Blank, so perhaps you will let us know the reason of your visit. We like the flat very much. We intend to keep it."

"I am glad to know that, and if you will just let me have the rent I will not keep you in on such a fine day."

"You certainly do not think we want to evade paying our rent!" exclaimed I.

"Not at all, not at all!" he laughed.

"Very well, then, may we bid you good morning and excuse ourselves?" interposed Aunt Louisa, icily.

"I don't understand you, Madam," said the agent. "I naturally supposed you knew I called for the rent. It is due to-day, in advance. You know it was explained to you that here we have the rent paid in advance."

"And what if it is due to-day—in advance or up to date?" I asked.

"Why, I called to get it."

"You have sent no bill, and this is only the day when the month is up," I retorted. "We had no intention of moving out, and we should have sent you a check very shortly after receiving the bill."

It was on the tip of Aunt Louisa's tongue to exclaim "Discharge the landlord!" when I said, half tearfully:

"We like this flat, and we do not want to move, but really we could not submit to being insulted in this way. And everybody insults us. The telephone man stands in the hall as though he thought we wanted to steal the instrument; the milkman came at 7 o'clock for 56 cents, and we do not understand being treated as though we were deadbeats. Are women always treated this way about bills in New York?"

The agent is a human man, and, posting himself against the mantelpiece, much to Aunt Louisa's horror, he explained to us this custom of New York in the matter of bill collecting.

It is all so different in England, but I am glad we found out before we had discharged every tradesman who serves us, as we certainly should have done had not the agent enlightened us. I sent the telephone man away with a check and a letter to the company declining again to receive their collector, but stating that a bill sent by post would be promptly paid. I called up the milk company and told them that we wanted to continue taking their delicious milk, but must insist upon a monthly account to be paid by check. We sent Mary Ann around to the butcher with explanations concerning our apparent lack of appreciation of all he had done for us in the matter of cutting up bacon free of charge.

But what a mass of inconsistencies you Americans are! In the midst of my anger at seeming insults I stop to laugh heartily at a landlord who will supply hot water, heat, cupboards, washtubs, mantel-mirrors, dress hangers, and what-nots to his tenants—where a London landlord would put a list of every key and hanging nail on a bill of "fixtures" for which to charge extra—and yet sends his agent around early on the morning when the rental is due to ask for the money in advance. In England the landlord, after waiting a quarter, allows seven, fourteen, or twenty-one days before he begins the sending of bills. If you do not send a check his letters get more and more polite and delightfully solicitous as the days and the weeks go on. He declares that he knows, of course, that the small matter of paying your rent has merely escaped your attention.

As does your landlord, so do your tradesmen. Your butcher will write you such a letter as might be copied from a book on "Polite Letter Writing." He does not even then presume to ask you for the whole amount. He asks for the favor of a small sum "on account." You may owe him £50, but he continues to "solicit your patronage," and hopes you find the steak to your liking.

Your grocer asks your forgiveness for calling your attention to the fact that his bill now amounts to £15, knowing, of course, that you have too many things in mind to have thought of so small an item, but he would be glad of something on account, and begs to inform you that he has just received a shipment of extra special loaf sugars and Madeira, and would be pleased to fill your order for the same.

The gas man comes, after he has written you six letters, and apologizes to the cook for troubling her to open the basement door. He leaves the seventh bill. After awhile he leaves a bill every day, and after months there is talk about cutting off your gas. Finally he will cut it off, after advising you to get in a stock of paraffin oil and candles, and one of these days you may be summoned to appear and show cause why you do not pay for the gas you burned up last year.

And his Majesty lets you go days and weeks and sometimes months without paying the King's taxes before his agents begin to call on you personally, and even then they do not try to see you, but merely mention to the maid at the door that really the King's taxes are things that can't wait. After a long while, if you haven't got the money, or having the money have not the inclination to pay your share toward the maintenance of the British Government, you are requested to step around and have a chat with a delightful official who has an office in your neighborhood, and you talk it over quite pleasantly. It may be that in particularly harassing times you may call on the polite official more than once.

You get so accustomed to this routine in England that really you are extremely surprised when you find yourself being sued in a police court for the payment of your honest debts, and you are more than surprised—you are positively annoyed—when you discover yourself in jail with a chair and a glass of water and a Bible for consolation, serving, say, a day for each pound sterling you owe. "In jail for debt!" you exclaim. You thought that in England we no longer imprison for debt? No, you are not in jail for debt. You are in jail for contempt of court. If the Judge orders you to pay within a certain time, and you do not pay, then you go to jail because you have not obeyed the Judge's orders.

In England we have long ago done away with the barbaric custom of imprisonment for debt!

But you do not always go to jail because you have not paid. The landlord has merely to "put a man in," and after you have paid the man for several days' or weeks' residence in your house, you either pay the landlord or he takes your furniture. The landlord is always safe. So are your other creditors if you have anything not entailed upon which they may levy.

And, come to think of it, I wonder if that is the reason the London landlord lets you pay quarterly and the London tradesmen wait so long and patiently!

And really, after all, perhaps, Aunt Louisa and I might have moved and not paid the landlord, nor the butcher, nor the milkman, nor the telephone company, and they have no redress! But could not they have arranged to treat us as honest till, at least, one day had gone by?

A Ballade of Old Romance

WHEN April spreads her mantle green
Across the pasture lands of snow,
And Spring's first scarlet breasts are seen
Where treetops rustle to and fro;
Then come fair fragrant dreams as though
Our lightest fancy to entrance
And paint us what we fain would know
Adown the lanes of old Romance.

Anon, we see the golden sheen
Of burnished mail the sunbeams throw,
Flashing the poplars tall between,
As knights ride by to meet the foe;
Or, mayhap, shepherd lads who blow
On slender pipes, a pastoral dance—
Ah, strong were they in weal and woe
Adown the lanes of old Romance!

But now the vast years intervene,
The fountain long has ceased its flow,
And silence rules the lone demesne
That once held such a goodly show;
Yet time, at least, does this bestow
Nor leave the best to fleeting chance—
They live again in fancy's glow
Adown the lanes of old Romance.

ENVOY.

Sweet, still for us some blossoms grow
From out that dim and dear expanse—
Come, take my hand and we shall go
Adown the lanes of old Romance!

"TAKE off your hat, Sir!" directed a lunatic in an insane asylum. The visitor asked the reason for the request. The lunatic answered: "Because I am a son of the Emperor of the French."

On another visit to the asylum the visitor was again requested to doff his hat. This time the insane man announced: "I am the son of the Emperor of Germany." When his attention was called to the fact that at the previous visit he had claimed to be the son of the Emperor of the French he calmly replied:

"Ah, yes, that was by another mother."

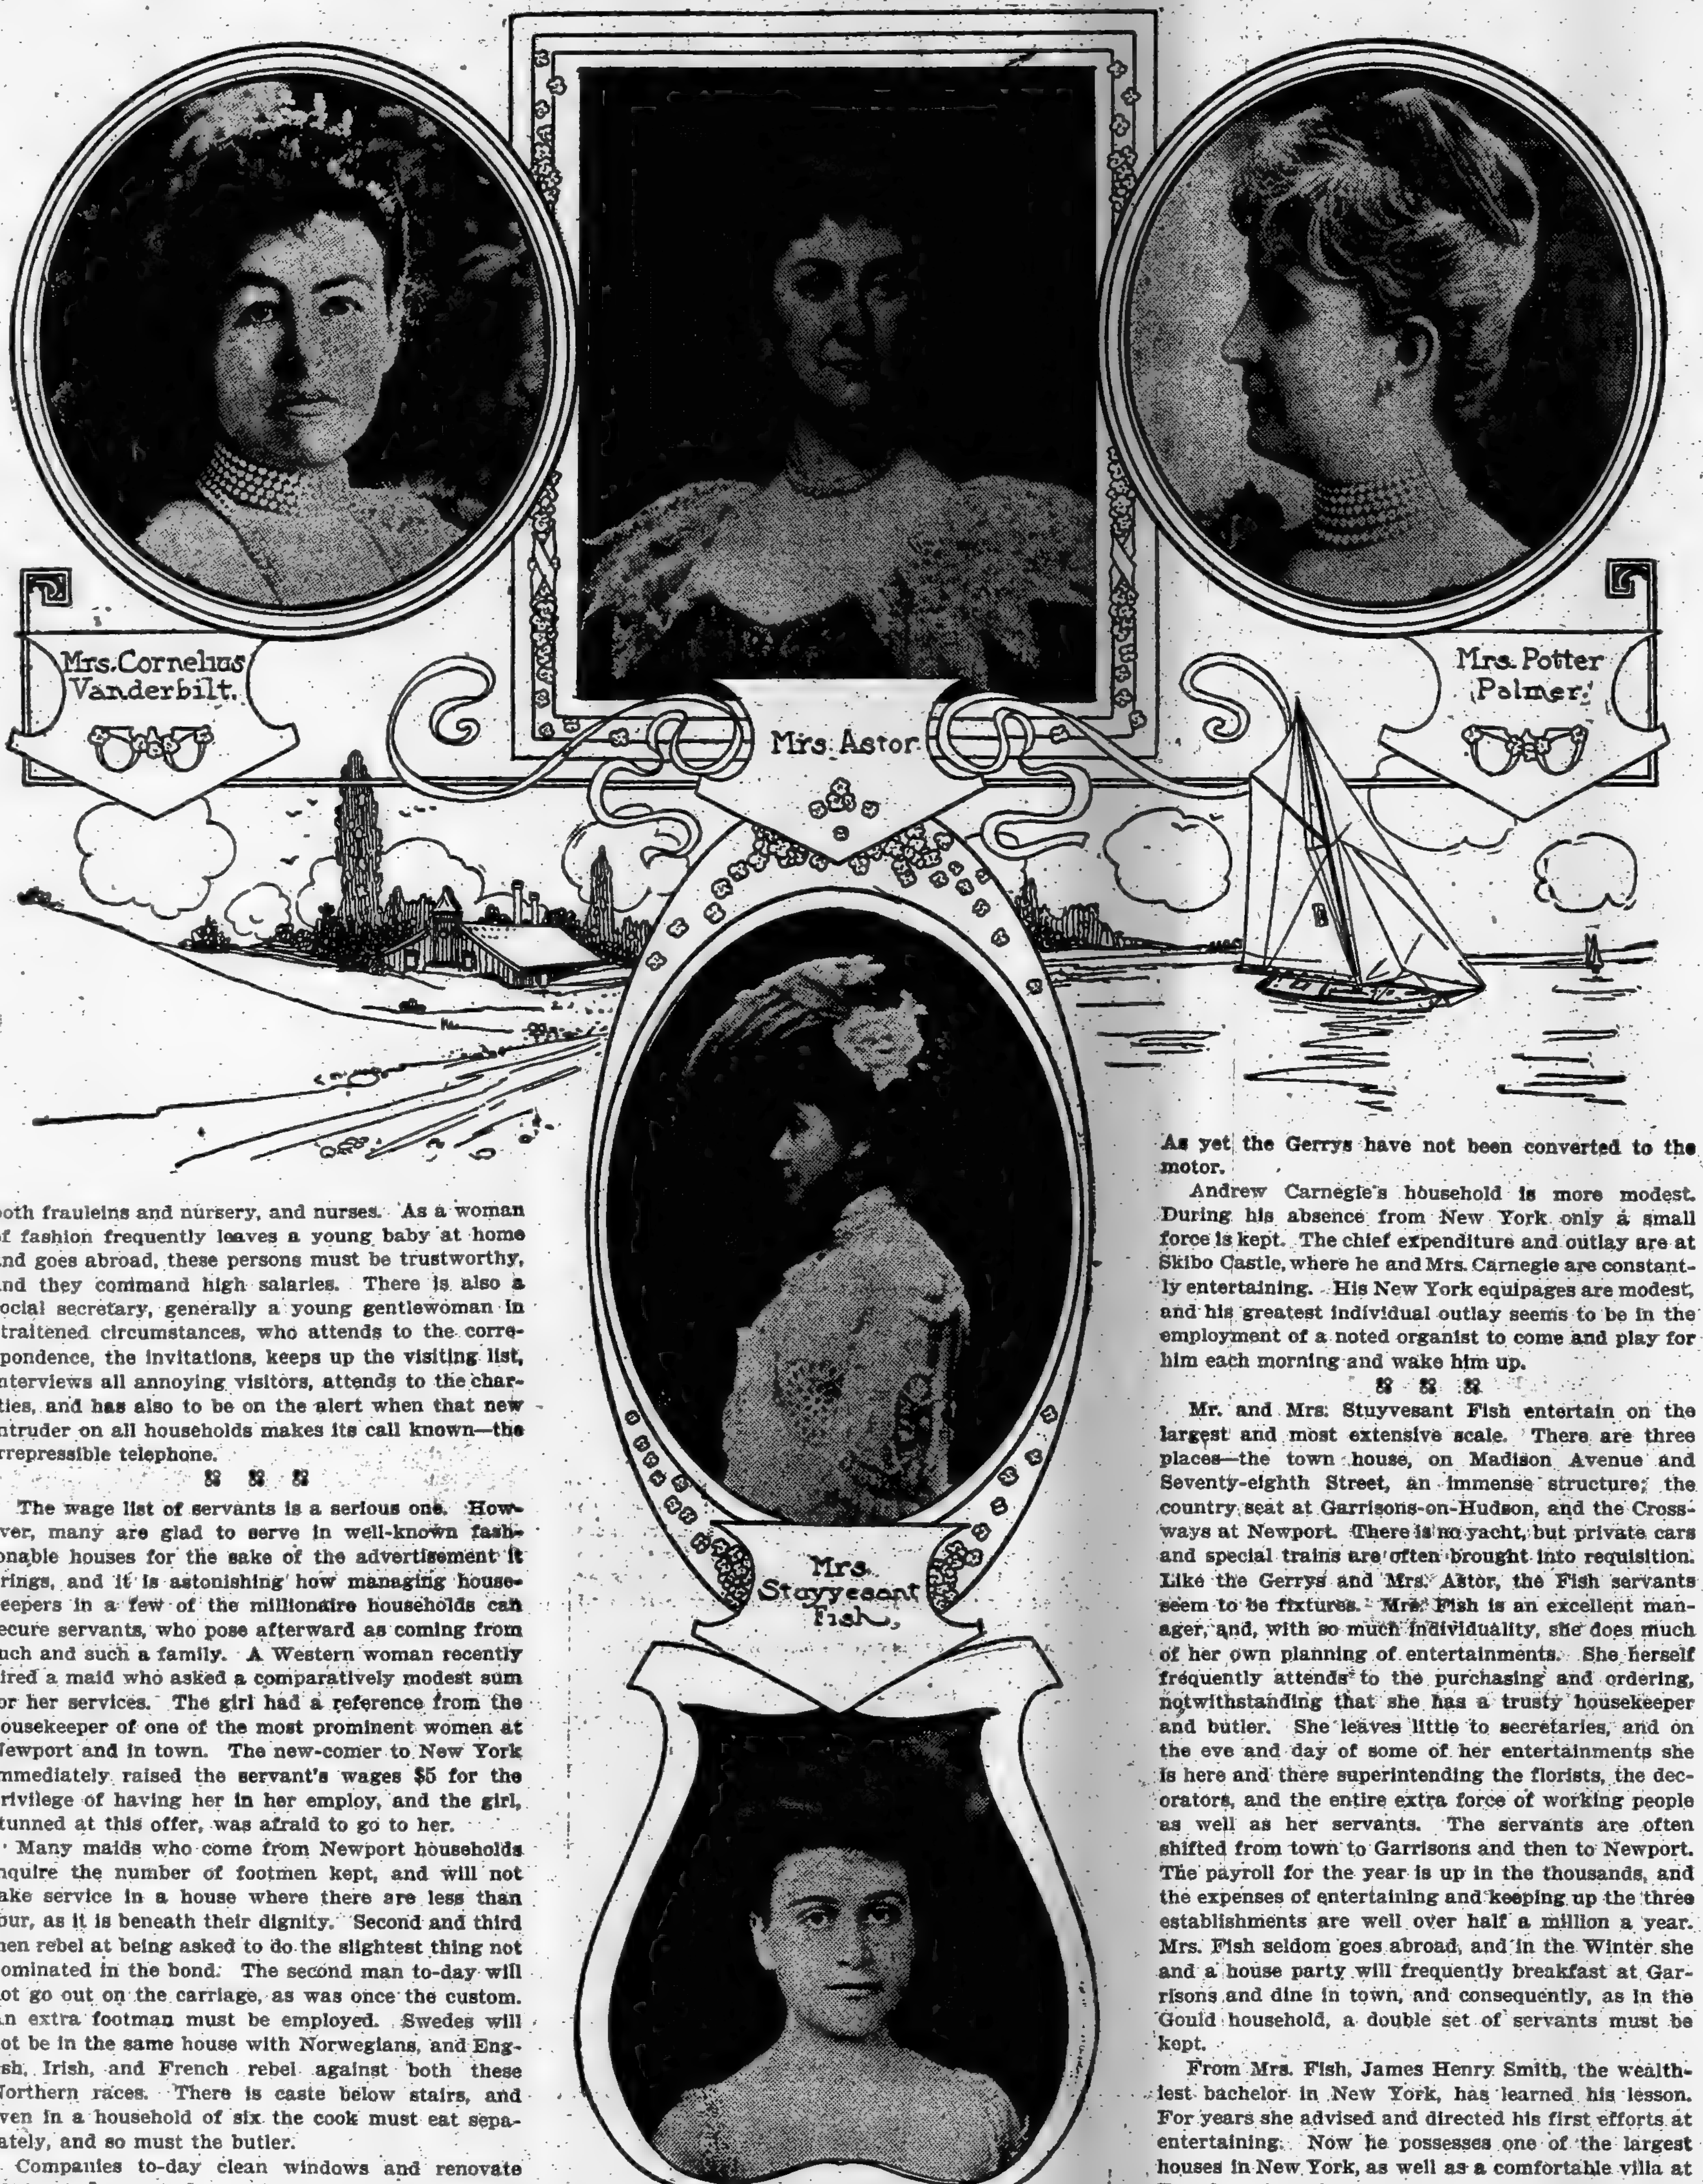
The Problem of Living on Half a Million a Year

Once You Establish a Standard You Will Find It No Easy Matter to Make Ends Meet---Where the Money Goes---Inside View of the Menages of Some Wealthy New Yorkers.



Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt.

Mrs. Astor.

Mrs. Potter Palmer.

Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish.

Mrs. John R. Drexel.

It is just as difficult a problem for some people to live on half a million per annum, or even more, as it is for others to make both ends meet at $1,200 or less. A blasé clubman said recently at a dinner that it was impossible for any one even to keep up appearances in New York on less than $5,000 a year; that this represented absolute poverty for a single man in his set. His estimate was not exaggerated. To be anybody in New York society is out of the question unless a family has a town house, a country seat, a villa at Newport or Bar Harbor, or a lesser fashionable resort; a yacht, a garage of motors, a well-equipped stable, a private car, and a hunting box somewhere in the Carolinas or in Georgia. To this others add a camp, and all that it implies, in the Adirondacks, an apartment in Paris, and a town house in London, with the possibility of another house at Cowes for the yachting, and still another at Ascot for race week.

Mrs. Potter Palmer, one of the wealthiest widows in America, maintained in England last year no less than five establishments with an army of servants, and she did not close her house at Chicago. William K. Vanderbilt has his country seat at Oakdale, where, whether he is there or not, there must be kept a regiment of employes of all kinds; his town house, which is never left completely vacant; his villa near Versailles, and his hotel in Paris.

In some families the servants are transferred from town to country seat, to Newport or elsewhere, as the season demands. In others complete new sets of servants are engaged for the country and Newport seasons, under the direction of an older servant or with the addition of a few of the regulars of the household. In fact, a caterer at Newport is known to supply for an entertainment not only the waiters for the supper room, but butlers and maitres d'hotels for occasions. There are several French boarding houses in Newport where such functionaries go and pass the Summer, and make a handsome living by these "odd jobs." Their prices vary for the services of a single evening. Sometimes they soar as high as $50.

Yet, with all this most necessary expenditure, there are different methods of living among these millionaires themselves, who are divided into sets or classes. There are those who have had their wealth for at least three or more generations, and who are either descended from or allied with the old Dutch and English and Colonial families, now called indiscriminately Knickerbockers; others whose money has been of much more recent origin, and others again who are not New Yorkers, but who have made their fortunes in other cities and whose ambition is to be prominent in New York society.

This society is like a lottery. There are those within the gates who do not spend fabulous amounts on their households, but who lead and who do things even better than others on a comparatively modest expenditure, and others again who are obliged to resort to spectacular effects with vast outlays of money in order to maintain their standing. To the newcomer or the young couple starting out in life with a modest income for these days of five figures, the problem of existing is serions and puzzling, and many even with comfortable bank accounts find themselves spending far beyond their means. The wages of servants and the number to be employed and maintained; the cost of keeping up different establishments, stables, garages, and yachts, added to the amount expended for actual entertaining and living, sometimes are items which only represent one-half the outlay. To this must be added two important matters—waste and graft.

Here is the entourage of an ordinary fashionable household of a multi-millionaire: First, the secretary or manager, at a salary of $5,000 or more a year; a butler at not less than $1,200, a second man or under butler at $600, two, four, or six footmen at $480 to $600. A managing housekeeper at $720 to $1,200, madam's maid at about $800, a nursery governess for the children at 6$00, a parlormaid, chambermaids, laundresses, home dressmakers in numbers from one each to two or three at wages not less than $25 to $35 a month. A chef at anywhere from $200 to $10,000 per annum, assistants and kitchen maids at $25 to $35 a month, electrical engineers for the dynamo engine and lighting apparatus at $1,200 to $1,500 more per annum. Add to this the men who shovel snow, carry coal, &c., the private watchman, and possibly a boy or a page, and it is not difficult to see where $25,000 of a yearly income would go.

This does not include the stable, with coachmen and footmen and stable boys; the garage, with chauffeurs and assistants. And this is only the wages list in town. In the country there are, in addition, the head gardener and under men, the farmhands, the farmer himself and his household, the servants for the dairy, and a host of smaller offices. There is the yacht, with its Captain, its crew, and its steward, and frequently another cook and assistants and an extra force of waiters. When entertaining on a grand scale there are the extra men called in to reinforce the butler's department as well as the kitchen. Each person is a specialist. The housekeeper is general manager, takes care of the linen, the china, and the running of the house, arranging the smaller details of each entertainment, hiring the servants, ordering from the tradespeople, subject to the approval of the steward or social secretary. The butler, who is never in livery, attends to the wines and the service of the dining room and the engineering of dinners. Then there is an invisible assistant or an under man for the pantry. There are footmen for the hall and the men—generally the same in most households—to assist at waiting and to stand behind one's chair at dinner—one for every two guests. At many large dinners the waiting is done by the under butler and his assistants, and the footmen stand perfectly still, ornaments to their calling.

The chef has a full force, and there is a separate cook for the servants' hall. The parlormaid arranges the flowers in the drawing room, dusts the ornaments, but never goes beyond her domain. The chambermaids have their territory, and the laundress reigns supreme in hers. The maid to the mistress of the house is a confidential servant, who must be most tactful and clever. She has to be trustworthy to a degree. In her charge are the jewels, and it is she who puts them in the safe in madam's apartments and takes them out again when required. She superintends the robing of her mistress and brings her the light breakfast in the morning in her apartments, and is the last servant to leave her at night. She travels with her everywhere.

Where there are young daughters there are frequently several maids. Some wealthy women are opposed to this, and Mrs. Vanderbilt would never allow her eldest daughter, Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, a maid until she grew up. But, then, she has practical ideas, and the Misses Vanderbilt, with all their wealth, were brought up very simply. When there are young children, there are governesses, both frauleins and nursery, and nurses. As a woman of fashion frequently leaves a young baby at home and goes abroad, these persons must be trustworthy, and they command high salaries. There is also a social secretary, generally a young gentlewoman in straitened circumstances, who attends to the correspondence, the invitations, keeps up the visiting list, interviews all annoying visitors, attends to the charities, and has also to be on the alert when that new intruder on all households makes its call known—the irrepressible telephone.

The wage list of servants is a serious one. However, many are glad to serve in well-known fashionable houses for the sake of the advertisement it brings, and it is astonishing how managing housekeepers in a few of the millionaire households can secure servants, who pose afterward as coming from such and such a family. A Western woman recently hired a maid who asked a comparatively modest sum for her services. The girl had a reference from the housekeeper of one of the most prominent women at Newport and in town. The new-comer to New York immediately raised the servant's wages $5 for the privilege of having her in her employ, and the girl, stunned at this offer, was afraid to go to her.

Many maids who come from Newport households inquire the number of footmen kept, and will not take service in a house where there are less than four, as it is beneath their dignity. Second and third men rebel at being asked to do the slightest thing not nominated in the bond. The second man to-day will not go out on the carriage, as was once the custom. An extra footman must be employed. Swedes will not be in the same house with Norwegians, and English, Irish, and French rebel against both these Northern races. There is caste below stairs, and even in a household of six the cook must eat separately, and so must the butler.

Companies to-day clean windows and renovate houses and carpets by machinery, and others supply mechanics and furnace tenders. Many people close their town houses altogether at the end of the season, and put them in charge of another corporation, sealed and boarded up.

Thus it will be seen how difficult it is for persons of ordinary means to entertain in New York and live like their neighbors. Keeping a house only six months in the year costs at least $20,000, and many go abroad rather than try Newport or any of the Summer resorts, where conditions are even more strenuous.

The housekeeper has her apartments and her separate table. The coachman and footman and the entire stable following live now at a distance from the house, in a luxuriously appointed building, the lower part of which is a palace for horses and the upper part most comfortable apartments. To this recently has been added in another district the private garage, with its chauffeur and assistants. Many of the most modern houses, like those of the Sloanes, the Carnegies, the Burdens, and the Fabbris, have complete electric equipments, and there is a resident engineer with an assistant.

The first position to-day in a multi-millionaire's household is that of a steward or a groom of the chambers. Several men have made great successes in this line. One of these, William Hude Neilson, who was prominent in New York and Philadelphia society, manages for Mr. and Mrs. John R. Drexel, who recently entertained Prince Louis and Prince Alexander of Battenberg, having the latter as a residing guest for one week. Mr. Neilson is not the secretary. He is virtually the head of the household department. He has his suite of rooms, and naturally is as one of the family. He plans all entertainments, and has direct supervision over the entire establishment. He frequently leads the cotillions, and he generally accompanies Mr. and Mrs. Drexel to Europe on their annual trips, returning before them so as to have either the town or Newport house ready for them. Mrs. Drexel entertains lavishly. There are at least twenty-four servants in the house, and on reception days there are from four to eight footmen in the Drexel livery standing in the hall.

Apropos of these footmen—they must be imported Englishmen or Swedes, and be of a size and match perfectly—it is told of Stuyvesant Fish, who, on arriving at his house after a harassing day of committee and corporation work being obliged to pass through a similar line of these gorgeous persons, on his wife's reception day, remarked in his quaint way: "Well, I have been working hard for nearly twelve hours to help support these gentlemen of leisure."

The household of George Gould is regulated with the precision of a great railroad system. Mr. Hamilton, a cousin of Mr. Gould, has the control. He it is who directs and arranges everything both at Lakewood and in town. The town house has a small force for a part of the year, but the Lakewood corps is kept up. There is always some member of the family at Georgian Court. Sometimes it is one or another or perhaps all the boys, and again it may be Mrs. Kingdon, the mother of Mrs. Gould. The smaller country estate in the Catskills is used only two or three times a year. In Summer, when Mr. and Mrs. Gould are not traveling, they have a yacht, the provisioning of which is also intrusted to Mr. Hamilton. The system in the household is one of orders and requisitions, and it is so well planned in detail that it is said not even Mrs. Gould herself can get anything from the housekeeper's department without signing a requisition. All bills are paid on a certain day once a month. The living expenses of the domestics at Georgian Court amount to over a thousand dollars a month. The salary list runs considerably over that, because there must be taken into consideration the numerous attachés of a country place, including those in the stables and in the amusement courts and on the polo field. Mr. and Mrs. Gould make much use of private cars and special trains. Mr. Gould has also a shooting estate in North Carolina.

The Gerry household is conducted on the most liberal lines, Commodore and Mrs. Gerry being most hospitable. At their town house the corps of servants includes a full kitchen force under a high-priced chef. Everything at the Gerry entertainments is made in the house and caterers are not employed. The Gerry footmen are the admiration of New York. They are very tall and match in size. Such men, even for ornamental purposes, command wages of from $40 to $60 a month. Mrs. Gerry and her daughters have each a maid, and there are second men and a numerous corps of household servants. The Electra, the Commodore's yacht, is in commission three months of the year and the entertaining is constant. The Commodore himself, who is a noted epicure, has his pickles and sauces and preserves put up specially for him in London or imported from India, and all the bottles bear the label of the Electra. Seaverge, the Gerry villa, although not as large as some other houses at Newport, is ample for entertaining on a small scale. Attached to the Newport estate are the famous conservatories and hothouses. Here, Mr. Gerry raises his famous melons and tropical fruits and all sorts of vegetables under glass. With a staff of gardeners, presided over by an expert man who commands a good salary, this fad alone costs anywhere from $5,000 to $10,000 a year. At Delaware Lake the Gerrys have a country seat. Robert L. Gerry has a separate stable, which employs a number of men, and a hunting lodge in Orange County. As yet the Gerrys have not been converted to the motor.

Andrew Carnegie's household is more modest. During his absence from New York only a small force is kept. The chief expenditure and outlay are at Skibo Castle, where he and Mrs. Carnegie are constantly entertaining. His New York equipages are modest, and his greatest individual outlay seems to be in the employment of a noted organist to come and play for him each morning and wake him up.

Mr. and Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish entertain on the largest and most extensive scale. There are three places—the town house, on Madison Avenue and Seventy-eighth Street, an immense structure; the country seat at Garrisons-on-Hudson, and the Crossways at Newport. There is no yacht, but private cars and special trains are often brought into requisition. Like the Gerrys and Mrs. Astor, the Fish servants seem to be fixtures. Mrs. Fish is an excellent manager, and, with so much individuality, she does much of her own planning of entertainments. She herself frequently attends to the purchasing and ordering, notwithstanding that she has a trusty housekeeper and butler. She leaves little to secretaries, and on the eve and day of some of her entertainments she is here and there superintending the florists, the decorators, and the entire extra force of working people as well as her servants. The servants are often shifted from town to Garrisons and then to Newport. The payroll for the year is up in the thousands, and the expenses of entertaining and keeping up the three establishments are well over half a million a year. Mrs. Fish seldom goes abroad, and in the Winter she and a house party will frequently breakfast at Garrisons and dine in town, and consequently, as in the Gould household, a double set of servants must be kept.

From Mrs. Fish, James Henry Smith, the wealthiest bachelor in New York, has learned his lesson. For years she advised and directed his first efforts at entertaining. Now he possesses one of the largest houses in New York, as well as a comfortable villa at Tuxedo, where he gives week-end parties. During the season he is obliged to keep up two establishments. He entertains at one general affair once in the Winter, and this costs him not less than $15,000 or $20,000. In Summer he has his English place and his moor in Scotland, which he rents with servants and retainers—an entire clan—at a prohibitive figure. Mr. Smith has his own drag and his stable, but as yet he owns no garage. He keeps his motors at one of the garages near Broadway. He has avoided Newport and he does not have a yacht. His income is over half a million, but he does not spend it all, although entertaining lavishly.

Perhaps Dr. Seward Webb may be said, with the exception of William K. Vanderbilt, to be the most lavish entertainer in the Vanderbilt family. The Webbs have their town house and Shelburne Farms, which is one of the largest country estates in America. With their camp in the Adirondacks and special trains whenever they make a trip to the South or the Pacific Slope, the outlay far exceeds half a million a year. Shelburne Farms is a village in itself, and second to no great country estate, except Biltmore, the North Carolina home of George Vanderbilt. The game preserves alone call for a corps of gamekeepers, beaters, &c., who ask triple the wages they get in Scotland or England.

And so the story goes on ad infinitum, taking the Ogden Millses, the William D. Sloanes, the H. McK. Twomblys, all the Vanderbilts, and some sixty or seventy others who go into society. Among the newcomers in New York and Newport are the Fricks and the Walshes. The former have the George Vanderbilt house, on Fifth Avenue, and the latter has the Bareda place, which has always been the scene of most lavish entertaining. The Fricks have a young daughter to bring out, and they have redecorated, refurnished, and rearranged the entire Vanderbilt mansion. The domestic force has been selected and drilled by prominent persons. The Walshes had the benefit of the advice of Mr. Beatty, who formerly acted as secretary and manager for the late Calvin Brice and who was the pioneer of the "social secretary" of to-day.

But, on the other hand, there are millionaires and multi-millionaires in New York who spend far less than half a million and still maintain splendid establishments. John D. Rockefeller is simple in his tastes, and the family have rarely entertained. They have the adequate force of housekeepers, butlers, and servants, but their households, in town, in the Pocantico Hills, at Lakewood, and at Cleveland, are maintained without the least show of pomp or circumstance, and with only the absolute number of servants required to manage large places. James B. Haggin lives modestly, although he and Mrs. Haggin have a villa at Newport in Summer and an opera box and give frequent dinners. Their expenditures fall short of half a million a year. They keep up their Kentucky estate, Green Hills, with a larger force of servants than they employ in New York, where their brownstone Fifth Avenue house is comparatively modest.

There is one woman in New York whose invitations are more eagerly coveted than any other, whose entertainments are red letter events in the social calendar, who has the largest ballroom, the most gorgeous dinner service, and who is more than lavish whenever she entertains, and yet half a million would be a big estimate for the running of her establishment. This is Mrs. Astor. Mrs. Astor has conservative ideas. Her arrival in New York, the opening of her town house, her three state dinners and her ball, her sailing for Europe, her stay in Paris, her visit to London, and her return to America, with her three months' sojourn at Newport and her entertainments there, are practically as immovable feasts as are Christmas and All Saints' in the Church calendar.

Mrs. Astor and her son and daughter-in-law, Col. and Mrs. John Jacob Astor, occupy the great Astor mansion on Fifth Avenue, which is in reality two separate establishments. Sometimes, as on the occasion of Mrs. Astor's annual ball, these are thrown together, and society dances in one and sups in the other, but even then the entire entertainment is in charge of Hade, Mrs. Astor's trusty butler, who has been her major domo for many years. He is a man of exceptional intelligence and education.

Mrs. Astor does not require the services of a social secretary. She herself, no matter what entertainment she has attended the previous evening, breakfasts simply each morning of her life at 7 o'clock. She has a companion, a lady who has been with her also many years, and who may be called her secretary, but Mrs. Astor writes many of her letters herself and even the directions to tradespeople and lists of guests for her entertainments. This list, which is the Court circular of New York, is revised and amended each year, and it is as accurate as the Social Register. All Mrs. Astor's servants have been in her employ for a number of years. Her aged housekeeper died last Winter. With her butler, two to four footmen, and an extra force for state dinners and great entertainments; her chef and assistants, and a working corps of some twelve people in all, she gives small dinners throughout the New York season, her great ball, where the supper is famous and really more bountiful than at many other houses, which are only spectacular, and several dinners and sometimes a dance at Beechwood, her Newport villa. The latter place is most modest, and looks small in comparison with some of the palaces recently built at that famous watering place. But Mrs. Astor does not believe in a great show for the country.

Col. John Jacob Astor's house at Ferncliff is small also, and has been the Summer home of the Astors for nearly a century. Col. Astor makes much more of a display than his mother. He has a Summer home at Newport, a yacht in commission three months of the year, Ferncliff, and sometimes a London town house. At Ferncliff there is an amusement hall or clubhouse which requires many servants for part of the year. Mrs. Astor does not own a yacht. Her apartment in Paris requires few servants, and is a pied à terre simply. Except on the occasion of a state dinner, Mrs. Astor at Beechwood can manage with the usual complement of six to eight in service. Her carriage, a brougham, is very modest. Col. Astor has an extensive garage at Ferncliff, but he does not employ many chauffeurs or drivers. Mechanics is among his recreations, and he drives his motors himself and knows more about their "inwards" than three-fourths of the imported or domestic chauffeurs.

But the mere question of servants' wages, the cost of entertaining, and the keeping of what would seem to be a small hotel do not represent the entire cost. The "graft" is fearful and the waste is appalling. For instance, when a yacht is placed in commission it is an unwritten law that the steward shall have the ordering. Large wholesale and retail houses are eager for the custom. But the steward, with few exceptions, demands a percentage from the dealer and he always gets it. Naturally the dealer himself must make some profit, so he advances the prices. Many of the great houses buy their provisions and supplies by wholesale and their bills amount to over $1,000 a month, at what they consider rock-bottom prices. In yachting there are also the supplies for the vessel itself, such as paint, sails, or machinery, coal, and the thousand and one things needed on a small-sized ocean steamer. The Captain arranges for these, and here is where his profit comes in. The owner has a floating hotel on which to entertain his friends, but he is in the power of his Captain and his steward. Good men are hard to find, and he must close his eyes to these little transactions. He knows well that it is impossible to place a steam yacht in commission under less than $50,000 for the season, and that a short one.

In the stable the "graft" is supreme. Each new coachman demands a long list of expensive harness and accoutrements, and he stands in with the dealer for his "rake off." He is supreme master in his stable. Should he will it—and an actual instance is quoted, one of many—he will dictate to the head of the house as to whether or not the carriages or horses will go out. A coachman employed at the head of one of these stables, if he does not feel like going out at night, will refuse to have the horses or carriages brought out. The weather will be too bad or the horses will be sick, and his employers, afraid perhaps to lose him, will either send to the cab company or the nearest garage and hire a conveyance. The coachman advises on the purchase of horses, and there was an instance recently where, because he was not consulted and could not get his percentage on the buying of a pair of horses which had taken one of the ribbons at the Show, he deliberately drove them so as to lame them. He then told his employer that the horses had gone lame and would never be any use again. They were sold for a song to a dealer whom the coachman knew, and another pair bought from the same man, the coachman getting his "rake off" on that transaction and another when the lamed horses—when they recovered—were sold at a huge profit to another party.

As for the garage, it is to many an unknown land. How many thousands are spent for worthless motors, for repairs, and for extraordinary accidents occurring to expensive machines would be a pretty problem for an arithmetician. In the household itself the housekeeper, the chef, and the butler must be appeased and, to use a common phrase, their paws liberally greased. With the percentages they get from the tradespeople and the waste and the disappearance of supplies and provisions, and the high wages, there is no doubt that in many houses of the rich, where there are not trusty employes or efficient heads or a system high life below stairs is a most profitable existence.

Young couples starting out in life with a few thousand dollars—say, fifty or more income—and wishing to keep up the pace have a problem before them.

What Is the "People's Institute"? Its Work Explained

Managing Director Charles Sprague Smith Tells of the Beginning, the Growth, Achievements, and Future Plans of This Interesting East Side Educational Enterprise.

CHARLES SPRAGUE SMITH, MANAGING DIRECTOR OF PEOPLE'S INSTITUTE.

EVERY Sunday night, for nearly eight years, a body of men and women come together in the hall of the Cooper Union and discuss the various questions that are uppermost in the public mind. The meetings are a kind of organization of the unorganized—a creedless church for churchless people—and the man who is the originator as well as the inspiration of the movement, or, as it is called, the People's Institute, is Charles Sprague Smith, the writer of some charming literary and art essays as well as a leader in "social work."

"You ask what the People's Institute means?" said Mr. Smith to a NEW YORK TIMES reporter. "Let me tell you. A few nights ago I was present at one of the leading theatres of the city. The most charming actress we have was giving a representation of a play that delights children. The first and second balconies were filled with boys and girls from the public schools, and during several nights every week they will be filled with a similar audience until the close of the season. How does this happen? How do these boys and girls happen to be there? That is part of the work of the People's Institute. The institute makes arrangements with the managers of leading theatres, whereby, at a reduced price, admission to selected plays, usually of an educational character, is placed within the reach of its audiences, but especially of the public schools. In this way some 25,000 such theatrical opportunities will have been provided to those of limited means before the close of the present season.

"Some ten days ago, if you had visited the Palm Garden you would have seen it crowded with dancers, men and women, chiefly from the east side. The earlier part of the evening was taken up with brief dramatic performances. The garden scene from the opera "Faust" was very creditably rendered. This was the annual entertainment of our social club, which occupies a charming home facing Stuyvesant Square, at 318 East Fifteenth Street. It is composed of men and women, has a membership of 350, and is doing a very extensive educational work besides enjoying social pleasures. The club is self-supporting and self-governing. The principle of its life is brotherhood. Marriages between its members are frequent. The clubhouse during the day is the resort of a large number of junior clubs, boys and girls, and at night some of its rooms are also occupied by working girls' clubs independent of the main club.

"Then you should come down some Sunday evening to the Cooper Union to find what results have been accomplished in attempting to solve the problem of a church for all the people, not merely those who hold fast to the old creeds, but also those who have given up the faith of their fathers. The Sunday evening ethical services of the People's Institute are one of its most successful features, and one that is constantly before the public. The audiences during the Winter not merely fill every seat, but are so crowded that there are always from 50 to 200 standing. The ablest clergymen in the city and some from without are our speakers.

"You ask whether in these meetings we have established a church entirely without a creed? My reply would be, nominally, yes, but, actually, our creed consists of two articles, which have often been affirmed from the platform: The brotherhood of man and the existence of a force that makes for righteousness, with which it is the privilege and duty of the individual to ally himself. On that foundation we can all stand, Hebrew, Christians of all creeds, and even the agnostic. Some orthodox clergymen have objected to the loose credal form, as they consider it, of the People's Institute, but it must be remembered that our purpose is to minister to the spiritual needs, especially of those who have abandoned the churches, and that we must have a formula of faith, if it may be so styled, to which every one of our audience can subscribe.

"The audiences at these meetings are composed 95 per cent. of men, chiefly of the working classes. They follow the addresses with the greatest intentness and remain almost in a body until the close, at 10 o'clock or after. The influence of this work has been a dual one: On the clergy, enabling them to understand the point of view of the people, placing them in close touch therewith, broadening their own horizon, and on the people, enabling them to understand that the leaders in the pulpit are sympathetic toward the people's cause, and that there is a growing conviction among good and intelligent men, in and out of the pulpit, that there is a common basis upon which all religions can meet, and the planks of that common platform are those which are in last analysis the only essential ones for a religious life.

"The addresses are intended to be exclusively ethical, and a large number of them are definitely religious. For example, a course of addresses by Dr. Lyman Abbott on "Christ's Laws of Life," and another by Mr. Slicer on a related theme. Thomas R. Hall, George Knox, Rabbi Schulman are also familiar figures on our platform.

"Every position taken by the speaker is searchingly analyzed with application to and illustration from the life of the day. This close scrutinizing of the theory advanced by the speaker is most valuable, and might with advantage be introduced, in some measure, in our uptown churches, for it compels the strictest adherence to known facts and carefully weighed conclusions. For if that rule is not observed, the speaker is sure to find himself confuted by some one of his hearers.

"The most important field of our work, if I may emphasize one department rather than another, is that which we style the Forum. In the latter we include all the work done in social science, whether by lectures and classes or by action in connection with pending legislation, or other matters affecting the public welfare. The institute was conceived and organized to meet the increasing social unrest. The thought was that if this social unrest were allowed to develope uninstructed and apart from relation with the cultured world, serious danger to society might ensue. Those who had to do with its foundation had had experience on both sides of the fence, in the world of culture and in the world of labor. Their purpose was to bring the best thought and experience of the two sections together and, through comparison of views and induced co-operation, assist in the peaceful democratic evolution of our society. The results have been, first, the winning of the entire confidence of the people. It is without question that the People's Institute is to-day the tribunate of the masses of the people of New York City. All save the revolutionary wing of the Socialists and the revolutionary Anarchists give it full support. Last year our audiences footed up 150,000.

"We watch carefully what is going on in democratic evolution all over the world, and receive the reports of the best-informed specialists. We study every question that arises affecting National or local welfare, besides history in the broader or narrower domain. The class work deals in a closer way with the philosophy and facts of economics and other developments of social science. Then we are establishing civic clubs in different parts of the city.

"On the active side of the Forum we watch all legislation. According as it advances, in our judgment, or retards the people's interests, we favor or oppose it. If legislation is pending that may be designated as "grab" legislation, we frequently call a mass meeting, unite all good citizens whom we can win, and attempt its defeat. The People's Institute, by such a mass meeting on Feb. 8, 1899, saved the Subway to the city, and caused the Metropolitan Railroad Company to abandon its purpose of securing the franchise in perpetuity. No grab legislation in recent years affecting the city, of important character, has been enacted into law at Albany, and this result has been due, in a large measure, to the massing of the people by the institute against such legislation, acting usually in union with other civic organizations, sometimes alone. A notable instance of this occurred some three years ago, when five railroad bills, which had been ineffectually fought at Albany, were denounced at a mass meeting of The People's Institute, and on the following day killed in committee at Albany.

"The People's Institute, let me put it in a word, is the mouthpiece of the unorganized masses of the people of New York City, and as such is recognized to-day in Albany, as well as in New York City.

"Is there any other institution in the world like this? None, so far as I know. Outgrowths of the Forum side of the People's Institute have sprung up in many of the neighboring towns, and as far away even as Portland, Oregon. Recently the first steps have been taken to federate the various Forum movements in and about New York, so that they may act in union.

"The last outgrowth of the People's Institute, just organized, is the People's Institute League. It will be the association of all those who accept the statement of principles of the People's Institute and unite to extend its influence throughout the city. It has planned to accomplish this through dividing the membership into groups, each group to develop as rapidly as it may into a local civic organization related to the central body. The preamble of the constitution is as follows:

"The People's Institute, recognizing fraternity as the fundamental social truth, democracy as its highest known form of human government, and National worth as dependent upon individual worth, seeks to promote, through education and the co-operation of good men of all conditions and occupations, the peaceful evolution of a society based upon the recognition of the interdependence of man with man.

"For this purpose it provides lectures and classes, especially in social science, a forum, Sunday ethical services, clubs, and places within the reach of those of limited means worthy dramatic and musical opportunities.

"The People's Forum includes those activities of the People's Institute that fall within the social-political field. Non-partisan, it seeks, through education, discussion, and action upon pending measures, supporting or opposing them as they advance or retard democratic progress, to promote good government administered in the interests of all.

"In a word, the People's Institute is to-day a people's church for men of all creeds and no creed; a school of social science for adults, with occasional lectures on literature and other themes; a forum for discussion and action upon all matters affecting the public welfare, one that has become the tribunate of the masses of the people; an agency through which the best dramatic opportunities are offered to those of limited means and to the pupils in the public schools at a modest price. Similarly, through co-operation with another body, it is a provider of the best music at nominal rates; a club system with one large social club and many smaller clubs, chiefly junior clubs.

The two principles which bind all its activities together are, first, that the law of social life is and should be recognized as brotherhood; second, that democracy being the accepted form of government here, we shall attain true democracy in peaceful evolution only through the co-working of good men of all sections and professions. Every phase of the institute's life is simply the working out of these principles. Thus our Sunday evening services represent brotherhood and unity in religion; all our work in music and the drama represents the fraternal spirit which seeks to share the best with the poorest; our club life is based entirely on brotherhood; our forum work looks forward to a Government cleanly administered by the people and for the people, and asserts that the attainment of such a goal is in the interest of every one and the supreme object of American social evolution.

"What are our dreams for the future? Three. The expansion of the work until it touches every part of the city and binds the thought and inspiration of all in a common effort for sane democratic progress, there with duplication of the work in other centres. Second, a home for all departments of our work, a people's hall or people's palace (I like not the name palace) worthy of New York City. Frequented by millions, the influence of such a hall would be incalculable. Its founding is the supreme civic opportunity for men of wealth and philanthropic spirit. Third, the development of our little weekly bulletin until it becomes an organ of progressive democratic thought, inspired by the principles that have guided us hitherto. Time will bring all these things to pass as it has made a reality the original conception of the People's Institute."

A POSSIBLE RESULT OF THE ERUPTION OF VESUVIUS

Had the fierce ashes of some fiery peak
Been hurled so high they ranged around the world,
For day by day through many a blood-red eve
The wrathful sunset glared."

THE recent eruption of Vesuvius may be the forerunner of some of the marvelous celestial displays which greeted the eyes of mortals after the volcanic eruption on the little island of Krakatoa, in 1883. Until this event took place few were aware of the existence of this isle in far Eastern seas, save the mariner who navigated the Straits of Sunda, and found its name marked on his chart, as a peril to navigation in those waters.

The island probably owed its existence to some frightful eruption of bygone days, but had been quiescent so long that the volcano was considered extinct. Suddenly, however, Krakatoa attracted worldwide attention, and awoke from the slumber that had endured for centuries. During the Spring of the year 1883 deep rumblings and groanings proceeded from the earth, warning the inhabitants of Batavia that a display of some kind was about to take place. This was deemed such an attraction by these good people that they chartered a steamer for the occasion and went for a pleasant picnic to the island. They even ventured to climb the sides of the volcano, and peer into its cavernous depths. There they beheld a vast column of steam pouring forth with terrific noise from an opening about thirty yards wide.

During the Summer months the thunders of the volcano could be heard at a distance of twenty miles, and gave warning of an approaching catastrophe. A quantity of fine dust was thrown upward into the clouds, and a pall of darkness fell over the surrounding seas and islands. In fact, such was the thickness of these volumes of dust that the darkness of midnight prevailed at noon. Then the awful tragedy took place, and thousands of the inhabitants of Sumatra and Java were doomed to destruction. Tremendous waves swept inland, leaving ruin and devastation in their path.

But the supreme catastrophe did not occur until the night of Sunday, Aug. 26, 1883. The blackness of the dust-clouds was illumined by vivid flashes from the volcano; the houses in the town of Batavia, 100 miles distant, trembled with the subterranean violence, and the internal thunders gave warning that the climax was at hand. It came on the morning of Aug. 27, 1883, when suddenly a frightful convulsion tore away a large part of the Island of Krakatoa and scattered it to the winds of heaven.

So violent was the sound of the explosion that it was heard by a coast guard on the Island of Rodrigues, which is almost 3,000 miles from Krakatoa. He carefully noted the character of the sounds and the time they reached him. This was just four hours after the actual explosion, which would be the actual time required for sound to travel this distance.

If Vesuvius had been vigorous enough at the late eruption to emit a roar like Krakatoa, how great would have been the consternation of the world. Sir Robert S. Bell tells us, it would have reached the ears of exiles in Siberia. Nansen would still have been within its reach when furthest north near the pole. Even passengers on half the liners crossing the Atlantic would catch the mighty reverberations.

One of the most interesting facts about the great eruption of Krakatoa was that it revealed a very rapid current in the upper atmosphere, traveling round the equator at the rate of 74 miles an hour—a rate unsuspected before, and demonstrated by the carrying of the dust of the great explosion round the world. This caused remarkable sunset glows in the Autumn of 1883, and the newspapers were full of accounts of strange appearances in the heavens. Residents in Ceylon, the West Indies, and other tropical places told about the amazement of the people at seeing the sun looking blue, or the moon draped in vivid green. Others told of curious halos, and of signs in the sun, moon, and stars, which were extremely novel.

Few thought of attributing these unusual displays to the outbreak in Krakatoa, so many miles distant, but it was undoubtedly Krakatoa that painted the sun and moon in such ghastly hues, and produced the other strange and weird phenomena seen in the tropics. Yet it seemed scarcely possible that the glory of the autumnal sunsets which were observed even in London could possibly be due to a volcano in the Straits of Sunda. But the gorgeous phenomena in England were found to resemble similar wonders in other places all round the earth.

Twenty miles over our heads, a mighty tempest is incessantly hurrying with a speed so great that in ten minutes it could cause as much destruction as the most violent earthquake. This wind circles around the earth in the neighborhood of the equator, completing its circuit in about thirteen days. When this great wind became charged with the dust of Krakatoa, its presence first became known to us. The dust discharged from the volcano was whirled round the earth in this mighty hurricane, revealing its presence in the most glorious manner by decking the sun and moon in hues of wondrous splendor. The progress of the great dust-cloud could be traced by the strange sky effects it produced, and so long as that dust remained suspended in the atmosphere, so long were strange signs visible in the heavens.

But the dust which had been ejected to a height of twenty miles and had whirled round and round our earth for perhaps a dozen times or more in this air current, "asserting its perpetual right to dance," was finally obliged to succumb to the law of gravitation, which bids it fall to the earth, but it was slow in obeying the mandate. Owing to the great height to which it had been driven, and the impetuous nature of the current which hurried it along, and the tiny particles of which it was composed, it was not until two years after the original explosion that all the particles with which the air was charged by the volcanic explosion reached the earth.

If, perchance, the late eruption at Vesuvius was of sufficient power to charge this upper current of air with volcanic dust, why may we not again be treated to such a display. At any rate, it may be possible, although scarcely on a scale as magnificent as that which resulted from the eruption at Krakatoa.

MARY PROCTOR.

Volcanic Circuits

THE accepted theory of volcanic action, until a comparatively recent period, was an escape of the central molten mass of the earth. A volcano, according to this hypothesis, became active as a safety valve. The pressure inside of the furnace blew out some tube, which perhaps for centuries had been plugged with chilled basalt; or, although open to the air, and therefore termed active, found sufficient vent within its crater. It, however, became apparent that the extreme thinness of the crust of the earth, on this theory, did not take into account the immense force represented by the tides and the unequal pressure. If the crust of the earth were only a few miles thick, it was an eggshell in comparison with over 7,500 miles of molten rock. Briefly, the crucible was too thin to stand the strain. Then it was observed that as volcanoes were usually near the ocean, chemical action might be the source of the heat and the inrush of water cause the explosion. But evidently this accounted for very few of the phenomena actually notated.

Within the last decade there have been sporadic protests against almost all the so-called laws of Nature. It might be esoteric and feminine laughter at Newton in Paris; a paper in Russian at Kharkow; a very solemn and equally obscure utterance of Prof. Lodge in London; a telegram from Portland, Oregon, or a cable from the University of Gröningen, by way of Cape Town, in South Africa. They all pointed in the same direction. Newton lying under an apple tree saw an apple fall to the ground. He asked himself how far that attraction might extend, and suggested that it went to the moon, the sun, the remotest planets, and as near to infinite space as the most distant point of a cometary orbit. He did not consider the question why the tree which grew the apple raised water against gravity, any more than he asked himself why a comet which had turned toward the sun, about a billion miles away, never pointed directly to it, and, with undiminished velocity, started to back out when it was nearest its goal, following a course which it had prescribed for itself when it first started toward this solar system.

Then the theory that the sun and earth were only rotating magnetic masses, which was first published by the writer, began to find acceptance. It was pointed out by me that, in 1882, Nature actually held a rushlight to the sun, in the shape of a very faint comet, and for a minute or two cut off with the moon, as a screen, the dazzling brilliancy of the orb of day, so as to show the astronomers that there is no sphere of light emanating in every direction. It is only a searchlight, and there, by the side of the sun, perhaps only a million miles away, one could see in the darkness a light that was fainter than the millionth part of a farthing candle at the distance of a mile. This naturally led to the conclusion that volcanoes were points at which magnetic disturbances were caused by some sort of sparking or short circuit, and that the proximity to the sea was due to the temptation offered to the electric current to follow the water as the line of least resistance.

* * *

The writer pointed to volcanic reciprocity. Soufrière and Pelée had short-circuited, and it was the ground lightning which, having created gases in its course, flashed them into flames; the deluges of rain came from water formed above the firmament; the dust was a dry hailstorm produced by consolidating minute particles in the air above the place where it fell. But when Vesuvius went off on its own account, and there was no great convulsion beyond a circuit of a few miles in diameter, and Enceladus slept in Aetna undisturbed, it seemed as if this theory had received a fatal blow. However, the circuit now seems to have been established at points which can no longer be deemed remote to those who are engaged in wireless telegraphy. It might, of course, have been Erebus and Terror in the Antarctic which were the answering peaks! But the eruption of Mount Rainier and the seismic disturbances which, having apparently begun in Formosa and then reappeared in San Francisco, whether coincident in time by accident only, or due to a common extraneous cause or as reciprocal agents, at least save the situation. In physics it has been well said there are no arguments which establish a hypothesis. They are only collated phenomena. A theory is suggested. If you see it, well and good. It should be gravely considered until some one turns up with something more plausible.

COPE WHITEHOUSE.

SOLOMON IN ALL HIS GLORY

FOR over fifteen minutes old Peleg Ryerson had sat on his favorite cracker barrel in Minthorn's store, and it was not until the school teacher discovered that he was holding his copy of The Valley Dispatch upside down that the old man was aroused from his meditations.

"A penny for your thoughts, Peleg," exclaimed the school teacher gayly. Peleg's thoughts were generally worth more, but the school teacher was proverbially close.

"It was Solomon, wa'nt it, that had a thousand wives?" asked Peleg.

"Yes," replied the school teacher. "Why do you ask?"

"Oh, nothin' much, on'y I—" Peleg lapsed into his former silence, but the school teacher was not to be gainsaid.

"Solomon," he announced, "was the forerunner of Brigham Young and of the Rooseveltian antipathy to race suicide. His offspring were as the sands of the sea, and his raiment—"

"There hain't no doubt about Solomon really havin' a thousand wives, be they?" demanded Peleg. He did not seem to be particularly interested in offspring and raiment.

"It is a matter of profane as well as sacred history," replied the school teacher.

"I don't reckon he married 'em all at onct," ventured Peleg.

"No; he acquired them at different times."

"Never bunched 'em?"

"History fails to indicate that such was the case."

"Um. Now, this feller Solomon had a fust-class memory, I s'pose."

"He was the wisest man of his time, and a good memory is essential to wisdom."

"I s'pose so. I s'pose so. He must ha' been a wonderful man."

"He was. But why are you so much interested in Solomon, Peleg?"

"Oh, nothin' much, on'y I—" Peleg spat copiously at a knothole in the floor, worked his jaws meditatively for a few moments, and continued: "Well, you see, I've been married thirty-eight years—thirty-eight years las' Tuesday. O' course, Tuesday was the anniversary of our weddin', an' I clean fergot all about it till supper time, an' even then I wouldn't a remembered if my wife hadn't got mad an' druv me outen the house with her all-fired tongue. Said I didn't have no sentiment, an' all sich kind o' talk. Ever since then she keeps a'throwin' it up to me, but I can't help feelin' glad I hain't in Solomon's boots, bein' as I hain't got no memory like his'n must ha' been. Jest think o' havin' a thousand weddin' anniversaries, an' keepin' track of 'em all! My! my! What a wonderful man that was!"

"Animals with a History": Bridge, the Eskimo

Greatest Traveler of the Zoo Is the Dog Which Helped Commander Peary Make His Dash Toward the Pole.

BRIDGE SUBMITTING TO AN OPERATION

NEARLY all the animals in the New York Zoological Park are travelers more or less, but the greatest traveler of all is Bridge, the noted Eskimo dog who accompanied Commander Robert Peary to the furthest north point on land, at the northeastern extremity of Greenland.

It would perhaps be more correct to say "helped to take him there," for Bridge was the chief dog of the team which helped drag his master over the ice to that point. The party consisted of Commander Peary, Hansen, one Eskimo, a colored man, and four dogs. Bridge was chosen to be leader on account of his size, strength, and endurance. He was also an extremely intelligent dog and fairly good-tempered, a rare trait in an Eskimo dog.

In appearance Bridge is a fine specimen, both in coloring, size, and proportions. Like all his kind, he is curiously wolflike, even in his inability to bark, and with his thick, shaggy, rough coat, his up-standing ears, keen eyes, sharp muzzle, and bushy tail, it would be almost impossible in a dim light to mistake him for anything else.

Before becoming the property of Commander Peary, Bridge had had a hard time of it, like all other Eskimo dogs, and had been made to travel sometimes thirty or forty miles a day with heavy loads. Added to this hardship, Bridge and his companions were given very little food. It is not much wonder that the dog teams fight viciously among themselves, often injuring one another so severely that they are either killed by their masters at once or left to die.

Once with his new master, however, Bridge was treated kindly and well, although naturally he had to share the many hardships which his master suffered. Among these hardships Bridge had several adventures which would have killed a less hardy animal than he is.

When Commander Peary made his dash over the ice from Cape Hope toward the north pole, Bridge went with him. Over the rough and enormous ice pack they went, risking their lives, suffering from cold, terrible fatigue, and scarcity of food. But Bridge appeared as eager as his master not to give up, and pushed on until nearly a hundred miles had been covered under the most terrible difficulties. And then came worse difficulties than before. For the ice increased in roughness, until finally the party reached a point where the huge floes of ice were piled up like small mountains, and even the daring explorer was forced to admit that it was impossible to go on any further.

Even Bridge had to give in, for no dog, however willing, could drag himself, much less heavy loads, up those small mountains of ice, and so most unwillingly the party had to turn back. Needless to say, the return journey was far worse than the outgoing one, and poor Bridge was half dead when they reached safety.

This, however, was not so painful an adventure as when, quite suddenly, one day the party came across that rare animal, a musk ox. He made a curious dark object against the surroundings of pure white, with his shaggy brown body, short, stumpy legs, round, bright eyes, curved horns, and flat, hairy muzzle. For some time he stood still and surveyed the intruders quietly, and then, for some unknown reason, went straight for Bridge. In all probability the dog had never seen a musk ox before. The sudden onslaught apparently took him by surprise, for although usually nimble and quick, this time he stood long enough for the musk ox to reach him.

Before any one had time to realize what was going to happen, the ox, with lowered horns, had gored Bridge badly, and, to do him justice, Bridge made as much noise and fuss about it as he could. His howls were enough to terrify any creature, much more a musk ox, which seldom met any one, and when the rest of the dogs joined in partly from terror and partly from sympathy, the noise was deafening. I think I am right in saying that it was the flesh of this very musk ox which Commander Peary ate and pronounced to be very good eating. Bridge, meanwhile, had to have his wounds dressed, and for a time was a very sick dog. But he was tough and hardy, and soon recovered sufficiently to go on with the others, although it was some little time before he was quite himself again.

Another time an enormous polar bear met the party, and here again Bridge got the worst of it, for, being foolish enough to go too near the bear, he was caught and clawed severely. Again he was a very sick dog. He was nervous and irritable for a long time, and all those in proximity had to be careful that his sharp, wolflike teeth did not leave the impression which he seemed particularly anxious to make. It was always a critical time when his wounds had to be dressed, and the greatest care had to be taken not only in holding him, but to prevent his tearing his wounds open again.

Bridge recovered finally, and seemed as strong as ever. He was a good hunter and fisher, and when provisions ran short he would sometimes find food for himself. When he did this he also generally managed to keep it for himself, unless three dogs against one proved too much for him.

It would take quite a small book to tell of all his hardships and adventures, but when at last the expedition was over, Bridge was the only dog out of the team which reached America alive. For after that long, hard journey to the furthest point north (where all the dogs were photographed,) the three other dogs began to show queer symptoms. After watching them carefully it was found that all three were suffering from rabies. One by one Commander Peary saw his faithful followers die.

All but Bridge, although he was thin, worn, and weak, remained comparatively as healthy as ever. He alone returned with his master, and as it was considered that he had done enough hard work, and been through sufficient hardships to last a dog's lifetime, he was given to the New York Zoological Park, where he now lives in ease and comfort, and seems to enjoy it to the full.

But even here he has had one or two little hardships, for at one time he had a very bad leg—probably the result of either the goring of the musk ox or the clawing of the polar bear—and had to submit to some surgery. It was a funny sight to see him having his leg bandaged. Far from making any objection he seemed to enjoy it, and the accompanying photograph shows him in this very act. Occasionally he would give a little squeak when the old bandage was taken off, but after that he would hold up his paw, and submit in the most placid manner to whatever his operators liked to do to him.

The only other trouble or sickness which he has suffered from since his residence in the Park was caused by the heat, but this only lasted one day, as he was at once removed from the regular yard and put in a cooler place.

In order to make him feel at home and promote his happiness, a wife was provided for him, who was given the name of White Face, and who seems to be congenial in every way. Many Eskimo puppies have been born in the Park, and are fine, healthy little animals, hardy and pugnacious, daring and defiant. It is an interesting sight to watch them fighting among themselves, just to show what they can do.

Bridge is to be seen any day in the wolf pens, either pacing quietly and softly up and down, sitting down quietly with his wife, or—if near his meal time—lifting up his voice in a song of anticipatory thanksgiving.

SCIENTISTS ARE ON THE TRACK OF THE FIRST AMERICAN

AT the Museum of Natural History hope is entertained that a problem that has mystified scientists ever since America was discovered is about to be solved. Who is the American Indian? Where did he come from? If he came from anywhere, how did he get here? There have been all kinds of theories advanced to meet these queries. Some say that the ten lost tribes of Israel, following an unknown route from Asia, wandered over to this continent and peopled it. Others say that the Chinese came across the Pacific, stopping at different islands on the way—and for this theory some singular confirmations have recently been found in certain old records unearthed at the taking of Peking, that are said to be corroborated by discoveries made in the excavations that are still in progress in the City of Mexico. The Welshmen and the Norsemen also are supposed by a few writers to have crossed the Atlantic and pitched their tents here. Finally, there are those who believe that there was an exchange of population between the Asiatic and American continents at their nearest point of contact in Alaska and Siberia. That was ages ago, and from this prehistoric immigration, it is asserted, both the Americas were peopled.

It was to prove or disprove this theory that nine years ago the Jesup North Pacific expedition was organized, the results of whose investigations are now being slowly elaborated and published from year to year in a series of volumes whose completion will be a monumental achievement in the annals of ethnology, and will, besides, settle the genealogy of the aboriginal American—so far as things of this kind can be settled by science. Although this final result has not yet been reached, the work of the expedition has been sufficiently advanced to furnish some interesting indications of what it will be. The funds required for this extensive investigation and publication were provided by the generosity of Morris K. Jesup, President of the American Museum of Natural History.

Prof. Franz Boas of Columbia University and the Museum of Natural History, one of the best-known anthropologists in the world, was the originator of the expedition. It was under his direction that the researches were made, and it is by him that the various discoveries made in the field are now being examined, interpreted, and prepared for publication.

"It is too early in our work," said Prof. Boas to a TIMES reporter, "to give a final answer to all of the questions that the Jesup expedition was sent out to solve. The actual field work necessary to the success of the undertaking was completed about four years ago. Now we are engaged in the publication of the material that was amassed by the different exploring parties comprising the expedition. According to our plan the completed work will fill twelve large quarto volumes. So far five of the latter have been published in Leyden, where it is proposed to bring out the entire work.

"Why do we choose Holland for our publishing centre instead of this country? Simply because there is a fixed, assured sale for scientific works of this special character abroad, while in this country there is not. In Europe certain publishing houses have a recognized clientele of readers who buy all the books of a given class that the former bring out. Hence to realize a sale for costly scientific works the European publisher has the readier market, and we are compelled to go to him.

"This work descriptive of the Jesup expedition is, of course, a costly one. Twelve specialists were in the field. The essential question before us is to determine the ethnological relation existing between Asia and America. The question of the influence of the Old World on the New World in remote ages, or vice versa, has been discussed by scientists for a long time, but no definite evidence of the existence of this influence had ever been systematically gathered until the Jesup expedition entered the field. In order to solve the problem it was necessary to devote our attention to the northern portion of both continents, and in what we are publishing the descriptive material deals equally with both and was collected by a corps of specialists of whom three were Russians, recommended by the Imperial Academy of Sciences; one German, and the remaining eight Americans. To each of these men a certain territory was allotted, which they explored, living with the native tribes, studying their languages and their general culture. In some of the more remote regions the visiting specialist was compelled to live for two or three years. Remembering that until we took up this line of study scarcely any systematic ethnological explorations of a scientific nature had been made of the Alaskan and Siberian coast countries, you will realize the extent of the undertaking.

"Prior to the formation of the Jesup expedition I had been engaged in work of this character in the same general region for the British Association for the Advancement of Science and again for the Smithsonian Institution, and it was while thus employed that I noticed the striking similarities existing between the northern races of Asia and America—and it was this fact that provoked the more extended and complete survey that we have now made.

"What results have been reached by the expedition? All the facts that have been collected are not yet systematized, hence it would be premature as yet to give a definitive answer to the main question of the origin and relationship of the Asiatic and American races bordering on Bering Sea. In this whole region we have found that there are eleven unrelated groups of languages, four in Asia, seven in America, among which no similarities are discoverable. In the whole of North America there are more than fifty unrelated groups of languages, and it is surprising to find that the differences among them are as great as the differences existing between English and Chinese.

"In the line of investigations that we are making the question of languages is a vital one, and so far we have discovered this important fact, that the Siberian languages that we have studied resemble more nearly the American than the Asiatic type—a conclusion carrying with it a deep significance as to the origin of the races. Indeed, it is now safe to say that, ethnologically, Siberia is a part of America more truly than it is a part of Asia. We can also say, as a probable result of the researches made by the Jesup expedition, that the American and Asiatic coast tribes were originally related in language and culture and that the diversities that now characterize them were brought about by the intrusion of the Eskimos, coming at a much later period from the northeast. When did this take place? In these gradual racial changes it is impossible to give even an approximate chronology. Ages take the place of years when we are dealing with the transformation of a people.

"As for the broader question, Was it from the American or the Asiatic shore that the first emigration took place? the data collected by the Jesup expedition has not yet been sufficiently investigated to render a complete and authoritative answer. With the publication of the last volume dealing with our work it is to be hoped that more light will be shed on this interesting phase of the subject.

"It seems to me not improbable that there are two great divisions of the human race, equivalent to each other in age and of a common origin, from which the rest of the earth has been populated. One of these divisions I would place in the continents contiguous to the North Pacific Ocean, from which have arisen the various tribes on the American continent and Northern Asia. The other division I would place on the shores of the Indian Ocean, whence it extended to Africa and Australia. As a pure hypothesis it may be assumed that ages ago the northern branch of the human race became extinct in the Old World and was then replenished from an American stock that had survived disaster. But, remember, this is a mere idea at present—a hypothesis in need of more data than we have at hand to corroborate it before it can be advanced with any degree of scientific certainty."

PROF. CURIE, DISCOVERER OF RADIUM: QUESTIONS SUGGESTED BY HIS DEATH

TO one familiar with the police regulations of Paris the sad news of the death of Prof. Curie, "run down and killed in the street by a wagon," must appear as a more or less natural consequence of the system which arrests the pedestrian for being run over instead of the driver for injuring any one on foot. The sympathy of the civilized world goes out to Mme. Curie, who has lost not only a husband, but a fellow-investigator.

One may naturally ask, What has the dicovery of radium really done for science and the advancement of the race? After the smoke and fog of popular enthusiasm have passed away, what will be the net gain to civilization?

Radium is unique only in possessing certain properties in a greater degree than any other substance. It is differentiated quantitatively rather than qualitatively from such elements as uranium, thorium, tellurium, &c. Nevertheless, quantitative differences are often most important. Often peculiarities appear in an experiment upon a large scale which would be lost to observation if the effects are small. Becquerel had discovered the phenomenon of radioactivity, and many were occupied with its investigation. It fell to the lot of the Curies to discover the "arch fiend," radium.

The phenomena of spectrum analysis, as well as certain other observations, had led inevitably to the conclusion that the atom is an extremely complex system, rather than the simple pellet of the chemist. For twenty-five years the physicist had sought to penetrate the fastnesses of the atom, but it was not until the discovery of radium that his efforts were successful.

Before the discovery of Becquerel we were familiar with the X rays of Roentgen, the kathode rays of Crookes, and the cana rays of Goldstein. It was at first impossible to identify the radiations discovered by Becquerel with any of these known "rays." The radiations from the materials used by him were so feeble that their properties must have remained unknown had not the Curies discovered radium.

It was soon discovered that the radiations emitted by radium were not homogeneous. They were early classified as alpha, beta, and gamma rays, the prime difference being that the alpha rays were deflected in one direction by a magnetic field, the beta rays in the opposite direction, and the gamma rays were unaffected.

Thus step by step it was proved that the alpha rays were particles of matter of about the size of a hydrogen atom, traveling with a velocity of about 10,000 miles per second, and consequently to be identified with the "canal rays" of Goldstein. The gamma rays have been practically identified with X rays; and, finally, the beta rays are nothing more nor less than the kathode rays of Crookes, Hittorf, Lenard, and Roentgen. They are particles of matter about one-thousandth the size of the atom of hydrogen, they travel with velocities as high as 160,000 miles per second, or nine-tenths the velocity of light. In other words, they are the radiant matter, as kathode rays of Crookes; they are the "elektrons" of the modern theorists. Radium has made it possible to show that we can knock elektrons out of any atom and that elektrons are always the same, no matter whether they are derived from oxygen, hydrogen, chlorine, or any other element.

The inevitable conclusion from this observation is that all atoms contain identical elektrons, or, in other words, the prophecy of Prout, a century ago, is realized—we find all the elements to be only different aggregations of the one and only primordial matter, the elektron. Rutherford has shown, by a beautiful line of circumstantial evidence, almost as elaborate as it is convincing, that the atom of radium is undergoing a continual disintegration. The various steps are evidenced by characteristic degrees of radio-activity, until finally the inert gas helium remains as one of the end products.

The philosopher's stone has been realised. One element has been transformed into another. When it was discovered that a mass of radium kept itself at a temperature several degrees above its surroundings the excitable scientist immediately announced that the laws of thermodynamics, as well as dear old gravitation, had been knocked into a cocket hat. More sober reflection brought out the fact that we were simply face to face with a new factor in our calculations, namely, the disintegration energy of the atom.

One of the beauties of the science of the present day is the ease and quickness with which it adjusts itself to new facts of observation.

All of the more recent theories of the nature and structure of matter start with the elekron. It is the most-talked-of member of the scientific family at the present time. Every one has a fair idea of the size of a hair, its cross-section, the area of its end. Try to think how many hairs, end on, it would take to cover the surface of the earth, multiply this number by a hundred or more, and you will get a conception of the number of elektrons in a gram (15 grains) of matter.

Radium has not only contributed to our knowledge as to the size of the elektron. It has even helped to determine its shape. It decides whether it may be flattened by high velocities. The therapeutic value of radium is yet an uncertain quantity. Although Abbé has effected remarkable cures of cancer, others feel it to be too soon to prophesy. No doubt exists, however, of the fact that a new tool has been placed in the hands of the physician the exact value of which may still be in some doubt.

It is quite safe to say that radium has helped more toward the reading of the riddles of nature than any other element. There is scarcely a branch of physics which has not been literally illuminated by raduim. It may solve the problem of the source of energy of the orb of day, which warms and sustains us, no less than of the microscopic flash which is seen when an alpha particle strikes a fluorescent screen.

If the cost of rebuilding San Francisco had [illegible] the cost of the radium so far produced it would have been a good bargain for the advancement of science and civilization.

IN the little county jail at Chihuahua, Mexico, three Americans await death by shooting, under the sentence of the native courts. They have exhausted every device of law to escape the penalty of their crime, and have sought unsuccessfully to create an international incident by pleading that they are victims of persecution. Now the last hope has gone from them, and Leslie E. Hurlbert, William Mitchell, and Dr. C. S. Harle may only count the days to that morning when they will be led out into the sun-swept courtyard of the prison, blindfolded, stood up against a wall, and shot.

The crime was murder, as may be gathered from the severity of the sentence. This in itself—or even the fact that the condemned men were Americans—would not, however, lend to the matter the importance that has attached to it ever since the three were arrested and tried, for there are many murders in the border country, and Americans as well as Mexicans and half-breeds are found in the scum of humanity that has drifted in there from nobody knows how many different directions. What makes the case of Hurlbert, Mitchell, and Harle notable among all the criminal annals of this country is the fact that they employed murder as a means of operating what was in a fair way to be the greatest scheme of swindling life insurance companies that the country has ever known.

The particular company victimized in the double crime for which the trio have been convicted was the New York Life, and its story leads through a skein of plot and counter plot that might easily furnish substance for any novel. From time to time isolated chapters of it have been told through the news dispatches as the proceedings against the murderers have been in one phase or another, but now that only the execution of the death penalty remains to complete the case the narrative may be given in its entirety.

It was in the Spring of 1902 that the New York Life was called upon to pay two death claims in Chihuahua, the first on the life of Harry M. Mitchell for $15,000 under a policy assigned to his sister, Helen Richardson, and the second on the life of James Devers for $10,000 under a policy of which one Willis Meredith was the beneficiary. Mitchell had died on Feb. 11 of that year and Devers on March 23, and the agent in both cases had been C. T. Richardson, who had formerly been in the employ of the company at Chihuahua, but was now living in Dallas, Texas.

Now, life insurance agents in Chihuahua, Mexico, even those who subsequently move to a town like Dallas, Texas, do not, as a rule, support private teams, nor drive out in style with negro coachmen and a footman or two. All these things were included in Richardson's establishment in Dallas, to the great wonderment of that place and greater amazement of a New York Life representative who went down from the El Paso office of the company, where the check for the Devers policy had been forwarded, to look into the matter. These things were reported to the home office, and under the direction of Second Vice President Kingsley, Harry H. Bottome, a lawyer of this city, and a detective, who may remain nameless, got busy on the case.

It was discovered that Devers had been in Chihuahua a few weeks before his death, and that nothing was known about him except that he was a hard drinker and of a type of social outcast common enough in that territory. This strengthened a theory that the very possession of a ten-thousand-dollar policy by such a man required some further explanation, let alone possible suspicious circumstances attending his death. So the investigators turned to the payment of the Devers policy at the El Paso office, after the company had unsuccessfully tried to have the check sent from here intercepted in transit.

It appeared that the check had been forwarded from the El Paso office to the Fort Worth office at the request of Meredith, and when it came back after collection through a Fort Worth bank it bore Meredith's indorsement for deposit. Inquiry at the bank in question developed that soon after the claim had been filed on Devers's death, Meredith had called at the bank in company with Richardson, and had obtained there a loan of $8,000 upon Richardson's assurance that the company had admitted the claim under the policy and was about to pay the money. This loan was paid in part in cash and in part by a draft on the Seaboard National Bank of this city, and it was this draft for $7,000, a fac simile of which is printed herewith, together with its indorsement to Richardson, that forms the first link in the chain of evidence that was to connect him with the crime.

So the search led back to Chihuahua, and when more light was sought on the manner of the deaths of Harry Mitchell and Devers it was found that in the first case death had occurred in the house in which Richardson and his wife lived and within half an hour after Mitchell had talked with a friend in the street, apparently in perfect health. This was hardly consistent with the theory of spinal meningitis advanced by Dr. Harle, the physician signing the death certificate, who happened to be also the physician who had examined each applicant for insurance upon his admission to the company. In the case of Devers it appeared that death was due to dysentery, as might easily have occurred with a man of Devers's dissolute manner of living. Of Richardson nothing could be learned, except that he had appeared in Chihuahua in the Summer of 1901, with his wife, Helen Richardson, as an American looking for business opportunities in Mexico, and had secured an appointment as agent for the New York Life Insurance Company in the territory.

It was at this stage of the case that there came to Dallas, where the Richardsons were living in style, a prepossessing citizen named W. J. Gray, a dealer in lumber lands, who opened an office of some size and took a house in the best part of the town. The Richardsons happened to be in Hot Springs, Ark., at the time, and so Gray, the lumber man, who wasn't in any hurry to get his Dallas affairs moving anyway, took a trip over to the Arkansas resort and registered at the same hotel with the former life insurance agent, his wife, and child.

The two got acquainted and became famous friends. Then one day Richardson proposed that he should insure Gray's life. Gray demurred, but he recalled that his wife had a brother who was ill with consumption, diabetes, and several other troubles, and it occurred to him that if there were any way in which a policy might be issued on the life of this unfortunate brother-in-law as security for some money he (Gray) had advanced he might contemplate with more equanimity his relative's approaching end. Richardson thought he could fix it, and the brother-in-law was sent for from St. Louis.

Now, the convenient brother-in-law was about as much a relative of Gray's as Gray was himself a lumber merchant, but he was indeed suffering from consumption and diabetes and was so ill when Richardson wrote his fifty-thousand-dollar policy in the New York Life, that he had to be propped up in bed in order to sign it. Richardson announced that he had bribed a couple of doctors to sign the physical examination papers, and the sick brother-in-law was shipped back to St. Louis, whence he went out to Arizona a year later to die.

Greatly did Gray admire the skillful manipulation of the brother-in-law case by his friend Richardson. So when the latter suggested that there was plenty of easy money to be made by similar undertakings down in the border country where people are not watched too carefully, Gray fell in with the game at once, and the two went back to Dallas, where Gray's lumber office become shortly their headquarters. Firmer and firmer friends they became. Richardson used to open Gray's mail for him and take out the big checks that came to the lumber man through his successful operations. Gray used to hear from Richardson how it wasn't really necessary to bribe a doctor in an insurance case, but simply to take a dummy before the medical man to pass the physical examination. And Richardson had just the dummy that filled the bill, a young fellow named Mason, once a miner in Chihuahua, who had himself pulled off a ten-thousand-dollar game in that town and had turned the proceeds over to Richardson, retaining only his commission for services.

So the months wore on, and it was in October of 1902. The Gray-Richardson-Mason combination was now in good running order, and it was planned that they should go to El Paso, where Mason would take out $100,000 insurance in the name of Marshall D. Sanguinetto, an individual whom Richardson said he knew to be dying of consumption in Mexico. They were to make Gray the beneficiary of the policy, wait until Sanguinetto died, and then collect the $100,000. But a hitch arose. Richardson remembered one day that his friend Sanguinetto was a man of middle age, whereas Mason was but a youngster of 23. Why not, then, have Gray take out the policy as Sanguinetto, making Mason the beneficiary, and then collect in the usual way.

Gray was not overanxious thus to make his death a possible source of profit to Richardson and Mason, but he consented to be Sanguinetto for the purposes of the policy, and to own Mason as David Sanguinetto, his son and heir. After various introductions the policy was made out and the deal closed—apparently. What introduced a new element into it that Richardson and his friend Mason had not counted on was the fact that Harry Bottome and a couple of detectives had been keeping in nightly touch with Gray and incidentally had been doing a little work on the side, listening to conversations between Richardson and Mason when Gray wasn't around. It was in one of these conversations that Richardson gleefully remarked that Gray had been the easiest thing imaginable in the Sanguinetto case, and added.

"We won't do a thing to him when we get him over the border."

Bottome and his men decided that matters had gone about far anough. They laid their information before the District Attorney of El Paso County and warrants were issued for all three, including Gray, for it was inexpedient just then to have an exposure of the part which the lumberman-detective had played in the case. Gray, however, was soon released, and the next step was a charge filed in the City of Chihuahua accusing Richardson and Mason of the murders of Mitchell and Devers. In the preliminary hearing Dr. Harle was called as a witness, and testified that Mitchell did die of strychnine poisoning instead of spinal meningitis, but that Richardson had told him that the case was one of suicide and wanted to have things hushed up. Devers, Harle still declared, died of dysentery. Harle said that he had been called in to attend him by a half-brother of Devers, William Meredith. Harle was not cross-examined, and he left the stand thinking that he had "got away with the goods."

At this point Bottome from El Paso telegraphed Harle that he was coming to Chihuahua and wanted to see him. Harle thereupon started for El Paso, and Bottome, when he was well on his way to the Mexican town, got a wire on his train that he would pass the train on which Harle was traveling in midroute. Bottome left his train at a convenient station and boarded the other. Then, as he did not know Harle, he sent a porter through the car with a Western Union telegraph envelope addressed to the doctor, and Harle tumbled into the trap. Bottome and a detective led Harle into the smoking compartment and started a quizz of the "third degree" order that wound up that night with a fifty-page confession implicating Harle in the death of Devers, and telling enough of the circumstances of Harry Mitchell's death to indicate how his "suicide" had been arranged.

Harle said that Devers had been brought to Chihuahua from El Paso by Richardson in December of 1901, and that Richardson had said that he had explained to Devers that Devers was to be used in swindling one Willis Meredith out of a lot of money. For this purpose Devers was to pose as the half-brother of Meredith, and also was to take out a life insurance policy in his half-brother's favor. But Devers never signed any papers in this connection; that was all arranged between Harle and Richardson, so that when Willis Meredith, who turned out to be Mason, arrived on the night of Harry Mitchell's funeral with a woman who posed as his wife, it was necessary only that the final preparation should be made to put Devers out of the way before collecting on both of the policies. These were easily arranged. The bogus Meredith and Devers went to live together. On Feb. 23 Harle was called to see Devers, who appeared to be suffering from acute dysentery. Harle gave him some medicine to ease his pain, but shortly after he died.

In his confession Harle said that he knew Devers was being poisoned, and supposed that bichloride of mercury was given to him in whisky. Harle filled out a fake burial certificate and the other papers necessary to collect on the policy, after which Richardson, and Mason, who had now become William Mitchell, took it to the El Paso agency and eventually raised the $8,000, of which we have heard, at the bank at Fort Worth. Harle, of course, was immediately arrested and eventually came to trial with the other men.

But in the meantime photographs of the trio had been distributed through the usual police channels throughout this country, and when they reached Rochester, in this State, the photograph of Richardson was recognized as that of Lester E. Hurlbert, a lawyer, who had jumped that city in May, 1901, after the exposure of an extensive divorce mill which he had operated in the cities of Rochester and Buffalo. William Mitchell, or Willis Meredith, or Mason, as he was variously known, turned out to be the brother of Harry Mitchell, who was killed in Chihuahua in order that the gang might collect on his fifteen-thousand-dollar policy. Mrs. Richardson was identified as the wife of Hurlbert, and investigation in Rochester developed the fact that she was the sister of the Mitchell boys. William Mitchell's trail, indeed, was followed even to Hot Springs, Ark., where the "wealthy lumberman" Gray had his brother-in-law insured, for "Mason" was the engaging young man who had himself examined by the Hot Springs doctor as John J. Evans.

Extradition proceedings were of course sought, and while they were bitterly fought and a United States Commissioner in El Paso was at one time disposed to refuse the extradition, the three men were eventually taken back to Chihuahua, there to stand trial. It was at this stage of the case that Mitchell performed one of the greatest "fit-throwing acts" on record. After he had been safely landed in Chihuahua he pretended to go into a state of catalepsy, and remained in an apparently unconscious condition for nearly two months. His teeth were so tightly set together that he had to be fed through a tube inserted in his nose. Finally an expert alienist, Dr. Graves, Superintendent of the insane asylum at San Antonio, was called across the border. He decided that Mitchell was faking, and thereupon tried the whisky treatment. At first diluted in milk, and later on straight from the bottle, whisky was fed to Mitchell through his nose, until he eventually got drunk like any other sane man, jumped out of bed, and proceeded to make things lively for everybody around. He hasn't had a cataleptic fit since he recovered from this spell of drunkenness.

The trial of the three men had been reported in part in the papers throughout the country, and it served only to develop the facts in the remarkable case which have been very simply narrated above. The verdict of guilty followed quickly the presentation of the facts to the jury, and it remained at length necessary only for the firing squad to carry out the sentence of the court.

NEW CONSUMPTION THEORY---WEAK HEART PREDISPOSES TO TUBERCULOSIS

THAT an undersized heart is the predisposing factor in consumption, and in itself constitutes the true "consumptive type," both in man and the lower animals, is the most recent theory advanced in the effort to fix upon more certain methods of diagnosis and prognosis, and to guide the physician in treating his patients along logical and rational lines. The advocates of this theory take little account of the lung itself, declaring, in fact, that the disease seizes most readily upon those who are equipped with undersized hearts and lungs of normal or unusually large capacity.

This reasoning, with the proofs already available, goes a long way toward solving the seemingly inexplicable fact that certain groups of the lower animals are extremely susceptible to the disease, while other groups, closely allied to the first, are practically immune.

The results of a long and patient series of investigations of victims of consumption, both in the human and lower animal kingdoms, are set forth by Dr. Woods Hutchinson of Redlands, California, in a comprehensive paper read before the California State Medical Society, and recently printed in the Medical Record. Exhaustive comparisons are made with previous theories, and the biological side of the question is fully dealt with.

Without detracting from the important lessons learned, because from the days of Hippocrates physicians in studying the consumpt[illegible] have centred their attention on the lung, Dr. Hutchinson points out that with the increase of knowledge concerning the disease, an uneasy feeling has arisen in the minds of the medical faculty as to the necessity for locating a potent predisposing factor, other than the bacillus and its localization in the lung tissue. This factor, he declares, is none other than the undersized, undeveloped heart. It is now recognized, as the result of post-mortem investigation, that whereas it used to be thought that some time in life the lungs of but 30 per cent. of the human race were invaded by the germs of tuberculosis, it is now known that the percentage is between 70 and 80. The majority of these persons never develop consumption; that, according to Dr. Hutchinson, is because they have hearts proportionate to the rest of the anatomy.

The consumptive type has been so variously and confusedly described in past ages, that with but slight exaggeration the entire human race might be included in the category. Sometimes it was described as the type "with clear skin, bright, expressive eyes, aquiline features, abundant, light, wavy hair, tall slender figure, tapering fingers, and blue veins"; again, it was a type "swarthy, thick-skinned, dark-haired, with heavy features, squat build, and stupid"; another time the type was that with "red or tawny hair, clear or freckled skin, and dark eyes, eyebrows and lashes."

Dr. Hutchinson has this to say about one predisponent other than the undersized heart:

"One general physical characteristic may perhaps be said to be a predisponent to the attack of tuberculosis, and that is unusual tallness of stature. This, of course, applies only to those who have reached somewhere near the maximum height at, say from sixteen to eighteen years of age and upward; for tallness in children is, in a safe majority of cases, a sign of vigor.

"Almost every observer who has paid attention to the point has expressed an unhesitating opinion that men over five feet eleven inches, and women over five feet seven inches in height, are distinctly more subject to the attack of the disease, and succumb to it more rapidly than the average of the race. * * * In all giants and very tall men whom I have examined, the heart is relatively undersized.

"My attention was first called to the size of the heart in tuberculosis," continues Dr. Hutchinson, "from the point of view of comparative pathology. I was engaged for nearly two years in making autopsies upon the bodies of the animals dying at the gardens of the London Zoological Society, where, of course, I found large amounts and almost infinite variety of tuberculosis and tuberculosis lesions. * * * While tuberculosis can be found in both animal and vegetable feeders in captivity, it never becomes a common or frequent cause of death except in herbivora or mixed feeders. It reaches the level of a pestilence in the herbivorous cattle, apes, and monkeys, fowls, pheasants, and turkeys. But there are curious variations among vegetable feeders. For instance, cattle and antelopes are exceedingly subject to the disease, while the equally purely herbivorous sheep, goats, and deer, as well as horses, zebras, and asses, are almost exempt. * * * Not one of the carnivora, either bird or mammal, was found to have a heart much less than one one-hundredth of its body weight; while among the herbivora, both bird and mammal, none of these whose heart weight was in excess of this standard was found to be susceptible, except in very moderate degree. Practically all of those who were susceptible were found to have heart weights far below this proportion. This explained nearly all the inconsistencies among the different groups.

"The deer, with a heart weight of 1-90 of its body weight is almost absolutely immune, while the antelope, in the same group, with a heart weight of 1-200, is exceedingly susceptible. The cow, with a heart weight of barely 1-250 of its body weight is, as every one knows, exceedingly subject to the disease, while the sheep, placed under even more unfavorable and unnatural conditions, with a heart weight of about 1-100, is almost completely immune. The same relation explains the marked immunity of the horse, ass, and zebra, even under domestication, for their hearts range from 1-90 to 1-100 of their body weight."

Dr. Hutchinson continues that with the results of these investigations in mind he has for the last five years sought a similar condition of undersized heart in patients suffering from tuberculosis that have come under his observation, and that the parallel holds good. He now regards the rate and quality of the pulse as the "most important and significant single symptom, both in diagnosis and prognosis." He asserts that he is convinced from his observations that the individual predisposed to tuberculosis is the one with the small or muscularly inadequate heart and a large lung, or a lung of normal volume, and that the object should be to develop the heart up to the level of the lung. The influence of this view on treatment he summarizes as follows:

"First of all, the putting of the patient at absolute rest as long as there is an afternoon temperature of 100 degrees or over.

"Secondly, the enormous overfeeding with highly nutritious foods containing a large percentage of live proteids, in the shape of eggs and milk, tends both to neutralize the toxins, which are poisoning the heart cells and breaking down the muscle-wall, and to supply nourishment in a readily soluble form to make good the defect. Overfeeding is the weightiest part of our modern treatment of consumption.

"Thirdly, the constant exposure to the purest and freshest of air gives adequate amount of oxidation with the minimum of depth and frequency of respirations and consequent reduction of the demands on the overworked heart."

Dr. Hutchinson's conclusions as a basis for further investigation are:

That a weak, undersized, muscularly deficient heart, indicated by a weak, rapid pulse and defective first sound, is one of the most constant and significant conditions present in consumption.

That this condition in a considerable percentage of cases precedes the development of tuberculosis; the earlier in the disease this condition is presented and the more striking its degree the more serious the prognosis.

That in tuberculosis as in pneumonia and typhoid fever, while the chief seat of toxin production is in the lungs or bowels, the chief strain falls upon the heart, and death in the majority of cases is due to toxic heart failure.

That the condition of the heart should be our principal guide in the diagnosis, prognosis and treatment of consumption; if the pulse is slowing and strengthening, never mind the lung.

That a persistently rapid pulse without other ascertainable cause should always arouse suspicion of incipient tuberculosis.

May-Day Strike Threatens France---Inside Story of the Witte-Durnovo Scandal---Great Wealth of "Poor" Poland---What the Jewish-American Bankers Told Count Witte.

Vast Socialist Demonstration Due in France May 1

SOCIALIST papers of France announce that the present coal strike in the basin of the Pas de Calais is merely an incipient move for a general strike, which will be declared by all the labor associations of France on the first of May. It may be recalled that two years ago at the Labor Congress, held in Bourges, May 1, 1906, was set as the day for a great national labor demonstration.

The projected strike will not, however, be without object—an element which characterized the general Italian strike of September, 1904, which, owing to its ominous nature, caused the dismissal of Parliament by the King and the hurried election in which Italian Catholics combined with monarchists to stem the growing tide of socialistic domination. The French strike will be inaugurated for the purpose of instituting eight hours without overtime as comprising a day's work throughout the country.

* * *

The organizers of this vast revolutionary undertaking declare themselves to be confident of success. "It will be," said one, "a general industrial strike, and will very possibly stop every public service. Our action is particularly directed for the benefit of minor Government employés, who in all probability will support us as one man. Every union has replied in favor of the strike on receipt of the appeal from the 'Confederation.'"

All minor federations and syndicates of labor have admonished their members and adherents to prepare for the great struggle. Here is an extract from the appeal put forth by the Federation of Ironworkers:

"Let us unite and nothing can resist us. Let the ironworkers without distinction concentrate their efforts and go resolutely to all other organizations to bring about the day of eight hours on May 1. This first step is decisive. If we march hand in hand we shall prove to indifferent ones our right by our conscience and our strength. This first step accomplished, and we shall be reinforced by all unions no matter how hesitating their members may be. The stronger we grow, and the more numerous, the sooner will individual emancipation be brought about—the abolition of the exploitation of man by man."

Jewelers' employes, of whom there are many thousands in France, will join the strike unless their employers grant them before May 1 the desired eight-hour day. The National Syndicate of Posts, Telegraphs, and Telephones, whose very organization is in defiance of the law, has addressed an appeal to its members to strike on the first of May unless the Government shall, in the meantime, grant them the eight-hour concession. The Federation of Lithographers will take similar action unles its employers make the following concessions before the appointed time: "Recognition of the union by all employers; a day of eight hours, without wage reduction; absolute suppression of overtime."

* * *

The Echo de Paris is publishing a series of remarkable articles on "The Coming Revolution," by Gaston Dru and Henri de Noussanne, author of "The Kaiser As He Is." Other Paris newspapers are following suit. A fortnight ago a huge placard was displayed outside the Labor Exchange in Paris setting forth that on and after May Day the hours of daily work will be limited to eight.

The well-known political economist M. Leroy-Beaulieu declares that the power of the Confederation of Labor Syndicates, which has the organization of the strike in hand, has been underestimated, and that, should employers of labor, including the Government, not come to terms, the biggest labor-socialist demonstration that the world has ever seen will begin in France on May Day next.

Message of American Bankers Who Saw Count Witte

IT may be recalled that no exact report of the conference which took place last Summer at Portsmouth, N. H., between Count Witte and prominent American Jewish bankers was ever published. The Russische Korrespondenz now publishes what it declares is an authentic memorandum of the proceedings.

The conference took place not on the initiative of the bankers, as was announced at the time, but at the invitation of one of Witte's lieutenants. The bankers only accepted Witte's advances. The following is an extract from this interesting and voluminous memorandum:

"The pretensions of the Russian Government that the question of the position of Jews in Russia belongs to home politics and in no way regards the Governments of other countries can no longer be maintained, and we must insist on the justice of this point. When the Government, by the application of exceptional laws or other measures, forces large masses of its subjects to emigrate to other countries in order to better their condition, then the people of those countries which afford a refuge to the emigrants against persecution and oppression have the full right to criticise the circumstances which cause this invasion. They have also the full right to insist that these circumstances should be changed in the measure necessary for the removal of the causes of the forced emigration. They may insist upon that without incurring the accusation of meddling with matters which do not concern them.

"Such is our opinion of the position which the whole American Nation has taken. As regards ourselves as Jews, we have still a greater and special interest in the position of Jews in Russia, thanks to the ties of blood and religion which unite us. We therefore consider it our absolute duty to do everything in our power to bring about an amelioration of their condition.

"* * * You have said that it might be wise and practicable to efface gradually the differences in civic standards between Jews and Gentiles in view of preparing the way for granting them complete civic equality. We can assure you that the million or more of Russian Jews who have come to the United States have proved good citizens in spite of their sudden emergence from the deepest darkness into the brightest daylight of civic and political freedom. They showed themselves equal to the duties laid upon them as citizens of this great Republic."

In commenting upon the memorandum, particularly upon that point referring to Witte's phrase "gradually to efface the differences in civic standing between Jews and Gentiles," the editor of the Russische Korrespondenz inquires what these differences are. "They amount only to the right of the Christians to plunder and torment the Jews, but are not the Christians, on their side, plundered and shot down by the Czar's troops and irresponsible bureaucrats? As long as the whole Russian nation has not conquered the right to rule their own destinies, no concession granted by the Czar to the Jews would be of any real value."

Amazing Increased Prosperity in Russian Poland

ON account of the falling off of English imports in Russian Poland, the British Foreign Office has been collecting a budget of interesting statistics which, while possibly accounting for the diminution in question, forms a curious contrast to the current reports of Polish decadence and ruin, and presents a state of society of which the Russian Government should take heed.

The first striking feature of the statistics is that 24 per cent. of the population lives in towns, whereas, in the rest of Russia, the percentage is only 13. The movement toward the towns is increasing annually by 10 per cent., due to the rapid development of industry. Where thirty years ago only 27,000 workers were employed in factories and works in Poland, the total value of the production of which was 37,500,000 roubles, or about $18,750,000, now 250,000 persons are employed, and the value of the industrial production is $250,000,000, or about $20 per head of the whole population.

This colossal growth of local production is due to the enormous free market offered by the rest of the empire. Naturally it has had its effect upon civilization. In Warsaw thirty years ago there were 132 primary schools, with 10,000 pupils; to-day there are 345, with an attendance of 38,000. The increased prosperity also shows its effect upon the population, which has increased from 6,000,000 in 1875 to nearly 13,000,000 in 1905. The density of population is greater than in any country in Europe, being 250 per square mile. Still another effect of the prosperity is shown in the increased power of purchase by peasants. Prior to 1873 peasants held only 297,000 acres; in two decades following that date they nearly trebled that acreage, and have since augmented their property by 1,620,000 acres. One curious cause of Poland's increasing wealth is the $5,000,000 annually brought into the country by the field laborers who periodically visit Germany for the harvest. This amount is eventually invested in land.

Corneille's Third Century

ALL France, but particularly Rouen and Paris, will celebrate in June the completion of the third century since the birth of Pierre Corneille. At Rouen, where Corneille was born, an attempt will be made to renovate the buildings identified with his youth and to establish a Musée Pierre Corneille, after the fashion of the Victor Hugo Museum in Paris, Shakespeare's house at Stratford, and the Haus von Goethe at Weimar.

Paris is to have a new monument to the famous dramatist, paid for by public subscription. The committee which has had the selection in charge has decided to choose the design presented by M. H. Allouard, already well known by his "Dying Molière" in the foyer of the Odéon and his "Richelieu" in the Fine Arts Museum of the City of Paris.

M. Allouard follows tradition, and drapes his figure in the costume of the time. It is to be elevated upon a pedestal at the feet of which is a symbolical figure, "Thalia," the tragic muse, whose visage is a portrait of Mme. Segond-Weber, the beautiful and talented sociétaire of the Comédie Française.

Besides the unveiling of the statue a cycle of Corneille's plays will be given on the memorable date at the principal Paris theatres.

Italy's New Naval Base

ITALY has made a significant reply to the German Kaiser's offer to back up Austria-Hungary in any future international complication which may arise. The Italian Ministries of Marine and War have accepted the project of Signor Mocigga for the establishment of a great naval port in the lagoon of Mezzano, which lies southward of the mouths of the Po and about ninety-four miles distant from Pola, the headquarters of the Austro-Hungarian Navy.

The lagoon of Mezzano has a superficial area of 42,500 acres and an average depth of forty feet. Thus the entire Italian Navy could easily manoeuvre on the lagoon, which is only separated from the Adriatic by a strip of land about nine and a half miles in width. The lagoon would be easily protected by forts at its entrance and just as easily connected with the Vali di Comacchio, the inland sea lying northward of Ravenna, the superficial area of which is about ten times that of Mezzano.

Secret of Durnovo's Power Over Count Witte

THE late Alexander III., Czar of All the Russias, once gave this memorable order to Gortschakoff in regard to M. Durnovo, the announcement of whose retirement from the Ministry of the Interior alternates with that of Count Witte from the post of Premier: "Send that beast about his business within twenty-four hours!"

Durnovo bowed for a time to imperial wrath, but somehow, under the present Czar, managed to reinsinuate himself into office. Since the death of von Plehve his rise has been especially rapid and, to many persons, unaccountable except on the ground that he is the creature of the reactionary elements of bureaucracy and autocracy. A cable dispatch announced last week that his days were numbered, and that his long-threatened denouncement of Count Witte had been indefinitely postponed.

What is this denouncement? There is a story current at the Russian Court to the following effect: It may be recalled that von Plehve when assassinated was on his way to pay his regular Thursday visit to the Czar at Tsarskoe-Selo. After the fatal event the Minister's portfolio, with the papers still intact, was handed by the police over to the Minister of Justice, M. Muravieff. As they concerned the doings of the Ministry of the Interior, they at once fell into M. Durnovo's hands, then Acting Assistant in that department.

These papers, intended for the eye of the Czar alone, contain two important reports; one recommended that Count Leo Tolstoy should be inured for life in a distant monastery, the other contained a specious yet none the less damning assemblage of proofs revealing the "dangerous" activity of M. Witte, with documents in his alleged handwriting supporting the accusations of treasonable practices made against him by von Plehve. The latter, in conclusion, requested the Czar to authorize him to make a domiciliary visit to Witte's house and office, and, if as anticipated, certain additional evidence were found, to arrest him on the spot.

The portfolio of the dead von Plehve has never been communicated to the Czar. It is still in the hands of Durnovo, who, it is said, has used its contents as a rod over the Premier in such a manner as to account for the latter's seemingly vacillating conduct in carrying out the decreed legislative reforms. Count Witte is known to have recently won over to his side Count Solsky and Gen. Trepoff, and it may be owing to their combined efforts that Durnovo's fangs have been removed.

Woman Movement in Egypt

WOMAN'S emancipation goes merrily on in the valley of the Nile. A number of native women have just proffered a petition to the Government imploring protection from the unjust marriage laws of the country.

"When any of us," they declare, "have differences with our husbands, they simply abandon us and compel us to petition for maintenance to the Mehkemeh Sharieh," the supreme Mohammedan tribunal. But this court is circumlocutory. So when at last the needy wife secures a judgment and hopes to obtain a "nafaka" from the Government, that document is only too often valueless, the husband having pleaded poverty.

The Cairo Ministry, at the urgent request of Lord Cromer, is looking into the matter, and will try to see their way clear to redress the grievances of the petitioners, who, although they may be divorced by their husbands, are forbidden by the Mohammedan law to secure a similar independence.

Distressed Jews in Berlin

DR. NATHAN, President of the German Organization for Helping Distressed Jews, on being interrogated by the British immigration authorities as to the destiny of the 7,000 Jews to be expelled from Berlin, denies that they are going to England.

In the first place, he points out, they are not actually to be expelled, but have simply been regarded as "undesirables" from the point of view of the German political police. Those who are emigrating are all going either to the United States or to South America. Dr. Nathan's organization is pledged not to send any "undesirable aliens" to England. He has secured a concession from the head of the Berlin police by which the Jews tabulated as "undesirables" may remain in Germany until they are sufficiently independent to pass American immigration regulations.

STATUE OF FRANKLIN.
John J. Harjes's Gift to the City of Paris.

Harjes's Statue of Franklin to be Unveiled in Paris

FOLLOWING the exercises in commemoration of the 200th anniversary of the birth of Benjamin Franklin in Philadelphia last Tuesday, Parisians three days later were to have unveiled on the little square opposite the Trocadero a statue to Franklin, the gift of the well-known Paris-American veteran banker, John J. Harjes. Now, however, out of regard for the San Francisco catastrophe the ceremony has been postponed until next Friday.

The site of the statue is particularly well selected, for it is not far from the place occupied by the American Envoy when he was soliciting aid from the "Grande Nation" for the struggling colonies. The ceremony incidental to the unveiling took place in the Palace of the Trocadero.

The statue is the work of John J. Beyle, and is a replica of the one standing in Philadelphia opposite the Post Office; the pedestal, however, contains bas-reliefs designed by M. Frédéric Bron and these words of Mirabeau: "Le génie qui affranchit l'Amérique et versa sur l'Europe des torrents de lumière. Le sage que deux mondes réclament."

Where Vercingetorix Died

ARCHAEOLOGICAL proclivities of M. Bérard, the Under Secretary of Posts and Telegraphs of France, have seriously compromised that official. He is beset by the inhabitants of two towns with demands for first-class stations, one demand being on the ground of increased local distinction and the other in resentment to humiliation inflicted. M. Bérard, in trying to fix the deathplace of Vercingetorix, the last of the Gauls who defied Caesar, has settled upon Izernore to the exclusion of Alesia, which formerly believed itself possessing the right to that distinction.

Izernore was called Izernodurum by the Romans, while Caesar distinctly mentions Alesia as the place of the famous battle. This, however, did not daunt M. Bérard, while it stimulated local antiquarians. Incidentally he pointed out that the word "haricot" was derived from "faba." Moreover, Caesar says that Alesia was surrounded by ramparts 14,000 paces in circumference and having twenty-three gates. "Where are the remains of these ramparts?" M. Bérard inquired of the Alesians, when they interviewed him on the subject. On the other hand, he demonstrated that the ruined ramparts of Izernore exactly fitted in with the definition. "Should we rely on mere etymological resemblance of names rather than upon physical resemblance?" he asked. "I think not." And that ended the matter.

A New Russian Organ

RUSSIAN STATE is the name of the new daily paper recently started by the Russian Government. The original scheme included a fixed subsidy of $300,000 from the State; but this was based upon an estimated subscription list of 40,000. The subsidy has now been increased by $60,000, for only 269 persons came forward to subscribe to the paper.

The inauguration of Russian State is a severe blow to the only two papers in Russia which have remained loyal to the Russian Institution, the Novoye Vremya and the Moscow Gazette. Both received a subsidy from the Government in the shape of official advertisements, for which the Novoye Vremya, for example, was paid $50,000 a year. Now the advertisements have been withdrawn and transferred to Russian State—from the Moscow Gazette on the excuse that it has less than 5,000 subscribers, and from the Novoye Vremya because it is frankly stated that the new Government organ needs the money.

Paris Bois Threatened

PARIS is passing through an excitement similar to that which agitated Boston fifteen years ago, when the City Fathers of the Hub proposed to take a slice of the Common for building purposes. The great pleasure ground of the Parisians, the Bois de Boulogne, is threatened with partial extinction.

The Bois covers an area of about 4,200 acres, and, together with the space formerly occupied by the fortifications recently purchased by the Paris Municipal Council and forming a ribbon around the city nearly twenty miles in length and a quarter of a mile broad, has a total area of 7,200 acres. It seems that the Municipal Council is not disposed, whether through penury or for other reasons, to leave its purchase unproductive. The official proposal involves a diminution of the park by nearly 100 acres, the felling of over 6,000 beautiful trees which were planted after the war in 1871 along the Glacis from the Porte Maillot to the Porte d'Auteuil, and the construction of an entirely new residential quarter at the entrance to the Bois.

Letters are pouring in to the unfortunate Municipal Council from all over France promising vengeance in case the scheme should be carried out, for every Frenchman, no matter how humble his origin, claims to own a part of the Bois.

The importation of 2,000 Chinese coolies into German Southeast Africa is a subject which will come up for debate in the Reichstag next week.

French Leaders, New Chamber and Coming Elections

EVEN if presenting no elements of current internal interest, the close proximity of the Parliamentary elections and the fact that the Chamber of Deputies is to have a new façade, should cause the composition of the French Lower House as now grouped under its leaders to invite passing attention. Still the post-electoral session of the Chamber is certain, by reason of important questions pending, to attract broad foreign interest, even though the great national strike of labor and socialism scheduled for May 1 may not prove as formidable as certain publicists predict.

In the cable reports of French Parliamentary procedure occur the terms "left," "right," "centre," "left centre," &c., which would be more intelligible to the foreigner if he understood what they signify in French politics and comprehended the individual status of the numerous Parliamentary leaders. There are a dozen parties, or groups, and sometimes more in the Chamber. These are divided into three great divisions. The first is made up of the consolidated Republican groups, first brought together by Waldeck-Rousseau's Government of "Republican Defense." The second is the Opposition, including every group against the present administration. The third is the Extreme Left, composed of Socialist bodies of various complexions who, although voting usually with the Government "bloc," have a curious way of joining forces with the Opposition, just as they did when they overturned the Rouvier Cabinet the other day—the Opposition voting that the Government had been too severe in taking the church inventories and the Socialists voting that they had not been severe enough. It was the combined vote, however, individually censorious, which told.

What is geographically designated as the Centre of the Chamber is occupied by the Moderates. They are dominated by the Left-centre or the Right-centre, according as a Government proposition may be Radical or Conservative. The chief of this Centre group is M. Ribot. The Right-centre is composed of Nationalists, who believe in Parliamentary Government and direct suffrage. Their leader is M. Lasies. Further on the Right are seated the remnants of the Royalist, Bonapartist, and Clerical Parties, whose leader, the Comte de Mun, is the head of the well-known automobile firm; he is also the great leader of the regular Opposition. His usual lieutenants are the clergymen, Abbés Lemire and Gavraud, the latter being the recognized leader of Roman Catholic members. The Government, of course, finds its chief support in the Left-centre, at the extreme of which are the Socialists, those of rational legislative proclivities being manipulated by M. Jean Jaurès, one of the most eloquent speakers in the Chamber.

It will thus be seen that in passing from the Left-centre to the Right, the Government may encounter various phases of opposition from the Moderates' objections to the manner of executing laws to the objection of the regular Opposition to the laws themselves; while on the Left are the Socialists, ever ready to support the Government in Radical changes, particularly if these changes have Liberal and Socialistic aims, and just as ready to rebuke it should the law they have supported be not executed with proper vigor.

The announcement that the Corinthian peristyle of the Chamber of Deputies is to give place to a Louis Seize façade, designed by M. Nenot, gives a present picturesque interest to the official home of French legislators. The work, it is said, will cost $2,100,000, and the result will greatly improve the appearance of the Seine at that point. During the building of the new front, which it is expected will occupy two years, the Deputies will be provided with a temporary building in the rear.

If current signs be a guide, the elections on May 6 will show an overwhelming majority for the Government, with a more homogeneous return of Parliamentary Socialists than ever before.

Kaiser's Hand Noticed in the Turco-Egyptian Dispute

THE continued concentration of Turkish troops at Damascus, and their dispatch southward in large bodies would long ago have aroused the curiosity, if not the trepidation of Downing Street, had not Lord Cromer, the British representative in Egypt, constantly reported to his Government that the destiny of the troops was to protect the workmen engaged in completing the Hejaz Railway. In the meantime, Mukhtar Pasha has been authorized by the Porte to conduct negotiations on the subject of the Turko-Egyptian frontier dispute with the Khédive. Although the British Government is not a party to these negotiations, it behooves Lord Cromer to keep a vigilant eye on them, as well as on the augmentation of the Sultan's best troops just east of the Suez Canal.

Some curious revelations are made in the Arabic press concerning this Sinia frontier difficulty hitherto unsuspected in Cairo. The assertion made is that Mukhtar Pasha, the Ottoman Imperial Commissioner to the Khédiviate, is displaying in the present incident a degree of activity and energy surpassing his conduct in any previous conflict of interests between Egypt and Turkey, even when still more important than the existing affair. The cause, it is declared, arises from the conjecture that Mukhtar Pasha himself contributed to provoke the present difference. This happened, it is alleged, during his last stay in Berlin.

He then had an interview, it would seem, with the Kaiser, when the Hejaz Railway and the means of fortifying Turkish influence in Arabia, such as the laying of branch lines linking together the strategic points on the coast and elsewhere, were discussed. As a consequence of this interview, the Imperial Commissioner urged on the Porte the creation of the Akaba trunk line. The project found immediate favor with Ferid Pasha, whose propensities are all for Germany, and thus indirectly came the occupation of Tabah by the Sultan's forces. It may be added that Egypt is fully aware that if guns are fired, Turkey will yield at the first sound of the cannon.

An announcement of significant import is that the Sultan has just made over to the Imperial Ottoman Commissioner as a gift the palace and grounds of the Embassy's headquarters in Cairo—a property valued at not less than $575,000. In return, Mukhtar Pasha has sent to the Sultan a donation of $50,000 for the Hejaz Railway.

The famous French theologian Ernest Renan is to have his memory preserved by a first-class armored cruiser to be named after him. This cruiser has just been launched at St. Nazaire, and forms one of the group of 12,416 tons displacement of which the Victor Hugo, the Léon Gambetta, the Jules Ferry, and the Michelet are already members.

Overcoming Personal Idiosyncrasies and Individual Peculiarities

Francis Wilson's Commendable Achievement in "The Little Father of the Wilderness"---The New Actress from the West---"Arms and the Man."

AN individuality so strongly marked as is that of Francis Wilson, and in which personal idiosyncrasies and facial and physical peculiarities for more than twenty years have been emphasized at every point by the peculiarly narrow conditions of the actor's servitude and the equally narrow demands of his audiences—such an individuality is not to be lightly shaken off. Even were it possible for a comedian to change himself at will into a completely satisfying player of serious rôles, he would in all likelihood find it extremely difficult to convince the large majority of his hearers of the excellence of his transformation. Nowhere do the estimates of values become more promptly and permanently fixed than in the theatre; nowhere is it more difficult to create new standards to judge of individual accomplishment. Mr. Wilson's experience to-day is the experience of any number of very capable artists who have preceded him in the effort to combat the popular prejudice created by long familiarity. And condemnation based on such prejudice is as sure to be misleading as are most judgments of individual achievement based on the general premise of past performance.

These remarks are inspired by the fact that Mr. Wilson for the first time in very many years is now acting a rôle which calls for some show of characterization rather than the mere theatric reflection of an eccentric comic personality.

The little sketch played at the Criterion is only twenty minutes long. It tells how Père Marlotte, "the little father of the wilderness," friend and missionary to the Indians of the great lakes, has been unexpectedly summoned to Versailles by Louis XV., and how, awkwardly, hesitantly, half fearing and half hoping, the worn, tired, and uncouth little man makes his way into the palace, not knowing what to expect, but dreaming that perhaps a bishopric may be his before the interview with the King is ended. The monarch arrives and is at a loss to remember why he summoned the missionary to his presence. Suddenly, however, it dawns upon him that in a wager he had contended that the Falls of Niagara were four miles high. It was to decide this that the missionary was summoned. So the King informs him.

The disappointment is complete. Père Marlotte, now even more halting and humble than before, answers the question of his royal liege. Then, white and trembling, turns to make his way out, amid smiles and jeers. But the royal mistress, more pitying than the rest, sees the old man's grief, has some little understanding of it, and leads him into another room for a glass of wine.

Then the great Frontenac, newly arrived from Canada, enters with a train of Indians. The King greets him as one who has served his master well, and the courtiers gather round to do him honor. Père Marlotte, slowly groping his way, passes into the room. Frontenac starts at sight of him; there is mutual recognition and mutual joy at the meeting. Then the soldier kneels and asks a blessing, as do the Indians, greeting the little father with reverential respect.

The King stares in amasement, and the attendant circle buzzes inquiry and astonishment, but Frontenac quickly explains. His conquests have left little behind them but whitened bones—Père Marlotte's victories of love and peace, of savage hearts tamed, of savage minds subdued and won, will live forever. A light dawns upon the monarch. And with the gracious humbleness of majesty he sinks to his knees and bids his courtiers kneel to ask a blessing of—the new Bishop of Toulouse.

Austin Strong and Lloyd Osbourne are the authors of the little fragment of a play, but fragment as it is, it is clean cut, clear, and unusually appealing. Seldom does it happen that in so brief a space of time a character is made to take such powerful hold upon the imagination as in the case of this pathetic little figure of the priest from out the wilds. Nor is it fair to summarize the result without a proper share of credit to the actor in the rôle. Mr. Wilson's mannerisms are inground. His walk is not always only that of the hesitating, timid priest. Frequently the shambling gait of Francis Wilson's comic opera days reveals itself beneath the sombre cassock, and he is still unable to resist the temptation to enforce a suggestion of a comic thought with tongue extended far out between wide-opened lips. But, these things apart, there is imagination and illumination in his sketch, his voice is sympathetic and tender, his manner generally expressive of simple-hearted gentleness. If one wonders that such a man as Père Marlotte is awed, uneasy, awkward, and afraid in the presence of courtly pomp, it must be remembered that the dramatists have so depicted him, and the actor first of all must give life and substance to his writer's text. A commendable achievement this of Mr. Wilson's—a competent and interesting one beyond a doubt.

An interesting week histrionically, as illustrated in this sudden change of Mr. Wilson's milieu, it has brought added satisfaction in the presence of several notably excellent acting achievements. Of most interest undoubtedly has been the introduction to the New York playgoing public of an actress who probably needs only to be better known to be more generally appreciated. A week ago Florence Roberts was unknown here save to that very limited circle of persons whose knowledge of theatrical affairs is not wholly circumscribed by the geographical limitations of Manhattan Island. To-day the actress may sit back comfortable in the assurance that she has made at least a highly favorable beginning in one of the most difficult tasks that confront the player. The New York public, contrary to the general notion, is not the hardest public in the world to please, nor are the critics so inimical to new talent as is generally supposed. But through long experience a very natural belief has been evolved that talents that are not able to pass the tests of the New York first night are very apt to be talents of an indifferent sort.

It would be absurd to state that while Miss Roberts has been gaining her experience elsewhere women of far less desert have not succeeded in New York, but that fact does not minimize the wisdom of this actress's course, since the sort of success which is hers now is rather more certain to be enduring than is that which comes to the passing favorites of each year.

Loyalty to the players who have pleased us is a good thing in its way, a fine and generous thing, but it is often more generous than discriminating. Success in one strongly marked part is often enough to establish an actor or actress in a position of comparative security for years. We have had an instance of it this week in the case of Hilda Spong, who several years ago played Lady Huntworth with such delightful effect that ever since she has been comparatively free from any sort of unpleasant criticism. To-day she is playing with Mr. Crane, and playing very badly, but it is wasting words to try to convince her admirers of that fact.

In Miss Roberts's case one faces an entirely different proposition. Her success is not in the slightest degree the result of accident or adventitious circumstance. She is a fine artist, who, without conveying a decided impression of anything at all like genius, inspires respect by reason of the very evident intelligence behind every line she speaks and every move she makes while on the stage. Comparisons of her with Mrs. Fiske are unfortunate, but perhaps natural under the circumstances, although they are not by any means wholly to the disadvantage of Miss Roberts. She does suggest at times the better-known player, but if there has ever been a slavish copying of method, that fact is not apparent now. One missed on the opening night the positive touches of authority in little things which so often make Mrs. Fiske's playing a positive delight, but nervousness may account for this shortcoming in part. With the exception of a fault manifesting itself in a peculiar monotony of utterance in moments of emotional stress, Miss Roberts is a beautiful and eloquent reader, giving value and meaning to lines naturally, eloquently, and without the slightest suggestion of the strained elocution so often the accompaniment of otherwise excellent dramatic accomplishment. She does not hold herself in check for the big emotional passage, slurring and passing over everything that precedes so as to give additional force to the momentary outburst at a climax, and yet a more intensely emotional and impressive reading of a single line is not often heard than is hers when in "The Strength of the Weak" she at first realizes the identity of the man whose love has come to mean her very existence.

On the whole, her acting is of a very superior, a very satisfying, order.

Things have changed when the review of a week relegates Bernard Shaw to the third or fourth division rather than to first and foremost place. But for once the unfamiliar things must have the precedence, and "Arms and the Man" is not new. The billboards call it "the merriest of Shaw's comedies," and this time the paste brush sticks very near the truth.

Even in the days before Shaw had been the most talked about man in the States, Mr. Mansfield succeeded in creating some sort of interest in this comedy. And his acting of the Swiss mercenary was, as may be remembered, a very distinct and emphatic departure from anything he had done before or has done since.

Mr. Daly, following upon his distinguished predecessor's initiative, manages to individualize the amusing Bluntschli, and it is testimony to the younger actor's progress and versatility that here less than in anything he has recently attempted one notices fewer of personal characteristics, and more of the general suggestions in traits and manners that go to make up a rounded study in character.

But the part of Captain Bluntschli, for all its quaintness, is not on the whole an exceedingly difficult one to play. Ease of manner, poise, the ability to read lines intelligently—these things it, of course, demands. So, too, capacity in mimetic mechanics, as in the passages of the first act, where Bluntschli's weariness provides the keynote to all he does. But all these are well within Mr. Daly's range, as they would be in that of other actors far less gifted and less original.

It is impossible to judge, however, whether the star himself or his support is responsible for the unnecessarily noisy playing of all the other characters. Everybody shouts but Daly might be worked over into a popular chorus to be sung by Lyric Theatre audiences. One can readily comprehend that an astute actor, seeking to enforce his own naturalness, might encourage such exaggeration on the part of his surrounding company, but the practice is not to be commended. And one hesitates to lay the charge upon Mr. Daly's head, remembering that Dodson Mitchell has generally been inclined to boisterous utterance, that Aubrey Boucicault has just come from musical comedy, where noise is very often an essential, and that Chrystal Herne has long had a habit of diaphragmatic explosiveness. This very beautiful young woman is a most tantalizing actress. One is constantly looking for her to do something and she does not do it. Then one decides that she is incompetent, and suddenly, quite unexpectedly, she does some little thing that is exceptionally able.

In her case it appears to be obviously a case of the future. There is latent capacity which needs developing. With proper and intelligent guidance she may yet do much. But there must be an awakening.

Laying Siege to the American Theatrical Stronghold

Florence Roberts Discusses Differences of Audiences East and West---A Nervous First Night.

"IT takes daring for a Western star to try to twinkle in the East."

Florence Roberts, the San Francisco actress who made her début in New York at the Liberty Theatre last Tuesday night, was chatting after dinner next day about the sensations of breaking into the theatrical stronghold of the land.

"Nervous? Indeed I was nervous—more nervous than I ever was before on a first night—except one that I'll tell you about presently. But, thank goodness, the first dash is over, and not so badly, either, it would seem. I am told it is very unusual for New York newspapers to agree about new player people. I am the more delighted and grateful. Last night there happened to be a lot of Californians in town on their way to Europe, and a number of unmistakable western faces in the front rows kept me from feeling homesick.

"It is curious how little the Far West really depends upon Eastern judgments or standards in matters theatrical. West of the Missouri you find little or no looking toward New York for successes, but as soon as you get east of the river all theatres face New York. San Francisco has its own dramatic individuality, its own notions of plays and players, and gets on happily by itself. Yet they are always willing to receive and welcome anything or anybody new—judging them on their merit, and acclaiming or dropping them with all the heartiness in the world.

"Naturally, that is where the West differs from the East—in its big, exuberant, open-armed attitude toward new things, wherever they come from.

"I noticed, too, an interesting difference in my audience last night. In a way you are easier to play to here in the East. You are quieter, you don't let your feelings run away with you. While you applaud you don't applaud in that boisterous way that almost blows out the footlights. When they like a thing in the West they are sometimes apt to drown half the scene to show you how unmistakably they do like it.

Florence Roberts.

"Oh, we get all the proverbial Western breeziness now and then, pretty close to the stage," said Miss Roberts, laughing. "There was a fearful and wonderful instance of it the opening night of 'The Strength of the Weak' in 'Frisco. We were playing at the Columbia Theatre, where the stage door opens on a wide alley surrounded with crowded houses and restaurants. Everything went along smoothly until the third act, which is, of course, the big scene of the piece. Just as I was beginning to get myself well together for my work, there came a sudden noise of hurrying feet, and then there flooded in upon that stage the most diabolical uproar of shouts, shrieks, pistol shots, curses, and tramping up and down stairs that I ever hope to hear. I nearly lost my head, but as you couldn't hear yourself speak anyway, it didn't matter. The audience was, of course, startled and curious, and whole rows began to get up and troop out.

"Some one on the stage hurried out to see what was the matter, and we stopped the piece a moment to explain to the audience that it was only a neighboring gambling resort being raided. We went on with the play, hoping the racket would die down. But it didn't. And I finished that act and most of the next with a running accompaniment of riot and rebellion that even closed doors and windows couldn't shut out. Imagine playing a domestic drama with a realistic war effect in full action just under the window. When Pauline Darcy killed herself that night it was simply one pistol shot more or less, and I believe the audience hardly knew whether it was in the play or outside.

"I shouldn't wish you to think first nights of that sort were the usual thing in San Francisco," laughed Miss Roberts, "but they are not absolutely unknown. I assure you that night was quite as strenuous in its way as breaking into New York."

News of the San Francisco disaster was only just beginning to come in, and when some one referred to it Miss Roberts looked very grave and held up her hand with a quick request that they shouldnt talk of it. "I am trying by sheer force of will not to let myself think or speak of it until all the particulars are known. I have so many friends there," she said, a shadow coming over her face, "yet so far as I can hear I have reason to hope they are all safe.

"Whatever happens to the city, the San Franciscans will rebuild it. They will go at the task to-morrow with as much courage and confidence as ever. That's California," said Miss Roberts simply. "But I'd rather talk about it as if it were all there, and nothing had happened.

"Although I was born in New York I went to San Francisco when I was two years old. California has been my home ever since, so I am completely 'of the Golden West.'

"Strangely enough, I began my stage career as a soubrette. In fact, I believed firmly that I was to be a Lotta or a Maggie Mitchell. I did their rôles with all devotion and ambition for several years throughout the West. Then I happened to take a small serious part with Lewis Morrison in 'Faust.' Before long I found myself playing Marguerite, and one day Mr. Morrison said to me roundly, 'Look here, Miss Roberts, you're not a soubrette, you know, and I would suggest that you get the idea out of your head at your earliest convenience.'

"'But look at my size,' I said wonderingly, 'I am certainly neither high nor wide enough for tragedy.' 'Never mind that,' he said, 'You'll see some day I am right.'

"Apparently he was, for it wasn't long before I was doing 'Camille,' 'Magda,' 'Tess,' 'The Unwelcome Mrs. Hatch,' 'Sappho,' and other similar rôles with more success than I ever dreamed of.

"For that is the kind of play they like in the West—big, broad, emotional dramas, that give a chance for sheer old-fashioned acting. The sterling plays, like 'Camille' and 'The Country Girl,' they will listen to forever and ever. They are always glad to see a new actress, but they had ten times rather see her in one of those old-school parts they know, than in some talky drawing-room play from a strange social milieu. If they must have new things, let them be 'Zaza,' 'Sappho'—good, stirring, emotional pieces that give them something more vital than clever talk.

"And oh, but they're loyal—my Westerners. Once you've pleased them, they'll never forget you. I remember arriving in Salt Lake City a few seasons ago, an utter stranger. For that's another curious thing. The West beyond the Missouri is split up into a few big theatrical provinces. You may be well known in San Francisco, and ten to one they've never heard your name in Omaha. But when you do happen around, if Omaha and Salt Lake City happen to like you, they'll take you to their hearts and never forget you. That's the West.

"Then, too, I begin to think companies hold together longer out there than they do in the East. Why, I've played with the same people season after season through the West, and nobody had any thought of changing. In New York everybody seems to be forever announcing new plans, new casts. I found one of the hardest things about coming East was the need of playing all at once with people I had had no time whatever to become used to. I must say I think the permanent company is by all means the ideal. To become thoroughly accustomed to the people you are with night after night on the stage is a long step toward the artistic success of the pieces you produce.

"I shall be only too glad if New York cares to hear my 'Magda,' 'Tess,' 'Zaza,' and some of the others, but one piece I am particularly anxious to play here. That is D'Annunzio's 'Gioconda.' I believe I am the only woman who has played it in English in this country, though, of course, Mme. Duse gave the original. They liked the English version immensely in the West, and I hope New York will care to give it a hearing at least.

"'The Strength of the Weak,' which I have only been playing four months, is, as you can see, almost the only kind of modern play that suits the West. It has the big, emotional situations under its politeness of surface. Somebody between San Francisco and the Mississippi called it a Sardou-Ibsen play in Clyde Fitch clothing.

"If that is so," laughed Miss Roberts, as she got into her carriage, "it ought to get into the best Eastern circles on the strength of its tailoring."

While the Scenes Change

A Few Minutes with a Comedian on a Busy Stage.

"LOOK not down, but up!" is a good line for the actor's daily guide, and he'll have to take it literally now and then. During the entr'acte of "The Social Whirl" one night last week, Joe Coyne entertained a pair of elderly friends of his boyhood on the stage of the Casino. The gray-haired couple, in their Sunday broadcloth, had never been behind the curtain of a theatre before, and they timidly suggested that they would like to stay down on the stage, where they could watch the change of scenes. Of course such a thing is never allowed, but this was a special occasion.

They found a comparatively quiet spot in the centre of things, where they looked and listened with awe. The old man was staring straight up at the complicated overhead fixings, when all at once there was a shout and the long, solid-looking gallery, with its curtains and flower pots, against which he was leaning, rose swiftly and smoothly into the air, draperies, flower pots, and all.

"Bless my soul!" he said, when he had recovered his breath and his balance, "you don't mean to say—"

"Oh, we're all up in the air here," explained Mr. Coyne, laughing. "You see the stage is terribly small—hardly room in the wings to stand on two feet at once. So they just hitch ropes to things and pull 'em up out of sight—like one of those packing-case flats, where room is so precious that they keep chairs tied to the ceiling by pulleys and let one or two down when you come to call."

"But isn't it very dangerous to have all those things hanging about over your heads?" queried the old lady.

"Oh, bless you, no," said Mr. Coyne, with beautiful indifference. "An actor wouldn't know what to do without eight or ten tons of canvas, steel and assorted merchandise swinging around in the air over his head. It's like the sword of Damocles, it gives zest to the moment."

"But don't things ever drop?" she persisted.

"Oh, now and then, but they have a way of not quite killing you and you get to rather like it. I remember once when I was playing in 'A Stranger in New York' between the last two acts there was no change of scene or costume, and we used to sit around the stage and drink tea while the curtain was down. This particular night I was sitting well out toward the front a little apart from the others. In fact I was telling them a rather large story of a rather wonderful thing that happened to me once.

"I had just extended the hand that held the teacup to give force to the climax of my experience, when all of a sudden down came a whole fifty-pound row of border lights, with a terrific crash. Knocked the teacup clean out of my hand, and drenched two girls who were sitting ten feet away, with tea that for once happened to be hot. Nobody was hurt, and I rather took the thing as a providential help to driving in the point of my story. But the rest of the company who had been listening to the tale called it a terrible warning, and the two girls who got all my tea looked as if they thought my escape had been altogether too easy."

"I suppose you come to have a kind of instinct that tells you when something is falling," said the old gentleman kindly. Then, stepping hastily forward, as a big brown tree-trunk slid gently down his back, "Hadn't we better go over there while they are planting this forest?" he proposed mildly.

Mr. Coyne jauntily led the way to the other side of the stage.

"The horridest thing that ever happened to me" he said, "was while I was playing in 'The Rollicking Girl' a few seasons ago. You may remember that in one scene the old stage beau—my rôle—was hidden away in a prop dragon, and pulled up in the wings to get him out of the way. It was a pretty device. The ropes held me fastened at the waist and at the neck to keep me steady and upright. Well, one night in Cleveland when I was dangling about a foot above the stage, the neck fastening broke and that beastly dragon skin whirled upside-down, and shot me neatly out on the stage in full view of the audience.

"As the skin was rather a close fit and warm, I always took off my wig, collar and coat before I got into the thing. The sudden arrival on the scene of this mysterious negligé dragon-child, whom they didn't in the least recognize, threw the audience into fits, and we had to ring down the curtain until the rest of the cast could manage to keep their faces straight enough to speak their lines. The bump on the head was nothing, but my pride was black and blue and I refused to be hoisted up in that dragon case again.

"Still on the whole you're as safe on the stage as you are in a church. But you ought to keep your eyes open, you know, in both places—" and Mr. Coyne put forth a hand and gently plucked the absorbed couple out of the way of a stone house front, which was softly stealing down upon their white hairs.

"I never shall forget," went on Mr. Coyne cheerfully, "the first night I ever appeared on any stage. It was with Mr. Collier in 'Miss Philadelphia.' When the time came for my entrance I stood quaking in the wings, with one eye cocked up at a big counter-weight of scrap iron which hung just over me, and praying heaven that the blessed thing might drop on me and save me from having to go on. And that is the sober truth," added Mr. Coyne, as if he had only just come within reach of it. "I've acquired a handful or two of assurance since then, heaven forgive me, but at first I was as modest as modest could be."

The old lady produced a smile for Mr. Coyne's modesty. "I should think," she said thoughtfully, "that all this scenery would be torn to shreds."

"They're very careful, you know. Know just what to do. Never damage a thing. Look!" said Mr. Coyne, hastily spinning his guests around as a descending plank ripped a loud two-foot rip in the gable of the pretty brown house. "Do you see that stage-coach?" pointing to the big drag that is in the set of the last act, and speaking loudly to cover the stage manager's remarks about the tear. "The property man was telling me that that coach is so constructed that it can be taken apart piece by piece and tucked away in three soap boxes. You know I don't believe him," added Mr. Coyne, confidentially, "but they do manage some wonderful things in carting scenery on the road. I could tell you tales—"

And doubtless he would have done so if the stage hadn't suddenly filled up with a garden party of flounces and Spring hats, and the warning whistle sounded for the curtain. Mr. Coyne piloted his bewildered visitors hastily behind the stage coach just in time to get them clear of the opening chorus.

"Good-bye," he whispered, "look out for your heads!" and after ducking under a tangle of calcium light wires the two found themselves at last in the comparative quiet of the theatre.

"Well," said the old man to his wife, as he smoothed the top of his hat, while she brushed two big patches of white lime from his shoulder blades, "well, I've always heard a good deal about the pitfalls of the stage. So far as I can see, the dangers are all comin' the other way."

A REAL CONTEST, THIS.

THERE is just one serious moment during the presentation of "The Rollicking Girl"—when Ilona (Miss Hattie Williams) and Fanchette (Miss Esther Tittell) fight a duel with foils. According to the author of "The Rollicking Girl," Miss Williams has to be wounded and carried off the stage, but as a matter of fact there is much in this scene that the audience does not understand. It is a nightly contest of skill and swordsmanship between the two young women, both of whom are expert with the foils, and Sam Bernard declares that up to date Miss Tittell has been killed six times, while Miss Williams has been fatally wounded on several occasions.

Miss Williams is an adept at fencing according to the Italian school, while Miss Tittell studied under a French master of the foils, and the rivalry between the two schools of fencing is carried on by their representatives on the stage.

Just before the return of "The Rollicking Girl" to New York, Sam Bernard offered a prize to whoever should prove herself the best swordswoman. Ever since then the buttons on the foils have been chalked, and the duel scene is watched not only by Bernard and the others who are on the stage with the duelists, but by the other principals of the company, who crowd in the wings and watch the preliminary fencing when the real skill of the contestants is shown. As soon as the scene is ended, the waists of the two young women are closely examined for chalk marks, and it is then determined which has suffered most in the duel and who is victor.

Of course, the final "touch," when Miss Williams is supposed to be wounded—according to the author of the play—is not counted against her. The "points" of the contest are up to date very nearly equal, and both young women are trying hard to win the prize.

THE THEATRE DOCTOR.

ONE of the most curious institutions of the Paris theatre is the "médecin de service." In each theatre a seat is reserved for a doctor, who is inscribed on a list and takes it in turn to be present in case of accident, either in the auditorium or upon the stage. The medical "fauteuil" is always in the first or second row and close to the exit, so that its occupant can be readily called. There are constantly cases demanding medical treatment in the theatres, principally because of the lack of ventilation. "The other day," says the correspondent of Pall Mall, "it was a graver matter that summoned the doctor from his accustomed seat. One of the audience of the Comédie Française, feeling suddenly ill, leaned over the baluster of the grand staircase and fell to the floor beneath. He was picked up dead." Talk of theatre doctors is apropos, because of an association which has just been formed. Aesculapius in attendance upon Thespis will meet in annual banquet and take care of each other's interests.

Sometimes amusing complications occur through the doctor's not being in his seat. A pretty actress, suddenly feeling unwell, summoned the presumed practitioner to aid her. The latter was greatly embarrassed, not wishing to "give away" his friend, who had lent him the seat. So he prescribed "aqua stillata," and, strange to say, the lady recovered. But the case might have been less amusing.

Some Playhouse Confidences

Bijou Fernandez, who plays Lourka in "Arms and the Man," was saying the other night that her effort to find a play for her own use has made her an insatiable playreader. "I read every manuscript that comes my way," she said earnestly, "and I keep a careful record of all I read. I noticed the other night that in the last two years I have read hundreds of plays. Not one of them proved to be the right one, but I am perfectly convinced that it will come, and, what's more, that I shall know it when I see it. I am ready to read hundreds more to find it."

Guy Standing, who has been playing the rôle of the doctor in "The Duel," is leaving Mr. Skinner's company to become leading man of the Columbia stock company in Washington. Although he will open next Fall in a new play under the Shubert management, he will be during the Summer the head of the Shubert stock company's chief rival in the capital. Walter Hitchcock of "The Embassy Ball" takes Mr. Standing's place in "The Duel."

Sibyl Klein of "The Music Master" company has been engaged by George Fawcett to play one of the leading parts with his wife, Percy Haswell, in a new piece to be produced in Baltimore this Spring. Miss Klein made her début four years ago under the management of Henry B. Harris, and was soon after engaged by David Belasco for a part in "Sweet Kitty Bellairs." For the past two seasons Miss Klein has played with Mr. Warfield. Later this Summer she will play leading rôles in Mr. Fawcett's stock company in St. Paul, Minn.

Summer stock companies are getting to be more and more the rule in the larger American cities. One manager who controls a good many said recently: "Frankly, I am coming to regard my stock companies not so much as sources of profit as places for trying out new plays. At the end of this season I find myself with fifteen or twenty fairly good plays by young American authors on hand, none of which I have had any chance to get a look at. I expect my stock companies to prove excellent testing and rehearsing ground for these possible successes of another season."

Maida Snyder, who will be remembered as Cupid in "The White Cat," at the New Amsterdam Theatre earlier in the season, has had an offer from an English manager to play in pantomime in London. Miss Snyder, who has been only a few seasons on the stage, is now considering the offer, and will probably accept it.

The leading lady for Channing Pollock's new four-act play, "Anna," which is to be produced next season by James K. Hackett, seems more than likely to be Mary Mannering. The scene of the piece is Central America, but, the author hastens to explain, "it hasn't a revolution in it." The characters belong mainly to the American section of the foreign colony.

The plot of the latest play which Margaret Anglin has added to her repertoire for next season sounds a bit lurid. The piece is "The Sabine Woman," by Dwight Moody, which Miss Anglin produced last week in Chicago, and which seems to have surprised its author by succeeding. The story centres about a woman alone in the midst of a rough mining district. Besieged on one occasion by four drunken men, she promises to marry the one who will rid her of the other three. One of them, undertaking the task and succeeding, holds her to her promise. Whereupon she marries him in haste and learns to love him at leisure.

A well-known player told a story at dinner the other night about a brother actor who is noted even among his confrères for his fondness for striking clothes. "We were playing in a small Massachusetts city last month," said the man who was telling the story, "and K. was, as usual, attracting much attention with the variety and pointedness of his raiment. One afternoon, just after a matinée, I was standing at the stage door talking with the doorkeeper, when K. came down from his dressingroom and sauntered out. The doorkeeper looked after him a moment and then turned to me. 'How does it happen,' he asked in perfect good faith, 'that Mr. K. hasn't any of his street clothes at all?'"

If the American who jeers at the dullness of English music halls had stepped into one of the local vaudeville houses almost any afternoon or evening last week, at just the right moment between the songs of a certain English music hall favorite, ten to one he'd have found a theatreful of his countryman joyously stamping time with the orchestra and singing over and over again to a very un-American tune:

There was hi waitin' at the church,
Waitin' at the church,
Waitin' at the church,
When I found 'e'd left me in the lurch
Lord, 'ow it did upset me!
All at oncet 'e sent me 'round a note;
'Ere's the very note,
This is wot 'e wrote:
Can't get away to marry you to-day;
My wife won't let me!

Benefits are coming thick and fast. There were three last week; half a dozen more are scheduled for the California sufferers, and a performance for the benefit of Henry Clay Barnabee and the widow of W. H. McDonald is announced for the near future. The chief feature of the last will be a performance of "Robin Hood" with as many members of the old Bostonian cast as possible.

THE OLD PLAYGOER REMEMBERS.

"THE only time I ever saw a play end before its appointed time," said an old theatregoer the other night, in an hour of reminiscence, "was once in St. John's, New Brunswick, where Lewis Morrison made his first and last appearance in a drama called 'The Indian.' Miss Florence Roberts's appearance here in New York the other night recalled the incident to my mind.

"Mr. Morrison at that time was making a Summer tour of Canada. Of course 'Faust' was, as always, his chief standby, but 'Richelieu' and one or two other plays were put in to add variety. Miss Roberts was then his leading woman, and I have not forgotten her charming performance of Julie in 'Richelieu.'

"But of 'The Indian' and his untimely demise. The first act seemed to go all right, and Mr. Morrison was really getting a good deal out of his rôle. In the second act the people on the stage began to seem a little uncertain what they were saying, and toward the end of the act, in the wilderness of 'the plains,' the players got completely lost. After a series of gulpings and gurglings and false starts they remarked audibly that there was no going on—and down came the curtain.

"Most likely Miss Roberts has forgotten all about it," the old gentleman concluded, laughing, "for that was—oh, well after all not so many years ago."

POINTS ON OYSTERS.

WHEN oysters are removed from more saline water to that which is less salt, says Dr. William K. Brooks, Professor of Zoology in the Johns Hopkins University, who has made the oyster a life study, they absorb water quickly, and become plump, or "fat," but the fatness is nothing but water. The "fattening" is usually carried on in the mouths of rivers, which are always near towns and polluted by sewage.

Every "fattened" oyster is too suspicious to be eaten raw, and the outbreaks of typhoid fever which have been traced to oysters most clearly have been traced to "fattened" oysters. All the fresh-water that a "fattened" oyster has absorbed is at once extracted by cooking, so that the "fattening" of oysters that are to be cooked is not only an unnecessary expense, but a fraud on the consumer, who is sold filthy water from the harbors of cities at the price of oysters.

THE BEST STAGE TYPES.

WHEN it comes to a question of whether city or country types go best on the stage, George Ade always has a word to say. Any one who has seen "The County Chairman" and "The College Widow" can pretty safely predict on which side of the balance that word will be thrown.

"In town," declares Mr. Ade, "where we are living more closely year by year according to cut and dried rule, the tendency is to clamp all men and women into the same mold—that is, men and women of the same class, the same social plane. The average 'nice family' of the city is pretty much like the other nice families that attend the same church, go to the same parties, and spin around in the same limited orbit.

"The women seem to have their gowns cut from one large piece of cloth by the same fashionable modiste who used to be a dressmaker—and a man's only chance of attracting attention to himself is to wear a Tuxedo now and then where the proprieties call for full dress. Of course we have the extremes of society and any number of picturesque types in a large city, but these extremes seldom meet except in melodrama.

"On the other hand, the real essence of country life is a sound, sweet, democracy. Out there the rows of human beings are set further apart, and each planted mortal may branch out and blossom without being choked by conventionalities. Still, however luxuriantly he may grow, he cannot escape his homely surroundings. A man in a country town does not find it pleasant to bloom all by himself. The true democracy planned by our forefathers still survives in the quilting bee and the Saturday night gathering at the 'general store.' The big man of the town is always 'Joe' or 'Lige' to his neighbors, and they discuss his wholesome respect for his wealth in doings with freedom and gusto. A no wise influences their candid opinions of his character.

"In a country town every man is under scrutiny most of the time, and the community soon sums him up pretty accurately. On Broadway a man may command a certain respect by wearing well-made clothes and having a clean shave every morning. In a small town he must carry a few goods back of the show window, or even the little boys who play about the railway station will have found out that he is a fraud. The man who travels with little but his wardrobe usually scorns any city whose population is under 200,000. He knows that he really doesn't amount to much of anything except in a crowd. Put him out where simple folk can walk around him and size him up from different angles and he is lost.

"The small town may have a shut-in horizon and a good many narrow opinions of the great world outside, but it has its charm and its admirable dramatic values for everybody that hasn't got himself so horribly up-to-date that he has lost all interest in simple things. I always think of a country town as a neglected, old-fashioned garden, full of a tangle of hollyhocks, morning glories, bachelor buttons, azaleas, phlox, and old-fashioned yellow roses. Some of these flowers are not fragrant, and not all are beautiful as compared with hothouse American Beauties, but after a season of conservatory products whether before or behind the footlights—what a relief!"

And That's No Joke.

IMPRESSING A MANAGER.

One Playwright's Novel Experience in an Unusual Role.

M. CLAUDE ROLAND, the author of the French version of "Are You a Mason?" which is in its three hundredth preformance at the Théatre Cluny, in Paris, and which is touring the provinces as well, had an amusing adventure the other day. The duties of a French playwright begin, rather than end, when one of his plays is accepted by a manager, for he is expected to superintend rehearsals, look after the engagement of the artists, see to the painting of the scenery, and make himself generally useful. M. Roland has just finished a fairy play which is to be produced at Troyes, and he was on his way there to discuss some details with the manager. On his arrival at the station he found one of the "Francsmacons" companies in the same train, bound for Mulhausen, where a performance was to be given that same evening. The manager of the touring company was in a quandary. One of the actors had overslept himself, and the train was starting. "You are our guardian angel," said the manager, who had been unfolding his tale to M. Claude Roland.

"A guardian angel? Because I travel as far as Troyes with you?" asked the astonished playwright.

"Mais, non! because you will go on to Mulhausen and play the part for us," explained the manager.

Then, in the corridor of the train, after some protests and some bashfulness, the oddest imaginable rehearsal took place, and when the train arrived at Troyes M. Roland explained to the manager, who was there on the platfrom waiting for him, that he had signed for one night only at Mulhausen, and that their interview must wait. Luckily, the missing actor's luggage was on the train, and luckily, too, M. Claude Roland, who had never acted in his life, had learned his part. The other members of the company helped him to make up, and he was the success of a successful evening. At the end of the performance the manager of the Mulhausen Theatre went on to the stage and congratulated the company. He was particularly pleasant to M. Roland, whose identity he did not suspect in the least.

"Mon garcon," he said, "you have the true sense of the comical. Tiens! I am friends with the manager of the Théatre Cluny in Paris, and when I go to Paris I will ask him to introduce me to M. Claude Roland, and I will tell him about you."

MUSIC AND MUSIC MAKERS

New Compositions Heard This Season

Formidable List of First Performances in Orchestral, Choral, and Chamber Works and Concerted Pieces.

THE season that is now closing has brought forth a number of new works that have attracted more or less attention on the part of the musical public, although it must be said that few of them have the stamp of masterpieces. No new work has been produced by the Philharmonic Society; for the "guest" conductors all came with specialties and hobbies which they conceived would enable them to appear to the best advantage in better known music. It is hardly to be expected that a conductor should come 3,000 miles to risk his success in the presentation of a new work to a public with whose tastes and judgment he is unfamiliar. On the other hand, the Russian Orchestra, almost by the terms of its existence, is committed to the production of many new orchestral pieces. It brought a considerable number forward in its seven concerts; but not one of them demonstrated itself as a neglected masterpiece that would be overlooked in the usual course of normal concert-giving. The coming of Mr. Vincent d'Indy was the occasion for producing much modern French music, some of which had not been heard before, and much of which had been. The New York Symphony Orchestra played several new works; but its course was not rash nor radical. On the whole, New York has been less fully kept in touch with the new productions of living composers than it was in the older days, but on the other hand there is less to regret. The days when new compositions by Brahms, Tschaikowsky, Dvorak, could be awaited, and were put before New York audiences as early as, and often earlier than, before the audiences of Berlin, Vienna or London, are not as these days.

The rather remarkable increase of activity in the field of chamber music is one of the most interesting developments of the season. It has brought forward some excellent organizations, although they have not found it easy to secure in the beginning a large measure of public support. They have together put a very respectable collection of new chamber works into their records.

Nor is a large measure of public support forthcoming for most of the choral societies. The old story of "The Messiah" performances, supporting the Oratorio Society through the year in its presentation of less hackneyed works, is repeated. Its other concerts have been fairly but not largely supported, and its superb performance of Beethoven's "Mass in D," a memorable occasion in musical annals, did not arouse the public interest it should have. The Musical Art Society still keeps undiminished the remarkable support with which it started out; and it makes perhaps as deep an impression as any of the musical activities of New York. The new choral works that were produced were chiefly those given by the Musical Art Society.

WOMAN ORGANIST AT CHURCH OF EPIPHANY.

It is nearly as difficult, those who know say, for a woman to get the position of organist in a large city church as for the proverbial camel to pass through the eye of the needle. Men are preferred, and a woman, as a rule, is not able to get even a hearing when she makes application for an organ position. In out-of-town churches women are doing good work, but in New York the women filling large church positions could be counted on one hand. These things give a special interest to the appointment of the new organist of the Baptist Church of the Epiphany, Miss Magdalen S. Worden.

Miss Worden was for several years the organist of the Lexington Avenue Baptist Church. Recently she has been devoting herself to teaching and composition, one of the leading publishing houses bringing out popular songs by her as fast as she could write them. With her other work Miss Worden is studying counterpoint and orchestration with Max Spicker, the composer and director of the music at the Temple Emanu-El. She is of French descent, and her work has been compared to that of her illustrious compatriot, Mlle. Chaminade.

IN THE ORGAN LOFT.

THERE is to be an entire change in the personnel of the choir of the Baptist Church of the Epiphany the 1st of May, and the following quartet has been engaged to sing, under the direction of Townsend H. Fellows: Mrs. Willis A. Turnbull, soprano; Mrs. J. Corwin Salter, contralto; S. Ward, tenor, and H. A. Spaulding, bass. Miss Magdalen S. Worden will be the new organist.

Mr. Fellows is the bass soloist in the Church of the Incarnation, (Madison Avenue and Thirty-fifth Street,) and will sing at the Church of the Epiphany only on Sunday evenings. He has previously sung at the Bloomingdale Reformed and First Baptist Churches. Mrs. Turnbull was at one time the soprano at the First Baptist Church, but has not been doing church music this past year. Mrs. Salter leaves the First United Presbyterian Church, 108th Street, to go to the Church of the Epiphany. Messrs. Ward and Spaulding are young men of promise, who have been pupils of Mr. Fellows.

Miss Magdalen S. Worden, the New Organist at the Baptist Church of the Epiphany.

A large chorus has been organized to augment the choir for special monthly musical services. It already numbers forty, and other singers are invited to join for the practice. Griffith W. Griffith is the leader. The chorus meets Wednesday evening after the regular prayer meeting, and is now practicing the cantata "Nicodemus," which is to be given Sunday evening, May 20.

A special feature of the music, under the new conditions, will be the singing of Gospel songs by Mrs. Turnbull and Mr. Fellows, selected with special reference to the sermons. Many familiar tunes will be sung, and the choir will lead the congregation in hearty congregational singing.

A special and interesting musical service is to be given at St. George's Church, Stuyvesant Square (Homer Norris, organist) this evening. There is to be a recitative written and arranged by Mr. Norris for Mr. Burleigh, the church's famous baritone, with selections from Wagner, Handel, Gounod, and Roberts to emphasize the incidents connected with the resurrection and ascension. Portions of the "Mary Magdalene" of Massenet will also be given. The processional will be another special arrangement by Mr. Norris, the "King's Prayer," from "Lohengrin," set to the hymn "Ride on, Ride on in Majesty." The soloists will be Miss Roth, Miss Armstrong, Mr. Burleigh, and Mr. Price.

There was a big Easter crowd at the Church of St. Mary the Virgin in spite of the storm last Sunday morning, and the music went with spirit, though some of the performers were in drenched clothes. There are a number of high festivals on the church calendar, which will be celebrated with special musical features before the close of the elaborate musical work of the church, which this year will be on Trinity Sunday, June 10. The chorus and orchestra are then given a vacation.

AMERICAN TENOR MAKES A HIT ABROAD.

IT is not a strange thing for an American girl to get into opera nowadays and gain recognition in Europe. Many have done it. But it is quite unusual for an American tenor to make his way on the Continent. Few have succeeded in that task. One who has won his way in Italy and will try to conquer other fields next season has come to New York to visit his family and tell his old friends of romantic experiences abroad. He went away almost five years ago as Hugh Whitfield Martin. He returns Richard Martin, because the Frenchmen pronounced his real name more like the grunt of a pig than anything else. The lucky chance of the interest of a wealthy pupil in his voice led him to go abroad. Luck led him to Italy. Luck gave him a chance to sing in Milan, and in one season he gained such favor that he will go to Rome and Lisbon in the coming season, and probably to other European capitals.

Mr. Martin is a New Yorker. Five years ago he was a music teacher and tenor of the First Presbyterian Church in Yonkers. He had also studied composition under Mr. MacDowell for four years, and some of his songs have been published not only in America but abroad. Through his teaching he got the opportunity to go abroad and take up his studies for the opera. A wealthy man of New York sought a teacher of music, and was sent to Mr. Martin. After studying with him for some time the pupil suggested that Mr. Martin should not confine himself to the career on which he had entered. The result was an arrangement whereby the pupil made it possible for the tenor to go to Paris and pursue his studies for three years and to gain an entrance into the operatic field.

"I spent three years in the study of French répertoire," said Mr. Martin, in telling of his experiences. "Finally, a year ago last October, I made my début in Nantes in 'Faust,' and also sang in 'Romeo and Juliet.' It happened that the second conductor of the opera took an interest in me. He was an Italian, and he said I ought to sing in Italian. He kept arguing with me and offering to assist me in every way he could if I would take up Italian répertoire. I decided to do so, and after the engagement at Nantes went to Milan, and there came into contact with Maestro Cannone, who got me my chance to sing in opera.

"Fortunately when I went there I was not known as an American, but was regarded as a French tenor. Americans have spoiled the whole music field of Italy for Americans. So many of them have been ready to sing for nothing at all, or even to pay money to make appearances in opera that the Italians expect now to be paid for anything they do for an American. They think we are simply made of money. It is really a matter much to be regretted because such a condition makes it very hard for any American who has not the money to pay for entrance into opera, but is compelled to depend upon the pay he or she may get. Such singers are not welcomed in the Italian field now, and it is a pity, because the Italian field is the best for one who wishes to get experience in opera. There are companies constantly about where a singer can work out his problems and make both ends meet at the same time—if he is not known as an American.

"However, as I say, when I went to Milan I was known as a French singer, and I was advised not to disabuse the minds of any one on that score until I had made my way. I did not. The result was that this last season I had an opportunity to make my début in Verona, and also to sing in Milan at the Dal Verme Theatre in 'Andrea Chénier.' In Verona it happened that I was the only tenor who was able to sing whenever called upon, and consequently 'Andrea Chénier' was put on the bill eighteen times in thirty days, and I sang the tenor rôle, a difficult feat when one has not been long in opera. It was worth while, however, for I was the only man in the company for whom an evening in special, as they call it, a performance especially to honor an artist, was given. When I went to Milan I had the same experience in being the only man in the company so honored, which of course was very gratifying."

Mr. Martin prizes a broad red ribbon which had been tied around the huge laurel wreath that was presented to him by the management on the night of his special performance in Milan. It is inscribed to him as the "supreme interpreter" of Andrea Chénier.

"But I had my trouble at Milan," Mr. Martin went on. "It happened that another tenor had been engaged for the rôle, but almost at the last moment it was decided by the holder of the rights in the opera that he would not do. I was the only tenor who could take the rôle on such short notice, and so I had my opportunity. But at that time I was suffering severely with the grip. I ached in every bone, and had a fever, and my doctor advised me that it would not do for me to go on. However, I went on, almost covered with porous plasters.

"The moment I entered I felt the resentment of the friends of the tenor whose place I had taken. A body of men were in the gallery, and when I appeared they began whistling against keys so as to make a long, hissing noise. It was some time before I could sing. When I had finished the hissing went on again, but I had the satisfaction of gaining the applause of the people in the lower part of the house.

"Each time I came on after that the hissing began again, but before long I had the audience in my favor. Some of the people stood up in the pit and called out to the men in the gallery and accused them of being hired to disconcert me. Then in the gallery men who liked what I had done undertook to silence the hisses, and fights took place several times. Twice the orchestra had to stop five minutes or more while these disturbances were being quieted.

"I assure you it was a trying time for me, and I had to use all my strength to get through. But before the end of the evening the hissing had been completely silenced and I knew I had gained my point. That night ended the trouble. I was told that I might expect other hostile demonstrations, but no more came. And all during the engagement I was well treated, and had the happiness of being honored with a special evening. My first week was the hardest of all, because the grip remained with me and between performances I had to remain in bed, but I managed to sing every time I was needed."

Mr. Martin was to have gone to Odessa for the opera this season, but when the time approached he was informed that, because of the revolutionary disorders in that Russian city, there would be no opera. Next Autumn he will return to Verona for a month with the privilege of choosing the operas in which he will appear. He will then go to Rome, where he will sing in the Adriano Theatre. For the Winter season he will be with the Royal Italian Opera Company at the San Carlos Opera House in Lisbon, where he will appear in "Romeo and Juliet," "Armide," and "The Damnation of Faust," among other operas.

"I am not seeking an opportunity to be heard in America yet," said Mr. Martin. "Of course, I shall want to be heard in New York when I am ready, but not till I am ready. Too many Americans expect to make a big place in opera too soon. They go abroad and study a year or two, and then expect high places. They are not willing to spend the proper time in fitting themselves. So while a few succeed and make big places for themselves, hundreds on hundreds fail. I was ready to spend several years in small Italian companies getting experience, and had I not been so fortunate I would have done so. As it is I do not intend to return until I am ready."

DE PROFUNDIS.

(Out of the Subway.)

SOME time I tell ma leetla Jim,
  "Bimeby your pa he sava da mon',
(If Subway train no killa him
  An' make da orphan of his son.")
Some time I tell him, "You old pa
Soon take you to Italia."

One day my friend Giovanni fall,
  Da black cloud rushin' over him;
Express train cut him up, an' all
  Da worl' to me it seem so dim.
For great, big fear come over me,
Because my Jim he'd lonely be.

I know Giovanni well, an' he
  Is have at home, two, three, four, five
Sweet, little, black-eyed bambini,
  An' now dere pa is not alive.
They cry and hees wife sob hees name—
Some day shall train strike me da same?

I tell ma leetla Jim, I say,
  "Ma leetla fel', soon we will go
From this America away,
  To where da trains is very slow."
An' he say back in Engleesh, "Pa,
Let's go to dear Italia."

Dis leetla Jim show in hees eyes—
  Da big, black eyes, just like his pa—
He want to see Napoli skies,
  He want to know Italia.
He just like leetla shepherd boy,
Hees smile it fill his pa with joy.

So deesa leetla Jim I see
  All time I work on Subway track,
Da whistle always botherin' me
  To make me hop like jumpin'-jack.
But I no quit dees gooda place,
Because I love his pretty face.

But in da pape I read dees day
  (O, Mater Beatissima!)
Some more of trouble come da way
  Of my belov'd Italia;
I read da people is crush down
By lava from da mountain crown.

I tell ma leetla Jim, I say,
"I guess dees country we mus' stay!"

The World of Art and Artists

Practical Aid for Public Museums

Will the Floating Talk of a Society to Encourage Our Art Collections Reach the Active Stage?

MUSEUMS get their appellation from the Muses; but in the peregrinations of the word from Athens to Asia Minor and Egypt, thence to Italy and Northern Europe, what changes in conception have taken place! Even at Alexandria, where so many ideas of the ancients were dislocated, recast, and given a modern air, the Museum was an outdoor meeting place, not a building, a quiet plaisaunce for philosophers, who were only too apt to regard the professors of the fine arts as little better than carpenters and house painters. The grammarians of the Middle Ages were scarcely more civil to artists and their wares, reserving their interest for such descriptions of art works as the classical authorities deigned to set down. It has ended by the specializing of a term derived from the nine symbolical attendants on Apollo into a definite idea of a building where the finest products of hand and brain are protected from harm and arranged so that the greatest possible number of people can examine them.

No wonder that we must have a term to denote so modern an idea as the democratization of art! It is easier to turn an old word to special use than to invent a new one; and this is not the only case in which the people laid hold of a word that once implied an aristocracy of intellect or of rank and bent it to their own uses, little caring whether it fitted perfectly or not. Each generation has seized on the ruins of the past and built from the debris its own houses or palaces—with more or less care for consistency. Until recently, scholarship and learning could still employ that other Attic term "academy" for the place of resort of teachers and their pupils but here again the arts have intervened; the word academy is disappearing before school, college, and university, at least where English is spoken, and so to most ears academy also implies the idea of art.

Such a shifting of the popular meaning attributed to words is a sign. The arts have been growing steadily in popular favor. In New York, for example, people say "the Museum," meaning the Metropolitan, and when the scientific collections are intended, add "of Natural History." And in France when they speak of the national museums they think of the collections of art works in the Louvre first of all, and then of the other art museums of Paris and the smaller cities. Seeing how strong a hold art has taken upon the popular imagination in Europe, it is not surprising that organizations outside are springing up to encourage these great forces of liberal education by adding rare objects to their treasures. Such auxiliary societies are a very remarkable product of modern times and perhaps are inconceivable in epochs when the study and love of art was confined to an aristocracy of birth or of intellect.

There are the Société des Amis du Louvre in France, and the more recent organization in London to add costly works to the national collections of Great Britain and Ireland. German cities often have unions which buy native paintings and sculptures and present them to the local museum; indeed, Germany may be said to have led the way, although we do not hear so much of these unions as we do of the societies in Paris and London.

The possibility of some such outside organization, working steadily to fill the gaps in our art museums, has been considered very often in THE TIMES; but hitherto nothing definite has pointed that way. Latterly, however, the subject has been discussed among collectors and artists, many of whom think that conditions are good for a movement in that direction. As usual in such matters, the objections are advanced first. If such a society were formed to assist the Metropolitan alone, would it not meet with coldness from those more interested in other collections? If it were quite local, even if it did engage to spread its gifts to the Natural History Museum, the New York Historical, the Hispanic, and Numismatic, then perhaps it would not find favor with the prominent art lovers and patrons elsewhere in the Union.

The French prototype distinctly aims at the Louvre collections. But then there is a system by which works of art are passed from the Louvre to provincial museums. The British example works for the "national collections," and these include the art galleries of Edinburgh and Dublin. Were we to be as magnificently comprehensive, the society would have to spread its benefactions over Washington and half a dozen great cities of the Union.

It is discouraging to those who bring forward a fine idea to be met at the start with objections, but they are inevitable, and in the end wholesome. When the moment comes for crystallizing the floating talk into the enterprise itself, it may be found that such desultory discussion and magnifying of obstacles shall have served a good purpose. What we need now is the expression of opinion, even if it be one so image-breaking as that of an artist who asserts that "museums are no good, because they never made a master." It is a fact that in 1806, when the British Parliament was asked to buy the collection of Julius J. Angerstein, which formed the nucleus of the National Gallery, many artists opposed the grant vehemently; John Constable with special violence. But so also they flouted the marbles from the Parthenon, and relegated them to obscurity for many years.

We need not apprehend an attitude of this kind from our artists generally, for two reasons. Large numbers of them are traveled and cultured—and the movement does not spring, as in 1806, from people indifferent or hostile to modern and native art. Quite the contrary. The likelihood is that a society of the sort would be chary of old and ancient art and spend its energies rather too exclusively on the purchase of works by the masters of the day. Let us hope that it would not follow in the footsteps of the Royal Academy and accumulate the poorest modern work, as we see it done by the Academicians with the income from the Chantrey bequest.

In the Pictorial Supplement.

OUR illustrations in the Pictorial Supplement to-day contain a good reproduction of the painting by George Romney which Mr. Otto Kahn bought of Scott & Fowles for a price which is said to be in the neighborhood of $75,000. The chief beauty of this triple portrait of the children of Capt. Little is the boy in black velvet, who stands to the left of his younger sisters as if he had just joined the group. The little girls are examining a book. His lovely face and ingenuous look cause the sisters to pale before his charms. He is of an age when a boy may have the soft contours and rich coloring of a woman, along with the suggestion of manly strength to come. Hence from ancient times the painters and sculptors have exercised their skill in portraying Cupids, angels, and St. Sebastians with all the charms of that undeveloped period. Perhaps the composition as a group is not impeccable from the classic point of view, but the boy and the coloring disarm such hypercritical thoughts.

⁂

Recently there was printed on this page an interesting conversation with Mr. George B. Barse on the question of the symbolical in art, and to-day in the Pictorial Supplement we give an example of one of his pastels called "Day Dreams." In the reproduction one can still detect what is so clear in the original—the expression of relaxation in figures and faces which comes with the state of mind called "brown study" or "absentness." What is also noteworthy is the study of line shown by the picture, as well as the attractive composition in a group comprising two figures similarly but not identically posed. Mr. Barse is one of the few painters who believe in the old canons of art and scorn to evade the difficulties which beset those who attempt ideal and symbolical figures with little drapery or disguise.

Three notable painters of New York are shown in their studios. Mr. Dielman is now the President of an academy practically enlarged by the membership of the Society of American Artists; his presidency is marked by the most radical step ever taken by the National Academy of Design. Just as the venerable figure of Daniel Huntington disappears from the art world of New York—a man who held the Presidency of the Academy for many years, and could almost recall the beginnings of things in the academy in which he took such pride—that organization moves into a new sphere of work.

Mr. Carroll Beckwith represents the Society rather than the Academy, though he has relations to both organizations. Like the late Mr. Huntington, he has found portraiture more grateful than genre. Mr. Frank V. Du Mond belongs to a distinctly younger set of painters, who are finding in mural pictures what the older generation found in genre—a chance to employ all the resources of the profession without fearing that any of their skill need go a-begging.

On the theatrical page is a reproduction of a painting by Millais representing Portia in the "Merchant of Venice," which has been added to the Metropolitan Museum. She is a gracious figure, though it can hardly be said that in it Millais has added anything new to our conception of the character. A question that interests most people is the question of identity in the model. Is this a portrait of Miss Ellen Terry or not? She does not look like the portrait of Miss Terry as a girl in her teens, seated beside her elder sister, as George Frederick Watts depicted her. But this of course would represent a much later date, after the actress had made her mark.

⁂

On this page we give the portrait of Benjamin Franklin, by Charles Wilson Peale, restored to Philadelphia through the kindness of Earl Grey, its British owner. Although it has little merit as a work of art and fails to give any hint of the character of the man, it has great historical value, and finds its proper place in the city with whose Colonial glories Franklin will always remain identified.

Current Matters of Art

ELEVATORS are not the first things planned by architects of art museums and galleries, but they will be hereafter. The Louvre has a single elevator on the Rue de Rivoli side, where the Decorative Arts have found a home in the Pavillon de Marsan, and the result is that a clamor smites the skies to have elevators established in the sections on the Seine. It is a weary tramping up and down hard stone stairs that one must undergo in order to see many of the treasures of the Louvre, and another matter that causes acute anguish to the tourist is the smooth waxed floor over which they have to skate when examining the finest pictures.

Scared by the possibilities of fire in the Louvre, the Minister in charge has issued an order that all woodwork and furniture must be fireproof. The copyists who earn their bread with more or less clumsy repetitions of famous paintings, the students who are not afraid of ruining their magnificent genius by transcribing an old master on canvas, learn with dismay that even their easels and stretchers must be of treated wood, warranted not to burst into flame. A large body of rapins in sombreros, Panama hats, and the peculiar flat-brimmed beavers affected by denizens of the Quartier Latin stormed the office of the Minister the other day and proclaimed themselves in mutiny against this decree. What seems to have hurt their feelings particularly is the fact that easels, paints, palettes, canvases, and brushes must at a certain hour be delivered up and placed over night in a fireproof room! Efforts are being made to oust the Minister of Colonies and the Minister of Finance from their offices in the Louvre. It is from the direction of their bureaus that a dangerous conflagration is feared.

Don Carlos, the burly King of Portugal, is a thoroughly educated painter, having been a pupil of Fonseca of the Lisbon Academy of the Arts, who kept drilling him in drawing four years before he allowed him to touch colors. He had become thoroughly weary of this monotonous work when one day Fonseca presented him with a box of colors and said: "Your Majesty is now a finished draughtsman, and will undoubtedly become a finished painter. Hereafter your Majesty can indulge himself in color to the top of his bent." And as a matter of fact, hunting and painting are his chief recreations, though he is also active in the study of deep-sea zoology. During a recent visit to Paris the King paid a visit to the atelier of Rodin, who afterward said of him: "What a pity that Dom Carlos had to be a King! Otherwise he might have become a great painter."

After he returned to Lisbon, about New Year's, the people who had entertained him in Paris, from President Loubet down, received New Year's cards painted by him, on which were the congratulations of the season. As Carmen Sylva is the foremost royalty in literature, Dom Carlos is the most proficient royalty in painting, although the German Emperor has no little talent in water-colors, and there are others who pursue the delightful work as a hobby. Two years ago the Lisbon Art Exhibition gave him a gold medal for a painting of a Morocco warrior, which is said to have won the distinction legitimately, and not because the jury wished to flatter the titular head of the Government. At the last international in Paris his painting of Portuguese fisher folk was considered worthy of serious criticism. He has painted excellent portraits of Princess Eulalie, sister of Alfonso of Spain, and others.

It is in Autumn, when he retires to his hunting castle at Cascaes, says a correspondent of the Vossische Zeitung of Berlin, that he finds time to paint in oils and water-colors, for there he can ramble about with easel and camp stool. He likes to paint the pretty girls and matrons of the farmers, and they are as eager to be painted as he is to paint. One day he received a letter from an unknown feminine hand stating that the writer was about to be married. Would he grant her the favor of presenting her with her portrait as a marriage gift? On looking up the matter he found that as a fact he had painted the young woman, who was a village beauty. Accordingly she was invited to the castle—"summoned" is the proper term when royalties are concerned—and the likeness duly presented by the painter-King. The precedent once established, others have not failed to follow her example, so that at any moment Dom Carlos is liable to receive a deeply respectful begging letter asking for another gift from his portfolios.

An old Dutch painter of whom little more than his name was known and the further fact that he was the master of Van der Helst, has leaped into fame at the sale of E. M. Denny's pictures in London. At first two portraits of exceptional beauty were catalogued as by Nicolas Elias; later it was discovered that he was Nicolaes Eliasz Pickenoy or Nick Pickenoy, son of Elias, an old Amsterdam painter well represented in the Ryks-Museum, who lived between 1580 and 1650. He was therefore an older man than but a contemporary of Rembrandt. The collector Denny was an Irish Captain of Industry, not unbeholden to bacon for his wealth, who used to appear at the auction sales in a state of apparent sleepiness bordering on imbecility; but he had a way of waking up at the psychic moment and capturing big prizes for small sums. The two Nicolass Pickenoys he got for $500; they were sold just now at Crystie's for $15,500. Gainsborough's portrait of Viscountess Tracy in a deep blue robe, with the air of a grande dame, was bought by Denny in 1895 for $7,500. At the sale this likeness brought $31,500.

⁂

They Stop Our Advance in Art

Artist back from Europe Says Public Taste and the Minds of Children Are Depraved by Vulgar and Ill-Printed Illustrations.

MUNICH is a great centre for artists still, notwithstanding the attractions of Paris. The return of Mr. Albert Sterner from a sojourn of five years in the Bavarian capital suggested some inquiry concerning things artistic there, but the conversation developed on American questions.

Mr. Sterner is a well-known illustrator, has contributed for years to the American Water Color Society, and has often exhibited with the Society of American Artists. Last year he received the Gold Medal at the International in Munich for "Harold and the Deer Hound," an oil painting of his little son and pet dog. Although born in America and identified with New York, he exhibited with the Germans. His pictures for Mrs. Ward's "Marriage of William Ashe" have received great encomiums in England. Just now his illustrations of her "Fenwick's Career" have continued the interest.

Seated in the National Arts Club in a corner whence there was no escape, Mr. Sterner surrendered at last to the interviewer.

"Munich? Why, Munich is as delightful as ever—more so, I feel, as I look back and recall how warm and spontaneous was the welcome I received and how pleasant is the spirit of the art guild—call it esprit de corps, if you will—which animates the men there. Perhaps along with the delectable Bavarian beer I have imbibed ideas which will not stand the test of the home atmosphere, but you may have them for what they are worth."

"What of the Secession of which we hear so much?"

"It is absolutely unimportant."

"How so?"

"Unimportant because the old school from which it seceded no longer exists. Munich still has 'groups,' to be sure. There are some of the old men left, but they have felt the touch of the Secession and can scarcely be called academical any more. Then there is the Luitpold Gruppe, named from the Prince Regent, artists who may be said to represent a modified Secessionism. I should not compare them with the academical painters and sculptors in North Germany who look to the Emperor for commissions and honors."

"Who are the leaders now?"

"Oh, Franz Stuck, Habermann, and Fritz von Uhde, who, by the way, has given up his religious themes and gone over into Pleinairism. No one has quite taken the place of Lenbach, but there is still old Franz Defregger and there is Kaulbach."

"And what of Jugend and the Jugendstil, what of Simplicissimus and the artists who illustrate it?"

"There you touch me. Those illustrated papers manage to concentrate a band of artists and writers who in some respects produce better results than anything else we have in modern times. I often think that Munich depends more on them for her fame as a centre of the arts than on the old painters or the museums—the Pinakothek and Glyptothek—and the modern shows in Glas-Palast and Künstler-haus."

"How do our illustrated magazines and newspapers strike you on your return?"

"Don't ask me—they are terrible!"

"? ? ? ?"

"That everlasting Girl—she makes me ill. Those mawkish cartoons, those driveling pages in the style of 'Buster Brown,' * * * how can a public of supposedly reasonable beings stand such twaddly counterfeit of wit and humor? Is all the public an ass? Or have I lost my own sense of the ridiculous?"

"Such things sometimes happen. But explain."

"As I look about me on my return I feel as if we were being swamped by a mass of pretty-pretty trash. If we only had a periodical which united the best points of Jugend and Simplicissimus it might stem the flood of blithering nonsense which is ruining the public taste."

"You think our illustrated press harmful?"

"A large part of it, yes. For the last ten years our boys and girls have been fed on this badly drawn, badly painted, and vile slush. How do you expect the next generation to have any ideas of sound art if they have been brought up on such stuff?"

"But it is not rotten or obscene."

"True. I do not indorse some of the things they publish in Simplicissimus, but I believe that such occasional improprieties are not so dangerous as the kind of sloppy thing we get here."

"You think, then, that these Munich publications are educational?"

"Yes, in matters of art, at any rate. Jugend, Simplicissimus, and Fliegende Blätter form a running satiric comment on events political, literary, and artistic. In a highly intellectual way they swing the whip with their pictures and their text. It could be done here, for we have the talent; but the publishers will not allow it. They are after the boys and girls, the uneducated and ignorant, the man in the street."

"It may do no good, but what harm is there in it?"

"Double harm. In the first place it accustoms the growing generation to bad drawing, worse color, and inane jokes. In the second it encourages contempt of parents and teachers."

"What is your main charge?"

"That our illustrations lack virility, or, to use a German word, Derbheit, which I do not translate "coarseness," but downrightness, masculinity. Look at many of our illustrations in magazines and books—figures meaning nothing, doing nothing, just stuck in to have an illustration! Repetition, repetition, repetition. The same old attitudes—the same girl with her chin up, the same impossible tailor-made young athlete."

"What's the matter with the publishers?"

"They think God has imparted knowledge, to them and to no others, of what exactly the public wants. Having made money, they are like our other rich men; they think they know it all."

"You think they are in a rut?"

"That's it. Here we have everything—talent, energy, exhibitions well got up and well hung, and we are met by absolute indifference and irreverence on the part of the people for the higher thing. Why? I believe it is owing chiefly to the vast swash of wretched stuff in the papers, the only things they see, which they take for art."

"What offends you most in the book and magazine illustrations?"

"A terrible overniceness in place of real refinement; sweetness and soft prettiness in place of strength—and so all character and power lost. One doesn't see that over there. I feel that we are like a garden clogged with weeds, and the editors and publishers like the weeds because they think they pay. * * *

"What prevents a big uplift in art here is the amount of 'rotten' pictures which vitiates public taste. No country is better prepared for a sounder art; none has finer material to work with. We ought to weed our garden. In some way we must suppress the enormous output of pictorial matter which is vulgar from the aesthetic standpoint, and in every way unworthy of this great country."

In the preface to the forthcoming "Fenwick's Career" in book form Mrs. Ward has spoken very warmly of the illustrations by Mr. Sterner. His view of the poverty of our illustrated press and its effect on growing minds should be pondered and discussed.

What the Artists Are Doing

ELIOT DAINGERFIELD will leave town on May 20 for his studio at Blowing Rock, N. C., to resume work on the last of his large decorations for the chapel of the Church of St. Mary the Virgin. In addition to this and another commission he is to give occasional criticisms through the Summer to some young women from the Philadelphia School of Design, who will spend three months in the neighborhood of Mr. Daingerfield's studio.

⁂

Kenyon Cox has left town for Iowa, where he is to superintend the placing of his eight lunettes that are to go in the arches of the rotunda of the State Capitol.

⁂

J. W. Marble has been working on a portrait of Miss Fay Davis, for which the actress sat during the last two weeks of her engagement in this city. The portrait is a small full length, the actress being represented seated in a big chair over which is thrown a green opera cloak lined with white satin. Her gown is white, and a touch of color is added by an American Beauty rose pinned to the waist and a book bound in green covers that she holds in her hand.

⁂

J. Scott Hartley has gone to Montclair for the Summer and is at work in his studio on a bas-relief family portrait.

⁂

In his studio in the Sherwood, William J. Baer is putting the finishing touches on a three-quarter length portrait of Dr. Gilbert C. Greenway of Hot Springs, Ark. He has been relieving his eyes from the strain of miniature painting by working on a scene in Central Park.

⁂

Miss Helen Watson Phelps is to sail for Paris on May 23 for a Summer's stay in the French capital, where she has taken a studio. Miss Phelps goes abroad with the prospects of a busy three months before her, since she has several commissions in hand to paint portraits while in Paris.

⁂

W. Glackens is going to Newfoundland in June for a stay of two months. In addition to seeing the country and getting in some fishing he proposes to do a little sketching "on the side."

⁂

The Sculpture Society is not letting any grass grow beneath its feet in its efforts to make its exhibition next Fall a success. The committee in charge of the arrangements have just sent out requests to all the members of the society asking for information as to what they can be counted on to send to the show.

⁂

Another art society that has not forgotten there is much to be done before the next season of shows comes around is the American Society of Miniature Painters, which has decided that unless there promises to be a better representation of its members' works for the next annual show the society will not hold one. This decision is the result of the dissatisfaction over the preponderance of indifferent work shown at the last exhibition.

⁂

Augustus Lukeman will leave for his Summer home and studio early in May to begin work on an important commission he has just received. His heroic statue for the new Custom House on Bowling Green will be put in place in about three weeks.

⁂

Daniel C. French is to leave for his Summer home at Glendale, Mass., in May, where he is to complete his two groups for the new Custom House at Cleveland. Mr. French's equestrian statue of Gen. Devens is being cast in bronze and is to be unveiled at Worcester, Mass., on July 4. Another of his works that is to be put in permanent form this Summer is a duplicate in sheet copper of the quadriga that stood on the water gate at the Columbian Exposition. It is to form one of the sculptural ornaments of the new State Capitol at St. Paul.

⁂

As a result of his recent trip to Aiken, S. C., Robert Henri has been showing in his studio this week a large portrait group of the three children of Mrs. George Sheffield, which he painted in her home in that Winter resort. The children, dressed in white, stand in a garden against a tall hedge of Japanese quince, whose brilliant red flowers add touches of color to the canvas. Since they are all fair-haired and bear a striking resemblance to each other, the problem presented to the artist of saving the group from monotony could only be worked out by a careful study of personalities, and this he has done with signal success. Mr. Henri is going abroad in June as the artistic guide to a party of students who are to spend three months in Spain and Holland. Two of these months are to be spent in Madrid.

H. N. Hyneman has just sold to a Western buyer a recent canvas called "A Passing Glance," one of his characteristic city scenes, the glimpse being that of a smartly dressed woman who is about to step into her victoria in the Park. One of his ideal heads, "Lucille," has been placed on exhibition in Knoedler's. Mr. Hyneman is going to the Adirondacks in July for the Summer.

Talk of the Studios

FRANK D. MILLET is designing a series of war medals for the United States Government. Among the portraits upon which Mr. Millet is engaged is a three-quarter length likeness of President Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia University, life size. He wears a collegiate robe of black, and stands holding in one hand a manuscript.

Mr. Millet returned from Washington, D. C., recently, where he went as a delegate from the National Academy of Design with other delegates appointed by leading art institutions of this country, to present a draft of a new copyright bill to Congress.

"The present copyright law practically offers no protection to artists," said Mr. Millet. "For example, the present copyright law does not presume ownership. In France, England, and other countries, the presumption is that the pictures are copyrighted, and that the copyright belongs to the artist. Works in the Paris Salon, for instance, are not necessarily copyrighted before an exhibition. In England they are not even obliged to register for a copyright until a controversy arises over a picture. * * * Various art institutions throughout the country have taken up the crusade in regard to improving the copyright law, and the result is that a new bill has been drafted, which artists hope will appeal to Congress, so that the property of artists and literary men may be adequately protected by law. Hitherto an artist could only bring suit for a single copy of a work found in the possession of the transgressor. This is one fault in the present law on copyrights which we hope to reform."

Mr. Millet has received a contract from the Government to decorate the new Custom House at Baltimore, Md. He also has received a commission to paint "The Entrance of the Fourth Minnesota Volunteers into Vicksburg" for the new Capitol at St. Paul, Minn. The Fourth Volunteers was one of the first regiments to make an entrance into Vicksburg during the civil war. The canvas will be about the size of "The Treaty of the Sioux," painted by Mr. Millet last year.

The Artists' Fund Society of the Salmagundi Club will hold their annual dinner and meeting in the club galleries on Tuesday evening, April 24.

Gifford Beal of Newburg-on-the-Hudson has been abroad for the past three months making numerous studies of Italian scenery in and about Naples, Rome, Florence, and Venice, which he intends to complete on his return to this country early next month.

⁂

"A Gentlewoman" and "Midday," by J. Alden Weir, two pictures exhibited by the artist at the "Society of Ten," have been purchased by William T. Evans, the collector. Mr. Weir has recently completed a landscape entitled "Chestnut Trees After a First Frost," a scene near his home at Branchville, Conn. He is also painting a full length standing nude figure entitled "Venus" in his Tenth Street studio. Mr. Weir expects to make a sketching trip to Connecticut soon, and incidentally, for diversion, will take along his fishing rod for trout.

W. Elmer Schofield of Philadelphia is at present on a sketching trip abroad, just now at St. Ives, Cornwall.

Easter ♣ Wedding ♣ Gowns

THE many weddings of the past week will be equaled only by those of the coming six days, and they in turn will be followed by several important nuptial events in May. The fair who revel in weddings, largely because of their sartorial interest, are in verbal raptures over the many charming confections already seen and anticipations of those to follow.

One of the Easter Monday weddings, that of Miss Ruth Badgley to Dr. William K. Shepard, in the Church of the Heavenly Rest, brought out a superb chiffon velvet princess wedding robe trimmed with duchess point, and an exquisite robe of white organdy embroidered in garlands of pink roses for the maid of honor, Miss Daisy Stedman.

The bride's Princess robe of white chiffon velvet had a plain skirt and a long, round train. The top was draped with point lace. The transparent lace guimpe of duchess point and point applique had a round or Dutch neck. Below this yoke came a bertha of the point lace. The elbow sleeves were flounces of point lace over short puffs of the velvet.

The bridal veil, an unusually beautiful one of two varieties of point lace, was of unusual length, being about several yards long, of scarf shape, and reached to the end of the train. It was worn by the bride's aunt, Mrs. Charles Badgley, at her wedding. This veil was draped well back from the forehead and sides, so as to show the coiffure, and was caught with natural orange blossoms. Her bouquet was made of white sweet peas and lilies of the valley.

Miss Daisy Stedman, the maid of honor, wore a large white lace hat trimmed with white flowers and pink ostrich plumes. The white organdy princess gown had elbow sleeves and a round neck. There were insertions of Irish lace in the bodice portion of this gown, and it was embroidered with small garlands of graduated pink roses. She carried sweet peas.

Mrs. Howard G. Badgley, the mother of the bride, was in a cream-colored crêpe de chine over white satin. This was also a princess or one piece robe, and the plain trailing skirt had around the bottom a very full rose ruching. The bodice had a yoke of point applique, and the elbow sleeves had flounces of the lace drooping over puffs of the crêpe. The gown was topped by a white hat trimmed with white flowers and lace.

Miss Alice C. Adenaw, who on Thursday married Martin Phillips Parks, son of the Rev. J. Lewis Parks, rector of Calvary Church, New York, and nephew of the Rev. Dr. Leighton Parks, rector of St. Bartholomew's, also deviated from the time-honored satin gown and wore a white radium silk frock trimmed with exquisite Mechlin lace. This silk has a particularly brilliant lustre suggestive of silver, and is also very soft and pliable. The gown was a shirred princess with a deep, graduated Spanish flounce forming the lower part of the skirt, and also the train portion. The shirring was above, below, and at the waist line, making a corselet effect, broken in the front, or rather veiled by the upper part of the Mechlin lace panel.

The yoke of the gown was point lace and was a deep affair, edged with a scant, narrow-frill effect, also of point lace. The Mechlin lace scarf used as the panel for the centre front was about twelve inches wide at the bottom, and was shirred in at the waist line to about three inches, the upper end being arranged in a soft knot and cascade effect at the bust line. A spray of orange blossoms was fastened carelessly against this knot.

The Spanish flounce did not cross the centre front panel section of the skirt; at the top the blouse began just at or above the knees, and in the back formed the train.

The sleeves, of elbow length, were of the silk and had point-lace cuffs.

The bridal veil was a long scarf of old point lace arranged to show the front and sides of the coiffure, and was caught with natural orange blossoms. Instead of flowers the bride carried an ivory Prayer Book.

The maid of honor, Miss Alice Grant Smith of Philadelphia, was frocked much like the bridesmaids, but her frock was white crêpe over taffeta instead of blue, and her white Neapolitan hat was trimmed with white plumes instead of flowers.

The bridesmaids were the Misses Raw Winters, Georgiana Mabry Parks, sister of the bridegroom; Katherine Jewett, Katherine Sanford, and Miss Evelyn King. Their gowns were pale blue crêpe with cloth of silver girdles, the latter being arranged in wide folds. The yokes and stocks were of Valenciennes lace insertions, laid in crosswise rows, and the elbow length sleeves were puffs of the crêpe, with the Valenciennes insertions tracing battlement effects on them. These sleeves were finished with deep cuffs formed of bands of the Valenciennes insertions, the lower edge being a border band. These cuffs came just over the elbows, long white gloves extending up to meet them.

The bodice fronts also had short boleros of pale blue messaline coming from the armholes and almost meeting in the centre. These were edged with blue silk soutache braid and were embroidered with tiny sprays of pale pink and blue flowers and delicate green leaves. The boleros were edged with Valenciennes lace and were slashed up each side, black velvet bébé ribbon crossing the slashes, there being a touch of black velvet ribbon in the rosettes on the skirt.

The skirts were shirred around the hips and had Spanish flounces headed by two folds of crêpe, and also edged at the bottom with two folds of crêpe, the latter being edged in turn with Valenciennes lace. There was also on each side of the centre front of the skirt at the top of the Spanish flounce a small rosette, showing loops of the black velvet bébé ribbon.

Their white Neapolitan hats were trimmed with pale-blue liberty satin ribbon and white narcissi, and each carried a silver basket filled with the narcissus blooms.

Mrs. Julius C. Adenaw, the mother of the bride, was in black thread lace over deep ecru-colored silk. The bodice had a deep bertha of the lace, and there was a yoke effect in gold and black. The elbow sleeves were flounces of the lace over ecru silk. Her hat, made of white tulle and fancy white straw, was trimmed with sprays of pale yellow roses.

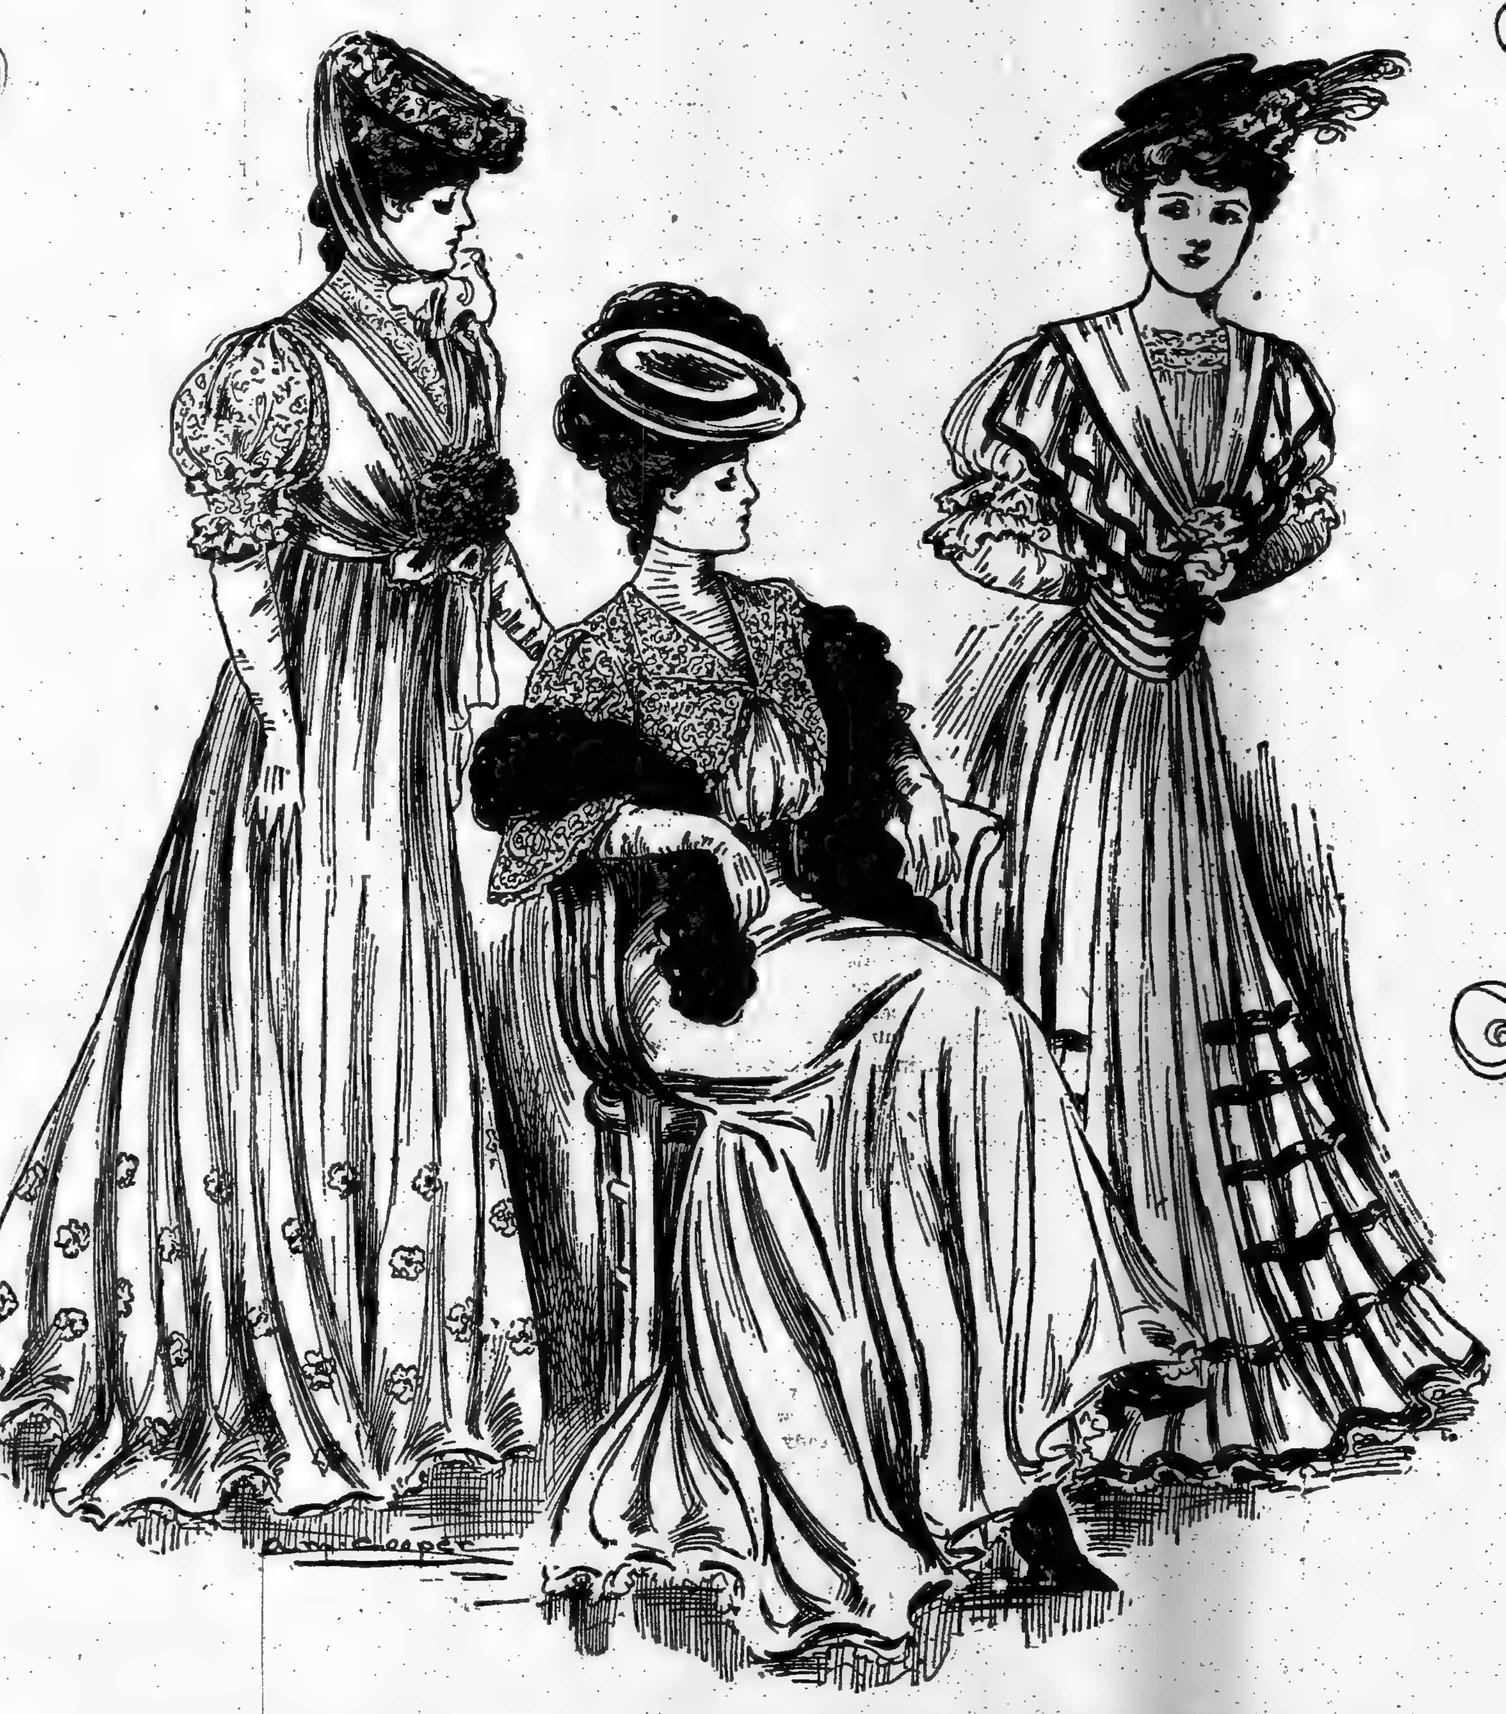
Miss Ella de Ruyter, who is a lineal descendant of the famous Admiral de Ruyter, and who on Monday married Augustus Drum Porter, formerly of Philadelphia, wore a white satin wedding gown of great richness, trimmed with exquisite old point lace on corsage and sleeves, and an old point lace veil, an heirloom in the family.



Empire robe of pale blue mull, embroidered in pink, lace blouse effect.

White linen princess skirt, white batiste blouse and Irish chochet jacket.

Yellow chiffon taffeta frock having ruffles edged with bronze colored velvet, sleeves and guimpe of yellow chiffon cloth and lace.

Miss Ruth Badgley, daughter of Capt. Howard G. Badgley and Mrs. Badgley, was married on Monday afternoon in the Church of the Heavenly Rest to Prof. William Kent Shepard of the Sheffield Scientific School of Yale University. The bride and groom are both famous as amateur golf players.

Miss Badgley's wedding gown was a princess robe of white chiffon velvet, very clinging, and, with a round, not long, train, and was perfectly plain from the bust line to the hem. It was an unusual gown, and an unusually beautiful one, owing to its corsage arrangement of lace and the short, unlined point lace sleeve. The yoke was of unlined point lace, with a Dutch neck, and was finished at the bottom by a short bertha of the lace that was drawn down below the bust over the velvet bodice. The velvet ended just above the bust line. The sleeves were each two short point lace ruffles, set on transparent chiffon or net, and ended several inches above the elbows, long white gloves coming up over the elbows. The flesh showed through the lace of the yoke, and the short sleeves give an uncommonly youthful and springlike effect, that not every bride could stand, but which suited Miss Badgley's blonde fairness.

The veil, a long, narrow scarf of old point lace, worn also by the bride's aunt, Mrs. Charles Badgley, at her own wedding, was arranged in an individual fashion, and quite unlike any bridal veil the writer has ever seen. In the first place, the bride's light golden brown hair was done in the most graceful fashion, in soft, fluffy effect, and part of it was dropped the merest trifle at the left side of the forehead—a droop not in the least suggestive of the soubrette or shopgirl type of drooping pompadour. The veil was fastened on carelessly, and one corner of the scarf also drooped in a point a mere trifle over the fluffy curls of the coiffure. From the front just this little point of lace and a glimpse of a scant frill caught down here and there against the pompadour was all of the veil that could be seen.

The bride's mother, Mrs. H. G. Badgley, was in a light golden tan-colored cloth, with a lace guimpe and sleeve trimmings, and small, flat bows of green satin arranged at the proper points on the corsage and sleeves. Her hat was a flat, oval toque, the color of the gown, with touches of green.

Mrs. Charlotte A. Lyon, grandmother of the bride, and well known in the D. A. R. circle, was in black net over white silk. The net was the dotted variety, and was broken by horizontal bands of black lace arranged in a double picket point pattern, the points bordering each edge. There were several of these point bands on the skirt.

A chiffon broadcloth costume in the trousseau of an April bride is in a pale shade of blue. The skirt trails a little. It is a circular skirt, and around the bottom soutache braid is applied. This braid is laid on up and down the skirt an eighth of an inch apart and in strips ten inches long, the lower edges coming just three inches from the edge of the skirt. Each end is doubled under and forms a little quarter-inch loop. Otherwise the skirt is perfectly plain. The coat is a three-quarter length and cutaway as to skirts. The coat skirts are absolutely plain.

At the sides, above and below the waist line, the skirt is laid in tiny, tapering tucks that shape it in to the figure; this requires considerable skill, as the coat is tight-fitting. The coat skirts meet at the waist line in the centre front, and from that point separate, until at the bottom they are sixteen inches apart. Starting from the point at the waist line and curving up the sides, outlining the top and sides of the tucked section, and then curving down toward the centre back, is an inch-wide strapping of pale blue panne velvet. This is crossed at half-inch intervals by silk soutache braid. Above this line of velvet strapping there is an insertion of heavy ecru lace, much like point de Venise; this is tapered to a point in the front and the centre back, and above it is a second line of the velvet and soutache braid. This last strapping comes to the armhole under the arm. This upper strapping outlines a deep, V-shaped section of the cloth that forms the front of the bodice that has one single large cabochon in steel silver, set with blue rhinestones, at the bottom, and above this there are two rows of the buttons, the top of the coat being double-breasted. The coat has double revers finishing the top and the neck. The first set are of the cloth, embroidered in forget-me-nots and edged with the velvet, partially covered with soutache braid, to match the other strappings. The turned-down collar also forms revers at its ends, and is of a darker shade of blue panne velvet, edged with a half-inch band of fancy blue silk braid, the velvet collar being crossed by alternate strips of this braid and of soutache, the braids being laid a quarter of an inch apart.

The full coat sleeves are gathered at the top, and at the outside the elbows are laid in quarter-inch tucks half way to the wrists; then comes a turned back cuff of blue velvet in a shade matching the collar. These are edged with the fancy silk braid and are crossed lengthwise by soutache braid an eighth of an inch apart. These cuffs flare a little, are five inches deep at the outside by three and a half at the inner seam. The underblouse is of pale-blue chiffon cloth trimmed with insertions of lace to match that in the coat; is trimmed with the fancy silk braid and is elaborately tucked. It has elbow sleeves, and lace cuffs half way to the wrists and a stock of the same lace.

A simple and practical coat for traveling or for general wear when a more elaborate garment is not required is of bluish gray cloth having a smooth finish. It is cut to come below the knees, and has immense cape sleeves. The tops of the sleeve sections extend half way from the top of the arms to the neck, and are laid in half-inch tucks each side of the shoulder seam, so that they are smooth on the shoulders; from the edge of the shoulders they hang in folds at the outside. When the arms drop at the sides these cape sleeves extend in the centre to the tips of the fingers. From this point, however, they round up in circular fashion to the body, so that they are really side or arm capes instead of closed sleeves. Like the coat, they are lined with a much paler shade of gray silk.

The garment has a round neck finished at the edge by three rows of soutache braid of the same color. A four-inch shaped band of dark-gray velvet is cut to fit the neck and extends from each shoulder seam down some five inches on the front, each end being cut to form a V, the V, however, being outlined on the cloth instead of being of the velvet. In each of these outlined V's there is a large flat velvet button. Inserted down the front of the coat to a little below the bust line is a vest some five inches wide of extremely pale-gray velvet embroidered in fine dark-gray silk cord in grapes and the outline of grape leaves. This vest is pointed at the bottom and closes invisibly by hooks. Twelve rows of soutache braid in two groups, the groups being two inches apart and the lines of braid an eighth of an inch apart cross the fronts of the coat just above and at the bust line. This garment is the property of a Lenten bride, who has it with her while on her bride tour.

One of the prettiest possible princess gowns will be worn by a May bride. It can be used as an afternoon or dinner gown, as it has a round, removable guimpe of point applique on chiffon.

This gown is made of the new shades of pale, coral red chiffon cloth over a very soft, clinging liberty satin foundation. It trains all around, and considerable fullness is given at the bottom by the lower twelve inches being made of a separate straight piece, the upper five inches of which is laid in tiny tucks a quarter of an inch apart. These tucks when released make a very full blouse finish. The joining of this section to the jupe is concealed by a band of double Greek key design in coral red taffeta and fancy silk braid, the silk braid having threads of black through it. One line of the Greek key is formed by shaped pieces of the taffeta and the other by the braid. Six inches above this border comes a second one an inch and a half narrower, the lower one being about eight inches in all from edge to edge.

The top of the skirt is tucked to fit, and this tucking extends some five or six inches above the waist line to fit the robe smoothly. The gown closes invisibly down the back.

Above the tucking there is a bias band of taffeta edged with narrow silk braid in the coral red shot with black threads, the same as that on the skirt, only narrower. This goes straight around the body, and the braid outlines the Greek key pattern through its centre. Up each side of the centre of the body in both the back and the front are two bretelles or suspenders of the coral taffeta edged with braid and braided in the key design. These terminate at the top in a shaped band, similarly made and trimmed, that outlines the point applique yoke. Shaped sections of the silk braided in the key design and edged with the fancy braid extend from this hollow yoke piece at the sides and go around under the arms, outlining the armholes. These are three inches wide where they leave the yoke piece, and taper down to an inch and a half under the arms. This arrangement of bretelles or straps forms a sort of open corselet, and under it is worn a blouse of paler coral red and black. This blouse is formed of a chiffon cloth underslip, to which inch-deep knife plaitings of coral red chiffon are attached, these being alternated with inch-wide ruffles of fine black lace. Above the yoke piece, as previously mentioned, there is a yoke of point applique over pale coral red chiffon.

The sleeves are full puffs of the chiffon cloth covered with alternate plaiting of chiffon and lace ruffles. These puffs end three inches above the points of the elbows, and a tucked band of chiffon cloth four inches wide is attached. From this falls a four-inch ruffle of black lace, the lower edge projecting below the superimposed three ruffles, stitched to it, the two edge ruffles being knife blade plaitings of the chiffon, with a narrow black lace ruffle between. To wear with this costume when used as an afternoon gown there is a black mohair straw hat, rather flat in shape and broad brimmed. It has a bandeau and cachepeigne of pale coral colored tulle, and a crisp scarf of tulle laid in deep plaits around the crown is tied at the back in a large double knot. Clusters of cherries, the new large sort in shaded pinks, very light in weight, are fastened at the back.

A white and black shepherd's plaid voile—also in the wardrobe of one of the innumerable Spring brides—is made with a corselet or princess skirt with a bolero. The white checks are outlined with hairlines of black. The skirt portion escapes the ground by an inch only, and has four tucks at the bottom, the lowest four inches broad, the others three, two, and one inch, respectively, the lower edge of each one escaping that next it by an eighth of an inch. These tucks do not go all the way across the front, as there is a panel effect down the centre, the skirt closing invisibly under one edge of it, instead of in the back. This panel is five inches wide at the top, three at the waist line, and twelve inches broad at the bottom.

The bolero jacket comes down over the top of the skirt, and is cut straight around and to within six inches of the waist line. It is cut on the bias, and to the bottom of the top sections are attached four bias folds, with the edges overlapping. These folds form the lower half of the jacket. The folds are of equal width, and are set on to a thin white silk lining. The bolero is closed by large silver buttons, of which there is one on each fold. The back is just like the front, barring the buttons. There is a little standing, turnover collar at the back and sides of the bolero, but not at the front. This collar is of black silk—that is, the upper part is, and the lower half is covered with a network of fine silver embroidery or open work passementerie or lace set on over it. The top corners at the front of the bolero are turned back, and form revers as deep as they are broad, or, in other words, being the triangular shaped halves of a square. These are of white satin edged with a fold of black; the white has the same openwork silver design around its edges as appears on the collar.

The sleeves are quite full, are gathered at the tops, and the cloth ends just below the elbows under turned-back, slightly flaring cuffs, some three inches wide, of black silk piped at the top with white. These are slashed at the back and show the silver applique at the top and sides. Below these come three narrow folds, bias, of course, of the voile. The lower fold is an inch wide, the upper one a quarter of an inch and the middle one half an inch broad. A white batiste blouse with elbow sleeves beautifully embroidered and having a high stock is to be worn under this.

MISS ALICE OGSTON MARQUAND, whose picture may be seen in the Pictorial Supplement, has been spending the Winter in Washington with her grandmother, Mrs. George Ogston, and her aunt, Mrs. George Robeson, widow of George Robeson, at one time Secretary of War. Her engagement to an Englishman, Allan Fullerton, son of Sir John Fullerton, was announced a month ago. She has made her home in England for years, and came over in the late Autumn with her great-aunt, Mrs. Mills, to be an attendant at the wedding of Miss Bessie J. Moulton and Lloyd Aspinwall.

With her younger sister, Miss Elizabeth Marquand, she owns a handsome house in Wilton Crescent, Belgrave Square, London, and also a country place in Nottinghamshire. Her father was the late Frederick Marquand, a son of the late Henry G. Marquand, whose art collection was famous, and which was sold after his death. Frederick Marquand died some years ago, and his widow married Graham Harrison, an Englishman. Miss Marquand made her début in Paris, and has been presented at Court. She has wonderful red-gold hair, a fine figure, and closely resembles her mother, a famous beauty. Miss Marquand is fond of hunting, and has a fine collection of horses. She is a cousin of Mrs. Louis Lorillard.

Miss Marie Montant, whose picture is also in the Pictorial Supplement, is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Auguste P. Montant. Her mother was Miss Hannah R. Townsend, one of the members of the old Townsend family, who for generations lived at Oyster Bay, L. I. Her engagement to Huntington Norton, son of Mrs. Frank L. Norton of New York and Cazenovia, was announced some weeks since. On her father's side she is related to the Binsses and Brugieres. She made her début three years ago. Mr. Norton was graduated from Harvard in 1901. The wedding will not take place until the Autumn.

MARRYING and giving in marriage will be the absorbing subject during the second as well as the first week after Easter. Last week was gay also with dances and dinners and bridge parties, but the first of May will see society busy making its Summer plans. The terrible California catastrophe will interfere somewhat with a few of these. It was said long ago that all good Americans go to Paris before they die, and Californians who also go abroad, come, as a rule, to New York. The California element is most prominent in what is known as the Newport set, and urgent business, resultant upon the loss of property in the burned district, may cause more than one of the Californians to go to the Golden Gate instead of to Europe. D. O. Mills, who is a sufferer by the catastrophe, has been in San Francisco recently. He, his son, Ogden Mills, and his daughter, Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, the wife of the Ambassador to the Court of St. James's, and his sister, Mrs. Eaton, have large holdings, as also have Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr.; Miss Bishop and her brothers, Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Alexander, the Haggins, and Clarence Mackay. Mr. Mackay was due in California in May. Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs has just returned from there, after disposing of her hotel, the Fairmount. But the estate has vast holdings in the burned district. Hermann Oelrichs lives at a country place near Berkeley, on the other side of the bay. Miss Crocker and Mrs. Waterbury were near San Francisco at the time of the earthquake. Francis Burton Harrison arrived from there only a short time ago.

The departure of Mrs. Marshall Field and several of the Eddy family for Europe last week was for the purpose of attending the wedding of Miss Spreckels and Spencer Eddy in London. At the same time Mrs. Emma Watson, the only daughter of Claus Spreckels, announced her engagement to J. W. Ferris of San Francisco. Waldorf Astor and Mrs. Shaw were married quietly in London on Thursday. Mrs. John Jacob Astor, who has been ill in Philadelphia, is convalescent. She was much affected by the death of her father, the late Edward Willing. Mrs. Astor will probably go abroad later, but, being in deep mourning, will not entertain this season. The next departures in the Newport set for Europe will include Mrs. Ogden Mills and the Misses Mills and Mr. and Mrs. Elbridge Gerry and the Misses Gerry. They sail on May 15. Dr. and Mrs. W. Seward Webb, who sailed last week, are to be abroad a short time only.

It would seem, if one can believe the rumors which are always started at this time, that Newport will be most brilliant this year. Mrs. Ogden Goelet, who is now abroad, is to have the Duke and Duchess of Roxburghe as her guests at Ochre Court. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Goelet, who are in this country, will go to Newport early and open their house. Mrs. Robert Goelet, Sr., or Mrs. Goelet, as she is now known, has been yachting in the Mediterranean. She witnessed some of the eruption of Vesuvius from her yacht the Nahma. The party, after leaving Naples, went to Palermo, and have now returned to Cannes. Mr. and Mrs. Pembroke Jones are also planning some extensive entertaining for Newport, although they will not get into their new home until Summer after next. At present they are on their North Carolina plantation, where they have been giving a series of house parties. Mrs. I. Townsend Burden and the Misses Burden were among their guests last week.

Among the new residents at Newport will be R. Horace Gallatin, who has taken the James A. Swain place in Gibbs Avenue. Mr. Gallatin married Miss Emily Morris, a daughter of Fordham Morris and a granddaughter of the late William Morris of Morris Heights. Mrs. Gallatin is a direct descendant of Jacob Lorillard, her grandmother, wife of the late William Morris, having been a Miss Lorillard, whose childhood was spent in the old mansion in the Bronx, now used as the police station in that park. Mr. and Mrs. Frank K. Sturgis will be at their cottage at Newport this Summer, but Mrs. Sturgis is still devoted to Lenox and will not give up her place in the Berkshires. Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. C. Taylor, who have just concluded a most interesting cruise in the West Indies, will go to Newport shortly, where already are Mr. and Mrs. Watts Sherman, Col. and Mrs. De Lancey Kane, and other villa owners.

The costume ball at the Astor House was a most picturesque success, and the only difficulty experienced was in the lack of room for all those who wished to attend. Although 1860, one of the limits for the costume, is not so far back, and the entertainments of that day are still remembered by many, yet for the younger generation it seemed a very long while ago. Women keep finery for sentimental and other reasons, and there seemed to be no difficulty in getting out gowns worn by mother or grandmother at the famous ball given for the Prince of Wales in 1860, or when presented at the Court of Napoleon and Eugénie, or even in the more remote period of Louis Philippe and the days of the Restoration. Although the gathering was representative, still many prominent names were overlooked, and there was a paucity of Astors, Goelets, Warrens, Brugieres, Brevoorts, Belmonts, Gallatins, Parrishes, Lydigs, Kingslands, Shermans, Kernochans, Tompkins, and other notable names of people prominent in New York society in the first half of the nineteenth century. And society's historian, the veteran though not venerable beau, E. N. Tailer, was not present; but the affair was only an experiment, and it reflected much credit on Weymer Jay Mills, Mrs. Hone, Mrs. Endicott, and those who arranged it. There is no doubt, if the Astor House continues to exist—and this is problematical, as intentions are to take it down and put an office building in its place—that these assemblies will be a regular institution. Society has gone much to fancy dress and masquerading this year, and no more pleasant sight has been witnessed this season than the ballroom of the old hotel, with its white pillars and gilt chandeliers, its simple decorations, and its groups of crinolined women and bestocked men.

The coaching season begins to-morrow, and Center Hitchcock will have a party of friends on the Pioneer, which will leave the Holland House promptly for Ardsley, where luncheon will be served, and the return made so as to reach town at 6. Alfred G. Vanderbilt will be the whip. Mr. and Mrs. Vanderbilt, who had an Easter party at their place near Newport, came over in the beginning of last week to attend the Horse Show at Durland's. They did not go to Boston. Mr. and Mrs. Reginald C. Vanderbilt, however, were there for the show of the week. As is their custom, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Vanderbilt have taken The Towers, at Ardsley, for the Spring. Mrs. Vanderbilt and Miss Gladys Vanderbilt will remain abroad until late in May, or perhaps June. There is quite a reunion of the Vanderbilt family in Paris at present. Mr. and Mrs. H. McK. Twombly, Mr. and Mrs. William D. Sloane, and Mrs. Vanderbilt were there recently. Mr. and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney are to go abroad for the late Spring season.

St. Thomas's Church will present a most attractive appearance on Wednesday, when Miss Evelyn Willis Hunter, daughter of Edward Hunter, will be married to Keith Donaldson. Spring flowers will be used most profusely in the decorations. Her sister, Mrs. John Adams Payne, will be matron of honor, and the bridesmaids Miss Dorothy Taylor, a granddaughter of the late Gov. Roswell P. Flower; Miss Virginia Iredell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Wilkins Iredell, Jr., of Avon, Cincinnati, and a cousin of Representative Nicholas Longworth; Miss Marion Denison, stepdaughter of Senator Horace White of Syracuse; Miss Louise Long, Miss Mary Morris Blair, and Miss Margaret Baxter, a sister of Mrs. Hart McKee and daughter of Col. and Mrs. George Baxter of Knoxville. The week was rich in small dances, one of the most enjoyable being that given by Mrs. Morgan Grinnell on Friday. The young girls who are not yet out danced last evening at the Metropolitan Club. This was also the final affair of the kind until next Winter. Mrs. John Hone has cards out for a dance on Thursday evening next. This is to be for her daughter, Miss Hester Gouverneur Hone. It will be a small affair. The season will wind up with the fancy dress ball at Delmonico's on the 27th. This is the ball arranged by Mrs. Lawrence and others, and it is principally for the young people not yet out who have had little opportunity to "dress up" the season in a year which has been unusually prolific in masquerade and fancy dances.

General Corbin, the New Head of Uncle Sam's Army

How He Broke Up a Newspaper Establishment to Organize a Company in 1861 and Was Persuaded to Remain in the Army at the Close of the War by Grant.

FROM the time he recruited his first company by getting all of Murat Halstead's printers to leave their work in The Cincinnati Commercial office to fight for the Union until to-day Henry C. Corbin, who has just been nominated Lieutenant General, has been wherever there was a scrimmage or the prospects of one with the Stars and Stripes in the field.

The Corbins were Virginians, the great-grandfather of the Lieutenant General having served his country as a soldier during the War of the Revolution. The family left Virginia and were among the pioneers of Ohio, where, on a farm, Henry C. Corbin was born and raised. Between the many duties of farm life for a strong youngster he managed to equip himself for the profession of teaching, and began this work when he was 18. He had advanced in his profession when Lincoln's second call for troops, in 1861, made him determine to offer his services to the Union. It was then that he cleaned out The Cincinnati Commercial shop in order to get his quota for his Second Lieutenancy in the volunteers.

"Young man," said the editor when he met Corbin the next day, "do you know that you have closed out our paper?"

But Halsted bore him no malice, and only asked that if he had any men over the quota necessary that he credit them to his brother Benton, a recruiting Lieutenant.

Young Corbin knew nothing about the profession of arms when he began with the Seventy-ninth Ohio, but he went after knowledge in this profession with the same determination that made him succeed as a teacher. When the organization of his regiment was complete it was sent into Kentucky to repel the Kirby Smith raid. He was made ordnance officer on Gen. Juda's staff when, as he admitted, he didn't know a blank cartridge from a loaded one. His first assignment of duty was to conduct a wagon train of arms and ammunition to a Kentucky regiment twenty-five miles in the interior. This he did with satisfaction to his superiors. In these first weeks of service he studied every available text book on the art and science of war, and he rapidly became proficient as an officer.

When the colored regiments were organized by Rosecrans, Corbin was made Major in the first of them attached to the Army of the Cumberland. The regiment was in battle or on the march for every day of five months following the fight with Hood at Decatur, and Corbin was made Lieutenant Colonel and then Colonel. He was brevetted Brigadier General, and then, on the recommendation of Gen. George H. Thomas, was put in the regular army as Second Lieutenant in the Seventeenth Infantry. Gen. Grant subsequently conferred on him the brevet of Major for gallant service in the action at Decatur, and a little later the brevet of Lieutenant Colonel for gallant service in the battles of Nashville.

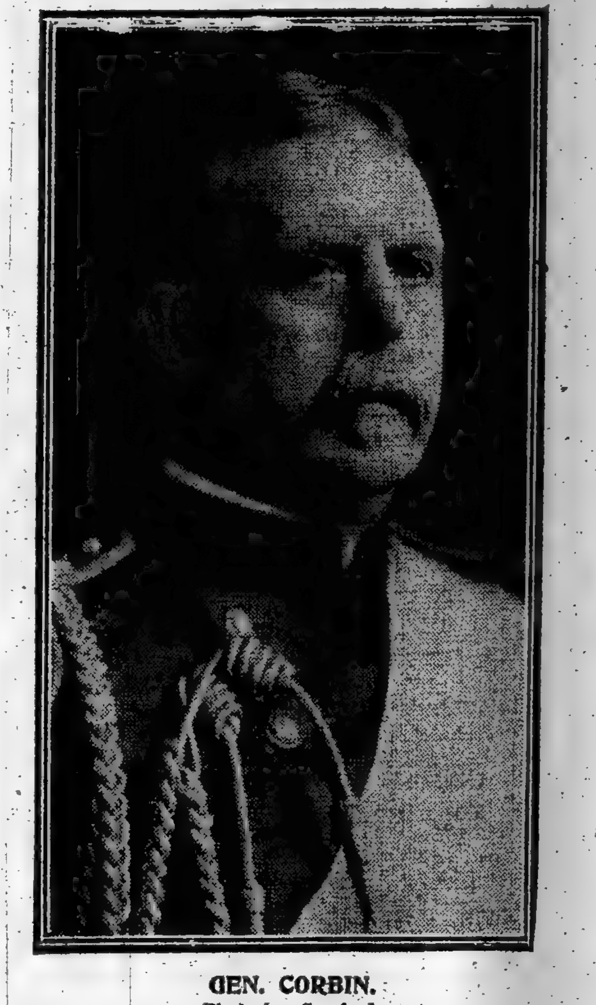
With such success he was still without the desire to follow the profession of arms, and at the close of the war began to study law in Batavia, near his old farmhouse. Gen. Grant happened to visit some relatives in that village soon after the war, and the law student called on him to pay his respects.

"Corbin, don't you think you are treating the War Department rather shabbily?" asked Grant abruptly.

The law student stammered that he had no intention of remaining a soldier. After advice from the General that he stay in the army and accept his assignment, Grant turned to Gen. Babcock and told him to give Corbin an order to report to the commanding officer at the Newport Barracks for duty. Corbin took the order and reported, and began as a Second Lieutenant of the Seventeenth Infantry, United States Army. To-day the country knows him as the Adjutant General who was the right hand man of McKinley throughout the war with Spain, who, under the President's orders, organized and directed a volunteer army of 250,000 men for the successful campaign of 112 days.



GEN. CORBIN.

It was not to the liking of Gen. Corbin that he was compelled to remain at home during the fighting, for it was the first real fighting that he had missed since he abandoned his law business after the civil war.

Gen. Corbin saw service in the "Fenian invasion" trouble on the Canadian border. He was in Missouri in the reconstruction period, when disorders were many. He went to Texas to join Sheridan, who was assembling an army on the Rio Grande to prevent Maximillian from establishing an empire in Mexico. Then came an overland march through Kansas, in which one-fourth of his regiment was lost in a cholera epidemic. He participated in operations against the Apaches in New Mexico. As senior Captain, the field officers being absent, he conducted his regiment from New Mexico to Texas. He remained for several years along the Mexican line, building military roads and preserving order.

⁂

During ten years of frontier service he marched on foot from Missouri to the Rio Gande and from the headwaters of the Rio Grande to its mouth. In 1876 he was ordered East to go on recruiting service, and on his way back to civilization he spent his first night in a sleeping car. He says that he did not use it for sleeping purposes, as the shrieking of the locomotive whistle was too near the war cry of a Comanche to let him linger in slumbers sweet. It took him a week to get the Indian and locomotive shrieks differentiated.

Of Gen. Corbin's service under McKinley the following letter in the files of the War Department tells what the Secretary of State thought:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 23, 1903.

Dear Mr. Secretary:

I should like to put on file in the War Department some expression of my high appreciation of the services of Gen. Corbin during the last five years. Especially as a member of the Administration of President McKinley, I feel that it would be unjust for us to withhold from the record our sense of his faithful and devoted service during the Spanish war, as well as before and after it. As President McKinley is no longer here to bestow upon Gen. Corbin the meed of praise which I know he considered so justly due, it is all the more incumbent on the rest of us to testify with what high esteem, profound affection, and perfect confidence he regarded Gen. Corbin. He has told me what a comfort it was to him to know that he had always by his side a man so sound in counsel, so vigorous in health, and so true in heart, upon whom he could rely implicitly for any service he might demand of him at any hour of the day or night. I believe this high opinion which the President entertained of Gen. Corbin was shared by every member of the Government, and most particularly by those who were brought into immediate contact with him.

Faithfully yours, JOHN HAY.

The Hon. Elihu Root, Secretary of War.

⁂

Gen. Corbin's tactfulness was brought into play in the legislation which followed the war with Spain, reorganizing the army and establishing it on its present plane. To him is also given the credit for the reconstruction of West Point at a cost of four and a half millions. When President McKinley believed the time had come to establish the civil government in the Philippines he sent Gen. Corbin as his personal representative to impress upon the army the importance of harmonious relations between the old military régime and the new civil government. It was a delicate task, and was accomplished to the satisfaction of the President.

Natural, if Irreverent

LITTLE JIMMY was warned by his mother of the danger of playing around the stove. Presently he scorched his fingers. His mother remarked:

"The Lord punished you for disobeying."

Jimmy heroically endured the pain a few minutes and then he asked:

"Does the Lord see everything I do?"

"Certainly."

"Golly! Ain't He a rubberneck!"

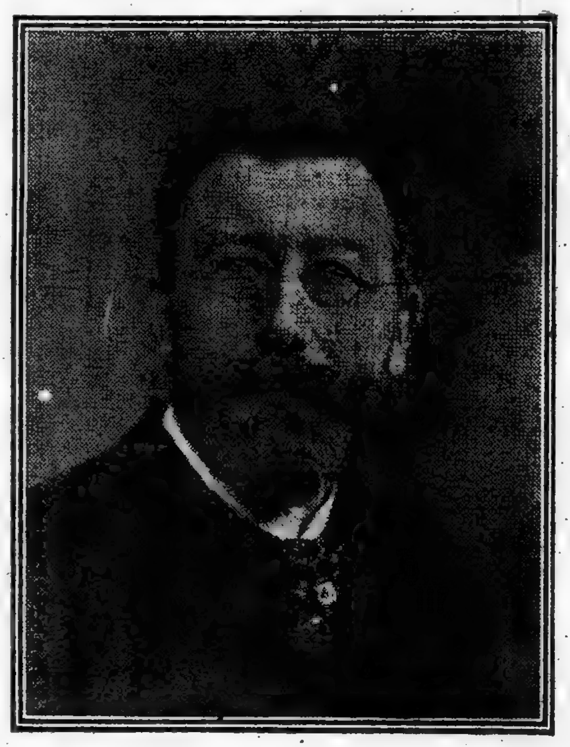
GERMANY'S LEADING ENGLISH SCHOLAR

BERLIN, April 11.—It is not often that a foreigner visits the United States who has discovered some of Shakespeare's unpublished dramas. Before this can be printed there will have arrived in New York Prof. Alois Brandl, the head of the English Department of the Berlin University, who, as representative of this institution and of the Prussian Academy of Science, will attend the Franklin Celebration in Philadelphia.

Prof. Brandl in most enthusiastic terms spoke to me of his visit to the United States and of his admiration for Franklin. "Do you know," he said, "although I am now somewhat of a Shakespearean scholar, in the days of my boyhood I heard of Franklin before I did of Shakespeare. Franklin to-day is without question one of the most popular personalities in Germany. I admire him not only as the great commoner of the Commonwealth, but also for his interest in common and general wealth. Numerous quotations from his works are found in Büchmann's famous book of quotations. Herder, one of Germany's greatest writers, in his 'Humanitaets Briefe,' published a translation of Franklin's entrance questions to the Philadelphia Philosophical Society, and speaks in enthusiastic terms of his writings." Prof. Brandl will give expression to the admiration which the German academic world holds for Franklin by placing a magnificent wreath on his grave.

Prof. Brandl has gained distinction not only as a scholar but also by having probably done more for the study of English and American literature than any man on the continent. He said that he was much pleased to visit America because it gave him the opportunity, one of his desires for years, to become acquainted with the haunts of the great American writers, as well as to come into personal contact with some of the living representatives of American literature. Prof. Brandl frankly admitted that he had not read much of the living American writers, but spoke at some length on the classical writers of our country. He said that he liked best those authors who dealt with typical American life, such as James Russell Lowell, Emerson, Thoreau, Bret Harte, Hawthorne, Lanier, and Joaquin Miller. When asked regarding Longfellow, Prof. Brandl said that he did not consider him typically American, as many of his works were on European subjects. Prof. Brandl also referred in flattering terms to the "History of Literature" by Prof. Bronson of Brown University.

As already said, Prof. Brandl has achieved an international reputation for his work in behalf of the study of English and American literature at the Berlin University. Some years ago he established a seminary for a close study of the works of English and American writers. This seminary, under Prof. Brandl's guidance, opened its doors with an attendance of thirty students, but has now over two hundred and thirty. Beginning with only two assistants, Prof. Brandl has at the present time four. The library of the seminary, consisting of 8,000 volumes, is the largest of its kind in the world. Moreover the Prussain Government is now erecting a building for the seminary which it will occupy in October. The students in the seminary not only become acquainted with the works of the leading English and American writers, but courses are offered to those who wish to make a study of the English language. Prof. Brandl also called my attention to the fact that more Americans than English are availing themselves of the opportunities offered by the seminary. The leading authorities on English and American literature have been Brandl's pupils. Also some of the most valuable publications issued by the seminary have been written by Americans.



PROF. ALOIS BRANDL.

Prof. Brandl was one of the first professors of the Berlin University to allow women to attend his lectures and his seminary. The first foreign woman to pass her examination at the Berlin University was one of Prof. Brandl's scholars, Miss Jane Scherzer, now President of Oxford College, Ohio, and the first woman instructor at the university was also a daughter of the United States and pupil of Prof. Brandl—Miss Swearingen.

That so much attention is given in Germany to the study of Shakespeare is due in some measure to Prof. Brandl, who has done valuable work as member of the German Shakespearean Society, and particularly as editor of the Shakespeare "Year Book," published by the organization. This book contains everything that appears during the year concerning Shakespeare. Not alone are published original papers on the Bard of Avon, but the Shakespearean books of the year are carefully reviewed. Then again, an account is given of the Shakespearean plays presented in different countries in the year, as well as minor items regarding Shakespeariana, which have appeared in the monthly and daily press.

Prof. Brandl, although very proud of being a Prussian citizen, is really an Austrian, having been born in the Tyrol. He was born at Innsbruck, and has been professor at Vienna and Goettingen. He began his study of English literature during a visit to England, and there studied under and became intimately acquainted with Sweet, Furnival, and Herford. Prof. Brandl also spent some time in the Lake Country, visiting the haunts of English writers. One of his first books, through which he received a call to Berlin, was on Coleridge. Prof. Brandl's greatest achievement was his discovery of the twelve unpublished dramas of Shakespeare, which he found in the library of the Duke of Devonshire. Prof. Brandl's publication of these unknown works caused the greatest sensation in the literary world, and The New York Nation at one time declared that it was a national disgrace that these works had not been discovered and published by English or American authorities. In conclusion it should be said that Prof. Brandl has published a new edition of Schlegel and Tieck's classical translations of Shakespeare's works.

The members of the Shakespeare Society regret that Prof. Brandl, owing to his trip to America, will be unable to attend the meeting of the society in Weimar, which occurs on the 23d of April, and which promises to be an important one.

On April 23 the members of the society will attend a performance of "Richard III." in the famous Court Theatre of Weimar. The play will be staged as far as possible in the manner of the time of Shakespeare, without pauses, and with a curtain effectively separating the principal from the minor scenes. The next day Massinger's tragedy, "The Duke of Milan," as revised by Dr. Conrad, will be given.

GOULDS ALL ATHLETES

GEORGE J. GOULD is a firm believer in sports. He is not only an expert polo and tennis player himself, but is determined that his sons shall be athletes. Years ago Mr. Gould laid out plans for the bringing up of his family. So successful have these plans worked out that his two eldest sons are rated among the best polo players of the country. The second son, Jay, although but 17 years old, is the champion court tennis player of the United States, and is now in England, where he will compete for the championship of Great Britain, which is in reality the world's championship.

It was not accident, but design, that made the two Gould boys sturdy athletes. Neither of them is really robust, but they have constitutions hardened by open-air exercise. At his country home, at Lakewood, George J. Gould taught his boys how to swim and ride as soon as they were able to do so in safety. The best instructors were engaged and the father set the example himself.

By the time the eldest boy, Kingdon, was 16, his brother Jay being one year younger, the lads were classed among the best polo players in the country, in addition to being expert cross-country riders. With their father and Benjamin Nichol they appeared on the polo field and held their own with the veterans of the game.

The appearance of any prominent European expert in sports meant one or more visits to Lakewood. Eustace M. Miles, the British court tennis champion, spent many days there imparting the technical knowledge of the game to the Gould boys. Frank Forrester of Prince's Club, London, was engaged as professional to teach Kingdon and Jay Gould racquets and court tennis.

During the visit of the world's professional court tennis and racquet champion, Peter Latham of London, George Gould arranged for a special tournament at Lakewood, where Jay Gould met the British champion. The result was a big surprise. While Jay Gould did not win, he made the Britisher extend himself to the utmost to secure a victory by a margin. On that occasion Champion Latham predicted a great future for young Jay Gould.

"He may not win the championship in court tennis this year," said Latham, "but, mark my words, he will certainly do so next year. All he lacks is experience. He has the stroke, technical knowledge, and ability, but the absence of real court experience may be a big handicap when he is called upon to meet the older and more seasoned players. I never saw a more promising court tennis player in my life, and in two or three years he will be invincible, not only in America, but in England also."

Young Gould decided to strive for the National championship this year instead of waiting until next. Under the tuition of Coach Forrester he made rapid progress, and startled the athletic world a few months later by winning the Gold Racquet at Tuxedo Park, defeatig Charles E. Sands, the National court tennis champion.

The Tuxedo Park Gold Racquet is the prize for the court tennis championship of the Club, and is the preliminary tournament for the championship of the United States, as nearly all the National entries compete at Tuxedo Park.

In the National championship tournament three weeks later he met the best players in the country, prominent among them being Joshua Crane, Jr., of the Boston Athletic Association and Charles E. Sands of the New York Racquet and Tennis Club, the champion. Jay Gould vanquished J. J. Cairns of Boston in the first round, but his first real hard game and experience came with the second match, in which he met Joshua Crane, Jr., of Boston, a former champion. It was a desperate struggle, and at one time it appeared certain that young Gould would go down to defeat. He fought against the overwhelming odds, and, wearing his opponent down by sheer pluck and steadiness, passed him and won a remarkable victory.

Sands then was his only opponent, and as he had previously taken his measure the rest appeared easy. And so it was Jay Gould became the youngest American champion in the history of athletic sports.

As soon as Jay Gould won the championship of America his entry for the British championship was cabled and accepted. He will meet the greatest players in the world in the London tournament, which begins Monday, April 30. His principal work will be to defeat Eustace H. Miles, the British title holder. He will have to overcome another handicap. In England they use a ball made of cloth, and it is livelier than the American ball of cloth and cotton.

Kingdon Gould, although older than his brother Jay, is not as good a tennis and racquet player as the National champion, but he is a superior polo player to his brother. The pair are about equal at cross-country riding. In their sports the young men are joined by their sister Marjorie, who is an expert horsewoman. The other Gould children are being brought up on similar lines.

In an account of a tragedy, in a London newspaper, it is stated that "three doctors are in attendance, but the woman is not yet dead." Not long ago another English paper nearly got into a libel suit by saying of a certain distinguished patient that "Mr. Jones is no longer in danger, though Dr. Brown is still visiting him."

LATEST FRILLS IN FASHIONABLE SPRING ATTIRE FOR MEN

THERE is little that is new this year in the general run of Spring fashions for men. The modes grow more conservative each season, and an actual novelty is hailed as an event by tailors and haberdashers. The morning coat suit, seen so much this Winter, which has been gaining in popularity every season, will be fashionable not only for informal affairs, but also for the afternoon. In fact, there is, with the general adoption of country life in America, a disposition to do away with formal garments almost entirely after May 1. This does not apply to evening clothes, but to frock coats and even to top hats.

The morning coat—this is the English term for it; in America it is an evolution of the old-time cutaway—is made in dark fabrics, in black or in gray. There are three buttons, single-breasted—some of the coats have an addition of a fourth even—and long skirts, the tail of the garment reaching the hinge in the knees, with or without flap pockets. With this coat are worn trousers of the same material cut comfortably, but not too loosely, from the waist down. The waistcoat may be also of the same color and material, or one of the fancy flannel affairs may be worn. The coats are braided, but not elaborately. Black and dark gray are the best shades, but a striped gray material is also in favor. Until the Summer sets in a top hat is worn with these suits, although it may not be out of place to wear a derby, especially at the races.

One characteristic of the English morning coat—by a strange bull, worn in London in the afternoon—is the length of the collar and lapels. The first button closing the coat is placed quite far down, giving the opening the pronounced V shape, and the two other buttons are placed close together, the third at the waistline. This gives the coat a "figure" effect, and suggests belts or stays underneath. The waistcoats are cut low, with long, narrow V collars and lapels, and the latter show above the collar of the coat. The coats, when buttoned, exhibit the shirt collar, the tie, and a border of the waistcoat.

A few men this Spring have used the white edging on black morning coats. The flannel waistcoats, as well as some of the evening ones, are made after the 1850 model. These were in great demand last week for the Assembly Ball at the Astor House. The waistcoat à la mode may be of silk or flannel, but as the warm weather advances the latter is the most appropriate material. With the morning coat the waistcoat should have a long V shape, with low-lying oval lapels, three small buttons, and V-shaped corners. The pointed waistcoats are most in vogue. White waistcoats are now generally worn with evening dress, while plain black waistcoats of the same material as the coat go with dinner jackets.

All "lounge," business, or sack suits, as you may call them, are made with loose-fitting jackets, single breasted, and with three buttons. There has been a disposition to use the military cut in some of these jackets or sack coats, but it has not succeeded. Now that the outing season is nearly on, men will want their coats loose. The lapels of the new sacks are cut broad and long, so as to show a little of the lapel of the waistcoat above them. The pockets are patched, and the coat itself has a comfortable, square, easy effect.

Blue, black, and gray are the colors. There are homespuns and gray combinations, with suggestions of checks, almost invisible, and tiny plaids of the shepherd variety, also striped goods. The flannel suits, which come in with the later Summer, will be cut on this model, and there will be no difference in the patterns from those of last year.

One reform is the disappearance of the creased trousers. Although laid at the door of London, this was decidedly an American fashion, and to-day the Londoner always recognizes the American by his creased trousers. Trousers can be turned up at the bottoms, but the sharp ridge from waist to boot has been tabooed, and the little tailor around the corner and the hotel valet will have to look for a new wrinkle to make an extra half dollar.

Great is the display of material for the shirt of the Summer. A few of the leading shops show novelties such as embroideries down the centre plait and colored collars with white lines attached to shirts or white collars with colored lines. But the linen and madras shirt, with the unplaited rather than the plaited bosom, shows no difference in form or shape or even pattern from last season. It is either of a solid color with a vague figure pattern, or tiny stripes, with square cuffs attached. The popular collar is the fold or turn-over. It is either with rounded or pointed ends. The wing, or turn-over, collar has struggled hard for a return to popularity, but without success. A fad is the wearing of flannel collars with outing flannel shirts as well as flannel cuffs. The collars are drawn down over the tie, which in this case must be a medium narrow four-in-hand, by a gold safety pin, and another safety pin holds the two folds of the tie further down.

The bow tie is used, as well as the four-in-hand, with the colored shirt. These bows are in solid shades or striped or figured. Delicate tints are seen a great deal this Spring, both for four-in-hands and bows. Green and blues and resedas and pinkish purples and lavenders are much favored, also black, purple, and many shades of red in plain colors without figures. In May the haberdashers are ready to put forth the foulards with figures. These will be used principally as bow ties. The very narrow four-in-hands, such as were introduced last Autumn by Prince Alexander of Battenberg, may be the coup of the season. They are in great vogue in London, and go extremely well with the turn-over or fold collar, originally called in this country the Eton. The colors to be used will be most vivid, scarlets predominating. The width of the tie is about an inch and a quarter, and not a few of the Fifth Avenue tailors are making a white flannel waistcoat rather high in the neck for some of the Newport set. These ties will be seen possibly in their glory at the opening of Belmont Park.

Not only scarlet, but greens and blues and combinations of the different contrasting shades will be in evidence, and there is with this fashion a likely return to the broader striped effects in four-in-hands of a few years ago. There are also Ascots, with small knots and folds, for formal afternoon dress, but these just now are a passing fancy.

The straw hat of the season shows a narrower brim and an ordinarily high crown in the split straws and quite a low crown for the sennits, but the higher crown shapes will prevail. The soft hats are in grays only, with a brim about two and a half inches and about six inches deep. The bands for gray soft hats are black. College men will wear their colors in their bands, and some of the younger men will keep to the flatter soft shapes in felt. The colored derbies in pearls and browns have high bell crowns and narrow curling brims. The black derby, however, is overwhelmingly popular for a Spring hat until straws come in, and the browns rule next. There is no doubt, however, that when the outing season is in full swing the old gray Rough Rider hats will be resurrected, and that those who purchased years ago genuine Panamas will not neglect to wear them. A set at Newport discarded hats altogether during the Summer, and others wore, as they expressed it, "any old thing." The early Summer will find men settled to the wearing of blue and gray lounge suits, tan Oxford shoes, and shirtings and ties in cheerful but not too brightly contrasting colors.

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Irregular—Banks Report Gain of $17,994,000 in Cash.

Surplus Reserves Raised to $16,366,000—Additional Cash Shipments.

Such moderate losses as were suffered by stocks in yesterday's short session of the Stock Exchange were due almost wholly to profit-taking on purchases made at the low levels of Wednesday and Thursday. The day's news from San Francisco was conflicting, the unfavorable aspect of the advices through public channels being largely offset by more cheerful information received directly by Wall Street. The continuation of fires in the neighborhood of docks and railroad terminals along the water front aroused some apprehension lest these properties, which are, of course, most important to the business of the transcontinental lines entering the city, should be destroyed, while vague rumors in circulation at the close of the business day regarding an outbreak of smallpox and typhoid fever among the homeless people of the city also affected sentiment adversely. Nevertheless, it was plain from the bulk of the day's advices that order is rapidly being brought out of the chaos of the past few days and that the measures taken to provide the fire fighting forces with water have been so successful as to make additional heavy losses improbable. Banks were engaged again in transferring both through the Sub-Treasury and by direct shipment large amounts of money to Pacific Coast points for the use of San Francisco, and the total of such shipments has already reached a figure little under $12,000,000. There was no evidence in this market of sales of securities by the insurance companies which must meet heavy losses, but a movement of this kind was again under way in the London market on the part of the great English companies involved in the matter. As a result of the transfers of capital which must be made from London to this country in connection with these losses, discussion was rife in London financial circles yesterday of the chances of an increase in the English bank rate, but well-informed bankers here doubt the necessity of so drastic a step.

The bank statement attracted little attention, largely for the reason that it so nearly fulfilled early forecasts. The increase in cash reported, however, was nearly $2,000,000 above the preliminary estimates, but this was offset by a larger increase in loans than had been expected. As a result of these changes and that in the deposit item, where the gain was $25,602,000, surplus was increased by $11,594,000, and stands now at $16,366,000, a total substantially exceeded only once since 1899. The point of interest here is, of course, the impairment which this item will undergo before the next bank statement, as a result of the drain entailed by the San Francisco disaster.

Marble Altars Admitted Free of Duty—Other Decisions.

In a decision by Judge Waite, the Board of United States General Appraisers sustained yesterday a claim made by V. A. Facigna for free entrance of a marble altar imported for presentation to St. Michael's Church of Flushing, L. I. Collector Stranahan denied free entry on the ground that the altar is not a "work of art" within the meaning of Paragraph 703 of the Dingley tariff. The board, however, reaches a different conclusion.

The board sustained a claim made by St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church of San Francisco for free entry of two expensive sculptured marble altars. It is believed that both altars were destroyed by the wrecking of the church in Wednesday's disaster.

Other importers' claims sustained were filed by Veit, Son & Co., Hammill & Gillespie, and Campbell, Metzger & Jacobson, New York. The board overruled protests filed by L. Metzger & Co., A. J. Pullman & Co., A. Strauss & Co., Joseph Wallace and others, Lines & Warne; and Isaacs, Vought & Co., New York, and H. Beyersdorfer & Co., Philadelphia.

A claim by Veit, Son & Co., New York, was partly sustained.

ON THE LONDON EXCHANGE

Money Stringency and San Francisco Disaster Check Business.

ALL EYES ON WALL STREET

Apprehension of Trouble There Makes Brokers Cautious—Large Withdrawals of Japanese Money.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.
[Copyright, 1906.]

LONDON, April 21.—The stringency in the money market and apprehension of trouble in Wall Street on account of the San Francisco disaster have disturbed the stock market here and put off the great improvement in business which brokers last week were predicting would come after the Easter holidays.

The scarcity of credits is due chiefly to the withdrawals of large amounts of Japanese money from the London deposit banks for the settlement of certain liabilities of the Japanese Government. These withdrawals, being quite unexpected, and following heavy withdrawals of gold for America, put the money market in a straitened condition and caused a heavy advance of rates for loans and discounts. Then came news of the earthquake, and this piling up of depressing factors has affected the tone of the stock markets most unfavorably.

Last week there was a lack of business on the Stock Exchange, but an abundance of hopefulness. This week there has been no business worth speaking of, and no expectation of a betterment in the near future. Consols, which seemed to be steadily moving upward, have dropped again into the eighties.

Foreign Government securities, almost without exception, have fallen off fractionally, and British rails, disregarding the bumper traffic returns for the Easter holidays, are all lower, being sold, it is said, to provide funds to meet the monetary requirements.

Americans have been depressed and are not likely to show any firmness so long as fear prevails here of a monetary squeeze in New York due to the San Francisco disaster.

Mines have been practically ignored throughout the week.

LONDON STOCK MARKET.

LONDON, April 21.—Rates for money and discounts were firm in the market to-day. Much caution was exercised, owing to the uncertainties in connection with the American demand for gold and the result of the San Francisco disaster.

Operators on the Stock Exchange were still nervous in consequence of the California calamity, though trading improved in spots prior to the settlement. Insurance companies' stocks recovered moderately on the cessation of forced sales. Consols remained easy. Home rails improved.

Americans opened firm on reassuring reports, but dealings were restricted, and prices closed irregular.

Foreigners generally were steady on Paris advices. Russians were dull.

Kaffirs were more cheerful.

Japanese imperial 6s of 1904 were quoted at 101½.

Bullion amounting to £251,000 was withdrawn from the Bank of England to-day for shipment to France.

Gold premiums are quoted as follows: Madrid, 15.30; Lisbon, 4.

TRADING IN BALTIMORE.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, April 21.—Trading to-day for the one session was rather slow. The bond list was well supported. The strength displayed in United Railways securities was a feature. City Passenger 5s advanced a half; Cotton Duck 5s were strong at 85⅝. In the stock list material changes were noted on the long side. Norfolk Railway & Light went up [illegible] points from a previous sale, to 18¾. Houston Oil was ⅜ higher. Atlantic Coast Line rights at the close displayed weakness, receding a half.

THE SPECULATIVE SITUATION.

So many of the settled opinions concerning the stock market which might have been asserted a week ago are now contingent upon conditions which none could have foreseen, (conditions arising from the San Francisco disaster,) and these conditions are still so new and so susceptible of conflicting interpretation that Wall Street's ideas of the confronting situation are necessarily confused. The comment that went out of the Street at the week's close was greatly mixed. A few examples may be taken at random. One house says: "Morally * * * this frightful calamity, while it will undoubtedly cause much private suffering, will, we believe, act as a sort of tonic to the financial world. However, that the great losses incurred will have their effect, we should be the last to deny, and in writing thus we are only trying to take a view unprejudiced by the excitement that prevails at the moment." Another house writes: "It is not unlikely that we shall see further improvement in all speculative markets." Another: "On any strong spots stocks bought to protect the market will again come upon the market. The San Francisco disaster is too serious to be discounted by a decline such as has already taken place." And a very prominent operator, whose opinion, it may be mentioned, is not biased by his commitments in the market, predicts that the San Francisco disaster will cease after a week to be thought of as a factor in the stock market. The prosperity of the country, he asserts, has not been touched, and crops, the basis of our prosperity, could not have finer prospects.

⁂

That the technical position of the market has undergone some modification cannot be doubted. Stocks have been "loosened up." The heavy and impulsive liquidation of Wednesday and Thursday could not leave it otherwise. In the nature of things many of the stocks that were bought on the decline to steady the market will be for sale again on any substantial recovery. Some of the information on which it was proposed to base bullish operations will have to be reaffirmed under the changed conditions before speculators will be willing to act upon it with confidence. For example, a bullish regard for Atchison has been based upon the belief that the dividend would be increased to 5 per cent. at the next period. The losses suffered at San Francisco, if not offset by an extraordinary increase of tonnage due to rebuilding operations, may alter intentions concerning the dividend, and may also have some similar effect upon the Union Pacific's dividend policy. These matters at the present time take the form only of doubts and misgivings, but they must be set at rest before speculators will proceed with as much confidence as before. Officials of the Harriman roads are understood to believe that the rebuilding of San Francisco will so stimulate business as to congest their lines with tonnage, and, while this hope may and probably will be realized, it is an economic truth that business of that nature is always conducted at the expense of business somewhere else.

⁂

In the confusion of ideas as to the effects likely to follow the San Francisco disaster, and also as to the ability of the stock market to transcend them, it is noticeable that speculative opinion is rather sanguine as to the immediate future, while banking sentiment, concerned more with the ultimate effects, is somewhat less optimistic. Eminent bankers assert that the stock market will be forced to receive a stream of steady liquidation directly traceable to the necessities created at San Francisco. It is a question whether the speculative element can bull the market through such selling on the lines previously indicated by advocates of higher prices this coming Summer.

⁂

Thanks to the policy recently adopted by the Secretary of the Treasury, by which gold imports are facilitated, the New York banks are able to meet the initial demand from the Pacific Coast with immeasurably greater ease than would have been deemed possible three weeks ago if the present situation could have been foreseen. Th bank statement yesterday showed how rapidly a money market situation can be righted. It reported a surplus reserve of more than $10,000,000, as compared with a deficit of $2,500,000 only two weeks before.

⁂

One of the most encouraging single features of the stock market last week was the relative strength of the United States Steel stocks. There is understood to be a very powerful pool in Steel common, aiming to put the stock to 50 in the Summer. It is perhaps misleading to refer to it as a pool. It is not that in the ordinary sense of the term. What seems really to be the case is that concerted initiative has been taken on the bull side of the stock, such initiative as has invariably heretofore been associated with aggressive operations in the stock. The movement began a fortnight ago, and there was no evidence last week of a break in the programme. On the contrary, the stock received excellent support under selling pressure and recovered easily when this pressure abated. The general market has always been responsive to the leadership of the Steel shares; or, rather, the outside public has always responded willingly to that leadership, and, if the campaign referred to is carried through, it can hardly fail to encourage miscellaneous speculation on a broader scale.

⁂

It seems reasonably safe to assume that the so-called big interests are committed to the bull side of the stock market; it may be further assumed that unless the odds become too great they will proceed with a campaign for higher prices, especially in those stocks which have least to lose and perhaps something to gain by the San Francisco calamity. Foremost among such stocks, of course, are the United States Steel shares, already referred to. The Amalgamated Copper dividend was increased last week to the rate of 7 per cent. by the declaration of an extra dividend of ½ of 1 per cent. in addition to the regular 1½ per cent. for the quarter, and it is said on very good authority that the rate would have been advanced to 8 per cent. except that the condition of the stock market at the time made such action seem inexpedient from a speculative point of view. There is hope of a sustained bull campaign in the stock from this level, based upon the prospect of dividend increases yet to come. Owing to the enormous speculative interest which now converges upon the stock its leadership in a general bull campaign would doubtless be very effective. Then there is Union Pacific, which, if there is no change in its dividend prospects, might easily be put to 170, as every bull in the country believes, on the probability of an increase of its dividend to the rate of 7 per cent., and an advance of 15 or 20 points in Union Pacific would certainly influence the whole market. Then there are the low priced stocks, on the [illegible] of which as yet there has been no concerted demonstration. It is argued that, if for no other purpose than to establish a higher level of prices on which to begin a selling campaign, the big interests may be expected, if possible, to make a bull market along the lines of least resistence.

⁂

H. V. Jones, the crop expert, returned to Minneapolis on Friday from an examination of the Southwest, saying that in Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas, and Nebraska the April condition of wheat was nearer perfect than ever before in his experience. He adds: "Kansas is on a higher basis than last year. Nebraska conditions good, not so far advanced as Kansas. Millers in Texas say harvest will begin May 15 to 20. The Pan Handle counties are par. Mr. Inglis reports from Ohio Valley, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Kentucky high general average conditions better than last year. If Winter crop matures present basis, yield of Winter wheat will break all records. The State reports of conditions for April are 5 to 15 points over the April Government figures."

IRON AND STEEL NOTES.

Demand for Steel Bars Brisker Than Ever Before.

One of the immediate effects of the San Francisco calamity on the steel trade is the inquiries for structural steel, which are now beginning to appear in the Eastern market. The owner of one of the large buildings destroyed is said to have determined upon the construction of a sixteen-story office building on the site at once, and it is said in well-informed trade quarters that an order will be placed on Monday for 5,000 tons of structural steel for this purpose.

The demand for steel bars has never been so brisk in the history of the trade. It is estimated that more than 250,000 tons have sold recently. The Republic Iron and Steel Company alone sold 125,000 tons in the buying movement inaugurated by the harvester companies.

THE COTTON MARKET.

Early Confidence Gives Way and Prices End Unchanged.

With the Nation upset over one of the greatest calamities in its history, with incalculable damage to property, and commercial wealth obliterated, the cotton market recoiled only 37 points, and recovered 26 of this, making the net loss in prices but 11 points. The decline started on Wednesday, when prices receded about 12 points; on Thursday 10 points were added to this, and on Friday morning the bottom was reached. A few years ago an influence so remote as the Jamison raid in South Africa broke the New York cotton market 60 points in one day, and Gen. Buller's defeat there some years later caused a slump of 40 points at one session.

The remarkable steadiness in the face of the great disaster at home was attributed yesterday to the strong spot situation. Spinners, it was said, took advantage of the setback, and quietly increased their stock. While exporters tried to buy cotton cheap in the South, holders were reported to have made but slight concessions. Notwithstanding this, the new crop has made excellent progress during the week.

Yesterday's market took on considerable strength at the opening. Liverpool was 7 to 9 points up, which was more than expected. The market here opened 6 to 10 points higher, and showed a broadening tendency. After selling up 2 to 3 points from the opening and 5 to 10 up for the day, a reaction carried prices down to about Friday's close.

Liverpool sold 7,000 bales of spot cotton at an advance of 10 points, to 6.14d. Futures closed 7 to 9 points higher—May-June, 5.97; July-August, 5.96; August-September, 5.92; October-November, 5.70, and December-January, 5.69. Southern spot markets were steady and unchanged to 1-16 point decline. The local spot market advanced 5 points, to 11.80, against 7.80 last year.

Cotton Opinions.

A. O. BROWN & CO.—It may be set down as reasonably certain that despite the great disaster at San Francisco the underlying factors in the cotton trade remain unchanged. The strength of the spot situation is still the most striking feature.

A. NORDEN & CO.—It looks to us as if a great deal of the strength of the situation were sentimental, and caused more by the fear of what may happen in the future than by the actual facts of the present.

FERNIE, WILSON & CO.—The declines have been caused by the disarrangement of speculative conditions, not by any change in the actual trade. After financial matters have adjusted themselves, we will undoubtedly experience a boom.

MARSHALL, SPADER & CO.—We are not inclined to look for active speculation in the near future, as, from various causes, we believe operators will await developments, pending the effect of the Pacific Coast disaster and possible results from May deliveries on Friday next.

GRAIN AND PROVISIONS.

WHEAT—The wheat market opened at about unchanged prices and promptly advanced about ⅜c on covering. The congested condition of May wheat contracts continues to be an element of fear. Local sentiment may be rather bearish on the generally favorable character of the crop outlook at home and abroad, while, for our own country, the news reaching the grain market centres is of bearish purport. For some time past the backbone of the wheat market has been the remarkable consumption of the grain at home; latterly there have been indications of less of this support, and some believe that the grain must go to an export basis before a substantial foothold shall have been reached. Cash wheat closed quiet but firm. No. 2 red, nominal in elevator, and 90½c free on board afloat, and No. 1 Northern, Duluth, 89⅝c, free on board afloat.

CORN—The market for corn opened at a decline of ¼c on May contracts, the only position traded in; later this month sold at 54c, the closing price of the previous day; but finally the figure was 53⅝c, indicating a decline of ⅜c, while the nominal quotations indicated a decline of ½c in July and September and an unchanged price for December. Cash corn, while quiet, was nominally firm. No. 2 corn, 57c nominal, in elevator, and 55c asked, free on board, afloat; No. 2 white and No. 2 yellow, 56c, free on board afloat.

THE BANK STATEMENT.

Heavy Gain in Cash—Surplus Reserve Larger by $11,594,225.

The increase in cash reported by the banks yesterday amounted to $17,994,900, which was larger than had been indicated by any of the estimates based on the known movements of currency. The losses suffered by the banks toward the close of the week owing to the large transfers to the Pacific Coast counted only for one or two days under the average system used in making up the bank statement, while the special deposits against gold imports figured in each day's statements of the banks. The increase in surplus reserves amounted to more than the total surplus reported at this time a year ago. The banks now hold $16,366,725 above legal requirements, compared with a surplus of only $4,772,000 a week ago and a deficit of $2,560,000 on April 7.

Deposits increased last week by $25,602,700. The loans also increased, but only to about a third of the increase in deposits.

The items of last week's bank statement, the changes from the preceding week, and the statement of April 22, 1905, follow:

Call loans, 5@7 per cent.; time loans, collateral, 5½@6 per cent.; time loans, mercantile paper, 5½ per cent.; Clearing House loans, 6 per cent.; New York funds, 10@16 2-3c discount. PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, April 21.—There was not much business done in the local stock market. The feature was the free offerings and decline in the stock of the Insurance Company of North America, of which 838 shares were sold. Opening sales were at 25, compared with the last sale on Friday at 27½, and under pressure the price broke to 22½, with only a partial recovery to 25. The sales were by the smaller holders, who were frightened by the fear of loss by the company as a result of the San Francisco calamity. It was later explained by the officials of the company, however, that the total liabilities of the concern in California were less than the surplus.

There were sharp rallies in United Railways of San Francisco and the issues of the Philadelphia Company of Pittsburg. The arbitrage stocks moved within narrow limits and followed closely the range of prices made in New York.

The Toledo, Canada Southern & Detroit Railway has authorized $4,500,000 fifty-year 4 per cent. gold bonds guaranteed by the Michigan Central Railroad, which is the lessee of the road from the Canada Southern. Of the new bonds $1,600,000 have been sold to J. P. Morgan & Co., the proceeds of which will go to redeem $1,500,000 of 7 per cent. bonds, due Jan. 1 last, which are held in the treasury of the Canada Southern.

Circulars have been sent to bondholders of the American School Furniture Company by Edward Miehling of 258 Broadway, who asks those who are opposed to the proposed reorganization plan and the exchange of their bonds for preferred stock to communicate with him. The plan put forward several months ago proposed the organization of the American Seating Company with $2,000,000 common stock and $2,000,000 7 per cent. cumulative preferred to take over the old company. Part of the new preferred stock was to be sold at par, with a bonus of 20 per cent. common, to secure $1,000,000 cash working capital which it was expected would largely increase the net earnings of the concern.

That your petitioner is a street surface railway corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, having filed its certificate of incorporation in the office of the Secretary of State of New York on the 29th day of July, 1905, for the purpose of constructing, maintaining, and operating a street surface railway in the Borough of Brooklyn, City of New York.

2. That your petitioner desires to obtain from the Board of Estimate and Apportionment of The City of New York its consent to and a grant of the right, privileges, and franchise to use a portion of Bowne Street, in the Borough of Brooklyn, City of New York, for street railway purposes, and for the construction, maintenance and operation of a single track street surface railway upon and along the surface of said Bowne Street, a description of such proposed railway being as follows: Beginning at a point southeast of Imlay Street, where it will connect with the track of the New York Dock Company, and running southeasterly along Bowne Street to and into the property of J. 3. Your petitioner further shows that there is no adequate means of transportation provided between the termini of the proposed railroad, and your petitioner believes there is a public demand for the construction and operation of this proposed railroad, and that such construction and operation will be a public convenience and benefit, the said railroad to be used for freight only.

BUSINESS TROUBLES.

HUGO ABELS.—A creditor's petition in bankruptcy was filed yesterday against Hugo Abels, manufacturers' agent, shoes, 137 and 139 West Broadway, by Samuel Renneck, $600. It is said that the alleged bankrupt has admitted in writing his inability to pay his debts and his willingness to be adjudged a bankrupt. Judge Holt in the United States Court appointed Thomas Proctor receiver, and fixed his bond at $1,500. The liabilities are said to be from $5,000 to $6,000, with assets of $2,500, consisting of stock, $1,000; debts due, $1,300, and fixtures, $200.

LOUIS KROTOSKY.—Louis Krotosky, residing at 507 Amsterdam Avenue, has filed a petition in bankruptcy with liabilities of $8,992 and assets of $830. The largest creditors are H. B. Claflin Company, $967; Hyman Hein, $2,600, and Louis Flato, $450. All the liabilities were incurred as indorser for David Krause, whose address is given in the papers as 58 West 115th Street. IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

It will probably be many a day before any single week of real estate trading in this or any other city will yield any such group of enormous transactions as has come to light since last Monday. The Stewart Building deal, the sale of the Altman properties on Sixth Avenue, the lease of the southwest corner of Fifth Avenue and Thirty-fifth Street, and the purchase of the site for a new retail establishment on Thirty-fourth Street's famous block—these four trifling items have represented total considerations of about $10,000,000, and any one of them would have been regarded as sufficient to give distinctive character to any week's record.

Perhaps the most important of these deals—at least in point of the amount involved—was Felix Isman's purchase of the Stewart Building, through Leopold Weil. It is the most substantial bit of evidence yet offered by the Philadelphian of his great confidence in New York real estate. The great size of this property and the fact that it has been the subject of periodic gossip as the site for a municipal building have doubtless combined to divert attention from it among large real estate buying interests, but the opinion was very generally expressed yesterday that Mr. Isman has made the beginning of what will be his most successful operation in this city. His plans for the future of the property are referred to in detail in another column.

The interesting phase of the Altman store transaction lies in the fact that the way has been opened for the introduction of another great retail enterprise in the Sixth Avenue section. The future possibilities of this district as the shopping centre of the entire metropolitan area have been greatly enhanced by the developments of the last few months, and it is safe to assume that no merchant who has ever encountered the real estate problem of starting a store in this city will fail to realize the advantages of an opportunity to get a building and thirty-five lots of ground simply by signing a single lease.

The Acker, Merrall & Condit Company's lease and Oppenheim, Collins & Co.'s purchase emphasize primarily the rapid growth of the Thirty-fourth Street neighborhood. It is only a little over a year ago that Thirty-fourth Street came prominently to the fore and Boehm & Coon paid what seemed at the time a staggering price for the southwest corner of Fifth Avenue and Thirty-fifth Street—yet within this brief period this price has been abundantly justified and the re-improvement of the entire north side of Thirty-fourth Street, between Fifth Avenue and Broadway, has been advanced well toward completion. Never before in the city's history has the making over of an area of high-priced property been carried forward at any such rate.

THE AUCTION ROOM.

Successful offerings of business Broadway properties, a Nassau Street building, and a Riverside Drive residence, besides sales of small tenements in many sections, furnished additional evidence last week of the well-sustained demand at auction for almost every kind of improved property. Successful sales were also held involving vacant properties in the more remote parts of the Bronx, and particularly in the case of the fifty-one lots in the neighborhood of Westchester and Tremont Avenues, sold by H. C. Mapes & Co., the prices were excellent.

This week's schedule, while containing some improved parcels of unusual merit, will also give perhaps the best opportunity yet afforded this Spring to judge of the market's attitude toward vacant lot buying. Offerings of this class listed for the next few days include forty-two lots on Decatur and Perry Avenues and Reservoir Oval, to be sold on Tuesday by James L. Wells; twenty-six lots on Jerome Avenue, near Burnside Avenue, and other Bronx lots on Fulton, Valentine, and Ryer Avenues, to be sold on Wednesday by Bryan L. Kennelly, and Joseph P. Day's sales of property on Broadway and Bennett Avenue, north of 187th Street, and on Park and Webster Avenues, near 173d St.

Besides the adjourned sale of the Fifth Avenue Theatre property, Auctioneer Kennelly also announces for Wednesday offerings of the dwelling 24 East Fifty-fourth Street, the southeast corner of Tenth Avenue and Fortieth Street, and lower east side parcels on East Broadway, Division and Mangin Streets.

On the same day there will be put up at the stand of Joseph P. Day the property 2,182 to 2,186 Broadway, with an "L" fronting on Seventy-seventh Street; the excavated plot, 102 by 148.5, at the southeast corner of Broadway and Eightieth Street; the six-story elevator apartment house at 222 to 224 Central Park South; the northwest corner of Madison Avenue and Ninety-first Street, 100.8 by 87.9; the Sailors' Snug Harbor leasehold at Washington Square North and University Place; 149 Seventh Avenue, adjoining the southeast corner of Nineteenth Street, and 27 Lispenard Street.

INCREASED AMOUNT OF BUILDING IN QUEENS

Records Show Increase of 180 Per Cent. Over Last Year.

LONG ISLAND CITY BUYING

Large Tracts Sold at Arverne—Successful Development Projects at Other Places.

The building record in the Borough of Queens for the first three months of 1906 shows a heavy increase over that for the corresponding period last year. The number of plans for new buildings in the Borough filed during the first quarter was 873, the estimated cost being $3,767,206. The estimated cost of the buildings for the first three months of 1905 was $1,035,485, which indicates that the record this year, based upon estimated cost of the buildings, shows an increase of 180 per cent. The number of alterations for the first three months of 1906 was 264, calling for an outlay of $260,553, while for the first three months of last year the estimated cost of alterations was only $83,908.

Anna Anable, Dr. William J. Burnett and Virginia A. Clark, have sold to William J. Rennell four lots at the corner of East Avenue and Sixth Street, Long Island City, for $24,000.

The Leonard Moody Company reports the following sales of Long Island property: The Hegeman farm of twenty-six acres, on the Rockaway Plank Road and Rockaway Turnpike, for M. Hollander to a Philadelphia syndicate; also, the Daniel Murray and Robert Murray farms of forty acres on Farmers' Avenue and New York Avenue to a Pittsburg syndicate; also, twelve and a half acres, known as the Amberman farm, on Farmers' Avenue to a Rochester syndicate; also, forty acres on Woodfield Road, or Brooklyn Avenue, at Rockville Centre known as the Langdon farm; also, the Golder farm of fourteen acres on Farmers' Avenue near the Metropolitan Jockey Club property; also, the Carman farm at Valley Stream, consisting of seventy-six acres on Norwood Road, Franklin Avenue and Wheeler Avenue.

The McKnight Realty Company has resold for Norman E. Archer, Blocks 5 and 6 in their West Penwood tract at Bayside, L. I. C. Gustave and Albert Henry Hanft are the buyers of Block 5, and Charles Faas of Block 6. This property was bought by Mr. Archer from the McKnight Realty Company only a short time ago.

The Ocean and Bay Front Improvement Company has bought from Kate Price a plot of about fifty lots in Arverne, with a frontage of 1,000 feet on the west side of Florence Avenue, north of the Boulevard. From Frank T. Morrill the company has purchased another tract on the same thoroughfare, with a frontage of 3,500 feet. The value of both properties is said to be about $300,000.

DEMAND AT DOUGLAS MANOR.

The Rickert-Finlay Realty Company, which is developing a number of large tracts on Long Island within the city limits, including Douglas Manor, Bellcourt, and Broadway, Flushing, has sold at Douglas Manor alone over $1,500,000 worth of lots. This property has been disposed of more rapidly than any other subdivision that has been placed on the market. The tract at Douglas Manor was not formally opened until April 10, and at that time reservations had been made for more than $1,000,000 worth of the property.

The following sales were made at Douglas Manor last week: To Van Rensselaer Sweeay, five lots, for $3,100; to William E. Annis, five lots, $2,850; to George Y. Gilbert, five lots, for $3,100; to G. Frank Moseman, five lots, $2,840; to C. G. Edmonds, six lots, for $6,100; to Frank Schaefer, four lots, for $2,500; to Florence M. Everitt, five lots, for $3,200; to Mrs. Corinne Parrott Kane, ten lots, for $10,200; to W. J. Coleman, eight lots, for $5,400, and to H. Bridgman Smith, forty lots, for $25,000.

BUYING AT EAST ELMHURST.

The Bankers' Land and Mortgage Corporation reports large sales within the last two weeks at its development on the shores of Long Island Sound—East Elmhurst, Queens Borough.

Of the great tract of 2,000 lots, opened a year and a half ago, only 200 remain unsold, and these are considered the best in the whole property. Every lot commands fine views of Sound and Bay. This development is said to have been successful very largely by reason of the policy inaugurated by this corporation of making all improvements, so as to avoid future assessments. The streets are all graded and macadamized, miles of concrete sidewalks, water and gas mains are laid, and thousands of shade trees planted. Over one hundred villas have been built within a year, and plans for twenty-five more have been filed.

Every inch of this development is restricted against business, and the cost of dwellings is carefully specified. Each building must be erected upon at least two lots and stand back twenty feet from the street. One of the unique features of this colony is a park located in the central part of its mile of water front, with a pier 400 feet long extending into the waters of the Sound, the right to use which is given to each property owner. The corporation also lends money to build houses upon the lots purchased.

NEAR GARDEN CITY.

The Miller-Kendig Real Estate Company announces the opening of a new suburb at Hempstead, known as Hempstead Plaza. Available for this property are many recent improvements in Hempstead, including a municipal water plant and a new school costing $75,000. Hempstead Plaza is only five minutes' walk to Garden City, and here also are located the famous Garden City golf links.

The natural beauty of the surrounding country is such as to give the fullest confidence in the future of this particular section of Long Island. As soon as the electrification of the Long Island Railroad is completed, it is estimated that it will be possible to reach Hempstead Plaza by the new East River Tunnel in twenty-two minutes.

This region is one of high ground, and has an added attraction, owing to the beautiful improvements made by the many wealthy New Yorkers who have chosen it as the site for their Summer homes.

In addition to the many natural advantages of Hempstead Plaza, the Kendig-Miller Real Estate Company is spending $20,000 for local improvements, macadamizing the roads, and laying concrete sidewalks, as well as placing shade trees on all streets.

AT FLORAL PARK.

Floral Park, situated midway between the Sound and the ocean, is at present the scene of much active development. The town is in the great central plain of Long Island, which has long been famous for its picturesque surroundings and equable climate. The community is well supplied with churches and schools, while its other improvements are of high class. The House and Home Company, which has been in close touch with the recent growth of Floral Park, reports that much new building is being undertaken, and that the next few months promise to bring a large increase in the town's permanent population.

ORMONDE PARK.

Ormonde Park, the new suburb of the Carrollton Realty Company, is five minutes' ride from the Rosedale station. The property faces the famous Merrick Road, just behond the city line. The extension of the Long Island Railroad's third-rail system will bring this section within the quick transit limits of the city. The Carrollton Realty Company special trains to Ormonde Park leave Long Island City at 10:30 A. M. and 1:20 P. M. daily.

MASSAPEQUA'S GROWTH.

Thousands of Lots Already Sold in Attractive Long Island Suburb.

What is probably the largest suburban development enterprise ever undertaken around New York, if not in the country, is that of the Queens Land and Title Company at Massapequa. The company's purchases there last Fall covered an area equivalent to 40,000 lots, so that it can without exaggeration apply to its holdings the designation of "suburban city site."

All of these 40,000 lots are on high ground within from three to ten minutes' walk of one of the three stations of the Montauk Division of the Long Island Railroad, which are within the limits of the property. The tract is also intersected by the famous Merrick and Hicksville Roads, the only two highways running the entire length and breadth of Long Island.

The fact that Massapequa has been for over twenty years one of the most popular of Long Island's Summer resorts is perhaps the strongest recommendation of the natural attractions of the place—combining, as it does, all the advantages of the country with the many opportunities for sport and recreation afforded by Great South Bay. That the territory must be one of healthful conditions and surroundings is also borne out by the fact that Massapequa is the head of the Brooklyn water supply system on Long Island.

Although the season for suburban buying is yet in its earliest stages, the amount of public interest in this property has been shown in the volume of business already done. Since the property was placed on sale last December over 3,000 lots have been sold. The fact that this great holding is under one management insures its desirability, in that its future development will be carried forward along uniform lines.

The company has found it necessary on account of the great number of buyers, in order that their customers may go to the property without any inconvenience or annoyance, to use a special train, which has been placed at their disposal by the Long Island Railroad and which leaves the East Thirty-fourth Street Ferry, New York, at 2 P. M. on Sundays.

AMITYVILLE'S ATTRACTIONS.

Old South Shore Town Scene of Much Buying and Building.

With the recent development of Amityville, which among the South Shore towns on Long Island has reflected in a marked extent the prospect of improved transit, the Federal Land and Improvement Company has been prominently identified.

This company, of which John F. Mincher is President and Charles C. Sawyer general manager, has developed Amityville Heights, Buena Vista Park, Great Neck Terrace, Cedar Brook Grove, Convent Pines, and Federal Hill. Four of these properties have been completely sold and the others are being disposed of rapidly. Forty new dwellings are now in course of construction. The prices of Amityville lots range from $49 to $800, and during last week the company sold twenty-nine lots for a total of $5,039.

Amityville, being one of the old established towns of the south shore, with a population of 6,000, has municipal improvements of high order, besides churches, schools, stores of every description—in short, establishments of every kind that might be regarded as part of a thoroughly organized community.

Even under existing conditions forty trains a day provide excellent transit facilities, while with the completion of the Pennsylvania improvements the thirty-two miles from Manhattan to Amityville will doubtless be traversed in as many minutes. A trolley line now building from Amityville to Oyster Bay will be completed in July, and will give direct connection with the north shore of the island.

The town has been for years the stopping place for hundreds of sportsmen on their trips to the hunting and fishing grounds of Great South Bay, and the attractions of that body of water are having strong influence just at present, in connection with other advantages, in bringing new residents to Amityville.

The Merrick Road passes through the town, but it is only one of many fine macadamized thoroughfares which have contributed to the popularity of this territory with riders, drivers, and automobilists.

TO ALTER STEWART BUILDING.

New Owner Will Build Restaurant in Basement and an Arcade.

The purchase of the Stewart Building, at Broadway and Chambers Street, by Felix Isman, announced in yesterday's TIMES, will bring about a complete remodeling of that structure.

Mr. Isman intends to convert the basement of the building into a large restaurant and to build an arcade 28 feet wide running through the middle of the building from east to west, with entrances also on Chambers and Reade Streets.

The sale of the property for the Hilton estate to Mr. Isman was negotiated by Broker Leopold Weil. The late Judge Hilton bought the building from Mrs. A. T. Stewart twenty-two years ago for $2,250,000. Judge Hilton spent about $750,000 in changing it from a store and loft structure into an office building.

MORTGAGE TAX ISSUE.

Pass Bill Over Governor's Veto, Says Jefferson M. Levy.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The real estate sentiment of New York should assert itself. While I do not wish to criticise the praiseworthy efforts of those who have had to do with the passage of the bill to abolish the mortgage tax, I think they gave Gov. Higgins and their other opponents an advantage when they stopped to palter with the recording tax. Nearly everybody realizes now that it is the borrower who pays the tax, and that a mortgage tax means a double tax, and that New York real estate already bears an unconscionable share of the burdens of taxation.

But aside from that, mortgage money, especially in this period of unusual activity, is as much an implement of trade as the trowel of the bricklayer or the carpenter's hammer. It reminds me of the feeling aroused at the adoption of the Chicago platform ten years ago. It came at a moment when the country was staggering from the blow of an unprecedented loss of material treasure. The opponents of the mortgage tax should never have consented even to a recording tax. Gov. Higgins, patriotic as his motives undoubtedly are, has been deferred to too much. He has now gone through the measure in a critical spirit, because he believes that mortgages should be taxed. If that is his opinion here is a clear-cut issue that should be thrashed out.

It is time for the opponents of the mortgage tax to stand up and be counted. Let the attempt be made to pass the bill over the Governor's veto, and let those who believe that the lender pays the tax stand by the Governor, and appeal next Fall to their constituents for vindication. We can be content with the votes of the others. Compromise on details may be defensible, but a compromise on principle ought to bring defeat.

The Governor in his annual message ascribes his championship of a mortgage tax to the fact that personalty so generally succeeds in avoiding taxation. The experience of the past year shows that the mortgage tax falls on the borrower. If there is any one who doubts this, let him see how 5½ per cent. mortgages have supplanted 5 per cent. mortgages. In other words, the Governor's attempt to reach personalty has simply added to the burdens of real estate. The fact seems to me beyond dispute. Moreover, it falls on all real estate owners, rich and poor. To pretend that the repeal of the mortgage tax is in the interest of corporations or large lending institutions or individuals is Pharisaical.

Yonkers, N. Y., April 17, 1906.

The New York Times:

I experimented recently with an advertisement in several of the New York Sunday papers, and the results achieved by the display in your paper more than confirmed the opinion I had previously formed as to the efficacy of THE TIMES as an advertising medium. This decision was not based simply on the number of replies which agreeably surprised me, but also the class of people with whom it brought us in touch, being identically the ones which the nature of our high-grade development at Cedarcliff, Hastings-on-Hudson, would appeal to.

We have closed several contracts for suburban homes with this class which can be directly traced to this one display.

This testimony is the more cheerfully given being unsolicited.

Yours for business,

The First Link in the Chain of Rapid Transit which will weld Long Island to Manhattan will be completed next September. This link is the Subway extension from the Battery to Flatbush Ave. Station in Brooklyn. It means that you can board a Subway train in any part of Manhattan or the Bronx and with but one change of cars ride to

FLORAL PARK
THE HOME OF THE FLOWERS

On the heel of these improved transportation facilities will come the Belmont Tunnel at 42d Street, to be followed three years hence by the completion of the great Pennsylvania R. R. Tunnel, which will bring Floral Park within 20 Minutes From Herald Square.

Besides all these momentous railroad facilities, a new trolley line is now being built, which is to run from Jamaica to Hempstead, on the famous Jericho Turnpike. The line passes through the centre of our property and forms the most important link in the chain of trolley lines which will connect with the Belmont Tunnel to Manhattan.

Just think what this means for the future of this town!

FLORAL PARK is not a barren wilderness, but a flourishing town with all city conveniences, several good hotels, a number of stores, churches of various denominations, a fine public school, a fire department, etc. The raising of flowers and seeds has been its chief industry for the past 25 years. All summer long the place is ablaze with color and its atmosphere laden with the perfume of roses and hyacinths.

The property which we have developed here is practically in the town, within several blocks of the R. R. Station. It is restricted and has water supply and gas.

The stupendous improvements NOW BUILDING, aggregating $360,000,000, to provide Long Island with Rapid Transit and homes for millions, is the greatest expenditure of money for suburban development and affords the greatest opportunity for profitable investment in suburban property the world has ever known.

Bronx property made an average advance on completion of the Subway of over 900 per cent. Long Island will soon have three subways and three new bridges completed. EVERY ONE OF THESE SUBWAYS WILL OPERATE DIRECT OVER THE MONTAUK DIVISION, Long Island Railroad, and

MASSAPEQUA WILL BE WITHOUT ANY DOUBT THE MOST IMPORTANT SUBURBAN CITY ON THIS DIVISION

Its grand elevation and landscape, the beautiful fresh water lakes, parks, drives and ocean view make easy and sure the building up of the beautiful city now started.

500 DEAD FOUND IN CITY'S RUINS

Insurance Men Say Loss Is $300,000,000.

CREEDS UNITED IN CAMP.

But Work of Clearing Up Goes on Apace.

HEALTH CONDITIONS GOOD

Plenty of Food and Water, but Medical Supplies Needed—Sightseers Not Wanted in City.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 22.—Out of the chaos in San Francisco to-day came some definite knowledge of the loss of lives and property in the earthquake and conflagration.

The bodies of 500 victims have been buried up to to-night. How many more are in the ruins is to be learned by means of a systematic search begun to-day. How many died in the mad rush to escape by water will never be known.

Insurance adjusters have learned the extent of the burned area. Competent authorities estimate to-night that the property loss will aggregate $300,000,000, and that the insurance companies carried approximately $175,000,000 insurance on this property.

Had it not been for the sight of the rude altars set up in the open air wherever San Francisco's homeless thousands were camped one would have had some difficulty in getting any associations of the Sabbath in this city to-day.

Everywhere throughout the burned as well as the remaining section of the city there was the greatest activity. Streets were being cleared of débris; laborers were repairing broken water pipes, sewers, and gas mains; electricians everywhere were seeking to untangle the confusion of wires—in fact, San Francisco was in the first stages of its regeneration.

Health Conditions Are Good.

The health of the scores of thousands camped in the open air is, under the circumstances, remarkably good. There have been several cases of pneumonia and colds are quite common, but there is nothing like an epidemic of pulmonary troubles. The Board of Health reports that there is very little contagious diseases, and for the treatment of these hospitals have been provided.

There are no hungry people to-night. Food by the carload and boatload poured into Oakland last night and to-day in sufficient quantities to overwhelm the committee whch has in charge its distribution. So great was the volume of foodstuffs that the General Committee to-day made an appeal for skilled labor in the handling of these supplies.

The homeless people are no longer obliged to subsist upon bread and canned stuff entirely, but to-day got hot coffee, canned meats, and even cakes and oranges.

No Lights in the Houses.

The water situation, while causing inconvenience to the people, is no longer such a problem. About two-thirds of the section of the city which was not burned is being supplied with sufficient water for the pressing domestic needs. There is not yet enough to be had for fire-fighting purposes. Because of this fact the most stringent orders have been issued by the military and civil authorities that no fires shall be built within any house and no lights can be shown at night in the houses. All cooking for the present must be done on the sidewalks or in the open streets and in daylight.

The administration of the city's affairs is progressing most harmoniously. Mayor Schmitz and Gen. Funston are working in perfect accord. The system put into force by the Mayor and Gen. Funston to-day is working order out of confusion.

Persons of all creeds united to-day in religious services at the great camps of refugees and at all churches that were standing. One Catholic service was held in a Jewish seminary. The people did not care for lines of creed, but worshipped together.

Chief of Police Dinan has sent the following notice to the Sheriffs and Chiefs of Police of cities and towns adjoining this city:

"The number of visitors and sightseers who are coming to this city has become so great that it is impeding the work of the relief committee of this city. You will confer a great favor on the Mayor and myself if you will have guards stationed at every train approaching this city and allow no one to board them unless on business of urgent necessity, or those who are absolutely known to be willing to assist in relief."

No complete record can be had of the burial of dead at this time, as many bodies have been buried without permits from the Coroner and the Board of Health, but 500 burials are reported up to to-night. The searchers of the Coroners and the Board of Health Departments found not more than twenty bodies to-day. They were buried immediately.

It is impossible at the present time to obtain any sort of death list, or even to make a reliable estimate of the number of casualties. Whenever a body is found, it is buried immediately without any formality whatever, and these burials have been made at widely separated parts of the city by different bodies of searchers, who do not even make a prompt report to headquarters.

Two Hundred in One District.

Two hundred bodies found in the Potrero district, south of Shannon Street, in the vicinity of the Union Iron Works, were cremated at the Six Mile House by order of Coroner Walsh. This information was obtained at the Board of Health headquarters to-day.

So many dead were found in this limited area that cremation was deemed necessary in order to prevent disease. The names of some of the dead were learned, but in the majority of cases identification was impossible owing to the mutilation of the features.

South of Market Street the loss of life was mostly brought about by the collapse of many cheap lodging houses. Among others the caving in of the Royal, corner of Fourth and Minna Streets, added to the horror of the situation by the trapping of scores of lodgers.

The collapse of the Portland House, on Sixth Street, between Mission and Market, came about in a similar manner. Fully sixty persons were caught in the timbers and brick. Many of these were saved before the fire came that way.

Perhaps 300 in One House.

The large five-story Brunswick rooming house, on the corner of Sixth and Howard Streets, collapsed, and fire started amid the ruins scarcely five minutes later. It is estimated that over 300 persons lost their lives in it.

Part of the large Cosmopolitan House, corner of Fifth and Mission Streets, collapsed at the first tremble. Many of the sleepers were buried in the ruins; others escaped in their night clothes.

At 755 Mission Street, the Wilson House, with its four stories and eighty rooms, fell a mass of ruins. So far as known, few of the inmates were rescued.

The Denver House, on Lower Third Street, with its many rooms, fared the same, and none may ever know how many were killed.

A small two-story frame building occupied by a man and wife at 405 Jessie Street collapsed and both were killed.

Lodgers Escaped from Some Houses.

To the north of Market Street the rooming-house people fared somewhat better. The Luxemborg, corner of Stockton and O'Farrell Streets, a three-story affair, suffered severely from the falling of many tons of brick from an adjoining building. The mass crashed through the building, killing a man and woman.

At the Sutter Street Turkish baths a brick chimney toppled over, and, crashing through the roof, killed one of the occupants as he lay on a cot.

The body of an infant was found in the centre of Union Street, near Dupont, this morning. There was nothing by which it could be identified. It was learned, however, that many persons had camped at this place, and it is presumed that the child died and was left when the party was forced to move.

Three bodies were found in the ruins of a house on Harrison Street, between First and Second. They had been burned beyond all possibility of identification.

The body of a man was found in the middle of Silver Street, between Third and Fourth. A bit of burned envelope was found in the pocket of the vest bearing the name "A. Houston."

At noon to-day reports have been made by deputies sent out by the Board of Health of the finding of twenty-three bodies in various parts of the city. Few of them could be identified. The bodies were buried in various places and the graves numbered.

Gov. George C. Pardee said to-day:

"The situation is as good as can be expected considering the greatness of the calamity that has befallen us. The Nation and the world are taking great interest in our distress and showering material and financial aid. The matter of a special session of the Legislature is still under consideration.

"What we need especially is medical stores, clothing, and shelter for the refugees. Of course, food will be needed in considerable quantities for some time to come.

"An epidemic does not exist at present. It is not probable that there will be any necessity for ordering a quarantine.

"The work of rebuilding San Francisco has commenced, and I expect to see the great metropolis replaced on a much grander scale than ever."

Sickness on the Decrease.

The Board of Health reports a very encouraging health condition, considering the circumstances. Sickness is constantly on the decrease. There are very few contagious diseases, and these are being attended at Deer Lodge, in Golden Gate Park. Sanitary conditions in the residence districts are being improved.

A large corps of volunteers started at work yesterday, removing all kinds of garbage to the curbs. Wagons are being pressed into service to-day, and the garbage is being removed to the burned districts, where it will be destroyed.

Most of the sickness is among the people who are living out of doors, and it is upon these cases that the Board of Health is concentrating most of its attention. Hundreds of volunteer doctors, dentists, nurses, and helpers are at work allaying suffering. There has been no lack of volunteers for every kind of sanitary work.

Major Torrey of the United States Army and Dr. Foster of the State Board of Health have charge of the work among the people who are out of doors, and Dr. Hassler is at the head of the sanitary work. Oakland has furnished an engineering corps to assist in restoration of the water supply, and another that will aid in cleaning the streets.

Dr. K. A. L. Mackenzie, Chief Surgeon of the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company, has reached here in charge of twenty physicians, many nurses, and plenty of hospital supplies. Dr. W. E. Carl of the Oregon State National Guard has arrived, in addition to the entire Third Hospital Corps of Oregon.

No Serious Illness in Park.

Major Frank Keesling, in charge of Golden Gate Park, to-day made this report to Gen. Funston:

"I beg to advise you that not a case of serious sickness exists in this park. All rumors to the contrary are false and malicious. I will promptly advise you if there is any change or if anything of a serious nature occurs."

The inspection of the sewers made to-day by the Board of Public Works shows the outlets to the systems in the residence section remaining unburned are all in good condition save two. In the district south of Market Street few, if any, systems remain. President Maestretti of the Board of Public Works describes the condition as "deplorable." In the business districts no inspection has as yet been made.

The work of repairing the sewers at once is now under way. Gangs of workmen are being sent out. Teams and wagons have been obtained, and some sort of order is being established. Plumbers are needed. Some are volunteering, but the demand far exceeds the supply.

Householders and campers have been ordered to remove garbage and refuse to the curb lines on the streets. The supply of chloride of lime is nearly exhausted.

Bedding Is Badly Needed.

At the emergency hospitals, which were quickly established and attended by many physicians almost within a half hour's notice, the only complaint that really exists is the lack of bedding. Though the army and navy have been called on for blankets, quilts, and the like, the supply furnished by these departments is not enough, and the physicians fear serious conditions if more bedding is not procured. This fear exists particularly at the Presidio and the western end of Golden Gate Park, where the winds are brisk and the morning air chilly.

Only thirty patients are quartered in the territory that comprises the park emergency hospital. Considering that more than 500 injured persons have received attention at the park since Wednesday morning, this is regarded by the physicians as very promising. No deaths have occurred at the park emergency hospital since Wednesday morning's shock.

More than a hundred physicians and attendants are serving in the park at present. New volunteers and Inspectors who are being appointed by the Board of Health will be assigned to districts other than the park, as the physicians are assured that this emergency hospital is under perfect surveillance.

Dr. Rottane yesterday confiscated seven barrels of whisky from a nearby saloon and placed a guard over them that the liquor could be available for hospital purposes.

Pony Express Service Runs.

A helpful feature of the work is the establishment by the Southern Pacific Company of a chain of information bureaus served by relays of pony riders carrying the latest bulletins and instructions relative to transportation facilities provided to relieve the congestion in San Francisco.

A committee sent by the Japanese Consul, representing the Japanese relief society, offered its co-operation in any manner possible. The society is caring for many of the stricken Japanese who still remain in the city. They are rendering assistance to white people wherever required. They have wired to every large city on the coast asking for supplies to be sent by Japanese.

Every Homeless Person Fed.

The committee having in charge the relief of the hungry reports that every homeless man, woman, and child in San Francisco is being cared for, and that there is no suffering on the score of either food or drink within the city. Within a few hours an ample supply of milk will be assured.

The committee is establishing new relief stations wherever needed. In addition, at many points on the outskirts individual or independent organizations are working in connection with the committee.

Cars and steamers laden to their capacity with food and medical supplies are coming to the city from every point along the coast and throughout the State, and when this supply has been assured as a permanency there is not the slightest fear of any lack of food or drink.

The camps of refugees extend as far westward through the park as the beach. Every one said to-day they were receiving enough to eat and drink, but in order to get their supplies they were obliged to stand in line at some places for two hours. This, of course, worked serious harddship to many of the women, who were in a state of exhaustion.

Pacific Liner Brings Food.

The Pacific Mail steamer China, with a cargo including a large quantity of foodstuffs, arrived from the Orient and was docked at Oakland in order that the supplies be distributed there. The shipping of San Francisco is at a standstill, and such will be the state of affairs while the city is in the least endangered.

The United States cruisers Chicago and Marblehead are stationed off Meiggs's wharf, and prevent every vessel, whether foreign or domestic, from sailing out of the harbor. The vessels are being held here to be ready for any emergency that may arise.

The Federal authorities removed all the customs restrictions from the cargo of the steamer China as soon as possible, and the rice, tea, and other foodstuffs from the Orient were taken off the vessel and sent to the aid of the Chinese. Until next Monday the foreign vessels will be merely examined to pass upon health.

Repairing the Water System.

Experts of the Spring Valley Water Company, who have been engaged in making a thorough examination of the mains and reservoirs of the system, have reported that the company has in its reservoirs enough water to supply the city at the regular rate of 35,000,000 gallons per day for 600 days.

The only immediate problem is that of getting this supply of water into the city. Already pipes have been repaired in certain sections, and a supply of 7,000,000 gallons per day is coming in through Ocean View from Lake Merced. About 1,000,000 gallons of this is being consumed daily by Ocean View and the other towns along the pipe lines, but 6,000,000 gallons daily is reaching and will continue to reach the city proper.

Within a few hours another supply of 6,000,000 gallons daily will be poured into the city from College Hills. This will furnish water to the northern section of the city. Already water is being supplied to the Black Point and Pacific Heights districts, and with an additional supply of 4,000,000 gallons daily, which is assured from lines that will be repaired within a day or two, the city will within four days be receiving a daily supply of between 16,000,000 and 17,000,000 gallons, about half the amount that was being furnished to the entire city prior to the earthquake. This makes it certain that the city will be habitable again almost immediately, a food supply being already assured.

The Engineering Department of the United States Army, having in charge the construction of temporary buildings in Golden Gate Park for the housing of the homeless, reported to-day that eight buildings, 150 feet long, 28 feet wide, and 13 feet high, will be finished by to-morrow.

These will be cut into compartments large enough to furnish sleeping room for a family, and each compartment will have an entrance from the outside. Lumber is being delivered at the park in large quantities, and 135 carpenters are at work on the temporary buildings.

Problem of the Chinese.

One of the problems facing the Relief Committees on both sides of the bay is the sheltering of the Chinese. Many of them are destitute.

It has long been a question in San Francisco what should be done with Chinatown and moving the Chinese in the direction of Colima has been agitated. Now they are without homes and without prospect of getting any. They can get no land. The limits of Oakland's Chinatown have already been extended, and the strictest police regulations are in force to prevent further enlargement. On this side of the bay they are camping in open lots.

Unless the Government undertakes their relief they are in grave danger. Those who have money cannot purchase property, as no one will sell to them. Few, however, even of the richest merchants in Chinatown, saved anything of value, for their wealth was invested in the Oriental village which had sprung up in the heart of the area burned.

Throngs at Religious Services.

On the steps of the shattered churches and on the green slopes of parks and cemeteries the people of San Francisco assembled at the usual hours to-day for religious services. Grateful for the opportunity to express thanks for their preservation, and anxious for the words of cheer and comfort, the people gathered in larger numbers than is customary.

There was no distinction as to sect or denomination, the gatherings including as a rule a large percentage of the families camping or residing in the vicinity. Catholic clergymen celebrated masses in the Jewish cemetery, and every creed knelt with bowed heads while the services were in progress.

On the steps of St. Mary's Cathedral and on the upheaved pavement of Golden Gate Avenue, overlooking the blackened waste just across the street, Archbishop Montgomery celebrated mass at 8 o'clock. The service was attended by thousands, covering the church steps and extending well up and down the street in either direction. The Archbishop's words and his reference to the death of Fire Chief Sullivan affected his hearers greatly, tears streaming down hundreds of faces upturned to the tiny altar in the open doorway of the vestibule.

Five masses were celebrated at St. Mary's Cathedral. The Archbishop in his sermon recommended to the people that they be at all times submissive to the authorities, civil and military.

Close to the graves in Calvary Cemetery, on the narrow porch of a tiny house that stands within the graveyard inclosure, three masses were celebrated for the congregation of Holy Cross Church. They were largely attended, and the theme of the sermons was hope and courage in the face of adversity.

Trying to Reunite Families.

The great task of uniting families and friends is occupying hundreds of persons to-night in both Oakland and San Francisco. At many points registry bureaus have been established, and these are crowded with anxious persons. Even with the bureaus many persons are still unable to find relatives or friends.

Dr. Knox, in Oakland, reports the case of a hysterical woman at the Congregational Church who had arrived prostrated after seeing her husband buried alive under the flaming walls of their home while trying to rescue a few articles of value. As the doctors were trying to restore her, she gave a scream of joy as she recognized standing not seven feet from her a brother whom she had not seen for seven years.

G. E. Hale, a wealthy orchard owner of Pasadena, arrived to-day in search of his mother. Failing to find her in Oakland, he took food and water to San Francisco to continue the search. He trudged several miles through the ruins, and was making his way out Market Street toward Twin Peaks, one of the refugee centres, when he saw a woman and a man carrying heavy bundles. The woman was his mother. The man was a stranger who had left his family to assist Mrs. Hale to the ferry and to get food. Hale exchanged his bag of food for his mother, and both went to Oakland.

Disaster Brings Weddings.

Weddings in great number have resulted from the disaster. Women driven out of their homes and left destitute have appealed to men to whom they were engaged, and immediately marriages have been performed.

Since the first day of the disaster an increase in the marriage licenses issued was noticed by County Clerk Cook. This increase is growing greater. Yesterday morning seven marriage licenses were issued in an hour. Cook himself has been on duty much of the time, as has his deputy, Paul Wuthe, although no other business has been transacted.

"I don't live anywhere," is the answer given in many cases when the applicant for a license is asked where his or her residence is. "I used to live in San Francisco."

Post Office in Operation.

At a meeting of the postal authorities with the military to-day at the Post Office plans were completed for the resumption of mail service. The San Francisco Post Office is now in full operation. Three hundred and fifty men are at work in the main office at Seventh and Mission Streets.

Inspection by Lieut. Gen. R. Armstrong and Post Office Inspector O'Connell shows that all except fifty bags of mail have been recovered, and now the matter is handled expeditiously. All trains are carrying mail into the city, and this is distributed at the Post Office, which was not much damaged. Branch offices under the authority of the Postmaster and the military are being established throughout the city and the adjacent hills, where refugees are camped.

All mail should be addressed to the old street number in San Francisco unless the new address is positively known. Nine branch offices will be in operation to-morrow morning. Money orders are cashed as rapidly as funds can be obtained.

The Postmaster is completing arrangements with the Superintendent of the Mint to cash paper now on hand in the Post Office. All money orders will be paid on demand, and represent the only possible means of sending money into San Francisco at present, as no banks are open. Letters are accepted here without stamps or envelopes, and will reach their destination without delay.

Street Car Service Resumed.

Street cars were running on Fillmore Street to-day and appeared to have plenty of power. The service was free to all except boys. The cars on Sutter and Pacific Avenue will probably be run by horses.

Manager Mullaly of the United Railroads to-night announced that cars would be operated to-morrow from the ferry building through Turk and Eddy Streets, and that within a few days a temporary service would cover the greater part of the city. Transportation for all passengers and supplies will be free until conditions are relieved.

Mayor Schmitz has granted a temporary franchise for a trolley system down Market Street, to remain in force until revoked.

FIRE IN FRISCO AGAIN.

Starts in Southern Part of City—Water is Lacking There.

OAKLAND, Cal., Monday, April 23. A report reached here from San Francisco at midnight that a brisk fire is burning in South San Francisco. The illumination can readily be seen from this side of San Francisco, a distance of eight miles. It is believed that the fire started afresh from smouldering embers that could not be subdued on account of lack of water.

HURRYING TO SAN FRANCISCO.

Men Who Have Lost Millions—Secretary Metcalf's Message.

From a Staff Correspondent.

JULESBURG, Col., April 22.—Secretary Metcalf, who is a passenger on the Overland Limited for San Francisco, whither he is going at the request of President Roosevelt, wishes THE NEW YORK TIMES to say that official messages sent by him to San Francisco calling for immediate reply have not been answered.

Mr. Metcalf believes the publication of this fact will help to allay the anxiety of the thousands of persons in the East who have been telegraphing to San Francisco and have been unable to get any reply.

The Secretary says that whenever official messages fail to elicit responses it cannot be expected that private messages will be answered. The trouble, he says, is wholly due to the destruction of the telegraph companies' offices in and the wires into San Francisco.

"If this train were held up it would be the greatest haul on record," was a remark heard on the Overland Limited today, and it was probably literally true. It is doubtful if any train that ever traveled across the continent had on it so many men carrying large sums of money. They may be wealthy or may be comparatively poor. Some of them at this time do not know which, but nearly all of them are carrying thousands of dollars in gold and bills, as no one knew when he left the East when banking facilities at San Francisco would be resumed.

Practically every man on the train is a San Francisco resident, and every berth on the eight sleeping cars was taken many hours before the Overland Limited left Chicago. Archbishop Riordan is on the train. Congressman McKinley, United States District Attorney Devling, and Prosecuting Attorney Sheehan, together with well-known lawyers, mining men, merchants, stock brokers, and business men of all classes, likewise are here. Every one of them has suffered heavy loss and not a few of them have lost everything. They are going to the ruins of a city which they loved with a fervor that only those who have lived in the Western United States can understand, and yet, in spite of everything, they are cheerful, even gay. It is a heroic spirit they display, a spirit worthy of the sons and grandson of the Forty-niners.

One man on the train is the centre of a laughing, story-telling group in the smoking car. As far as he can tell he has lost $3,000,000 and one of the finest art collections in the West. Another, after discussing the weather and the scenery along the route, went on to speak of the San Francisco disaster and casually mentioned that he and his firm had lost $4,000,000.

Secretary Metcalf told a story as an illustration of the spirit that animates the San Franciscans. Before he left New York he met a man and his wife who were rich a week ago and who now have next to nothing.

"Well, Jack," said the woman to her husband, "I guess that pearl necklace must remain a beautiful dream." Then she went on quite cheerfully to discuss the best kind of small flat they could afford.

"We are all more or less wiped out," said Congressman McKinley, and then he also gave an instance of San Franciscans' spirit, producing a telegram from a friend, which read: "All gone but our courage."

There are half a dozen men on the train who make a brave effort to keep cheerful, but who cannot keep it up. They have families in San Francisco, and so far have been unable to get into communication with them. They have tried every imaginable experiment. One even telegraphed via Europe to Shanghai, hoping to get a message over the Pacific cable via the Orient, without result. No argument, no reference to the probabilities, can allay their fears.

At each stopping place they crowd around the boy with telegrams, in the hope of getting some word, and each time they have been disappointed. But financial loss seems to worry no one.

As to the question whether San Francisco will be rebuilt, there is only one answer—it will be rebuilt at once and become greater and more beautiful than ever.

IN SEA OF FIRE SAVED THE MINT

Devoted Band Fought Flames Seven Hours.

WINE FLOOD SAVES HOMES

Refugees Tell of Panic and Terror.

LITTLE ONES MADE DRUNK

Asked for Water and Got Liquor—Mad Thousands Fought at the Ferry House.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 22.—Tales of the desperate fight to stop the sweep of the flames over San Francisco are now beginning to be told. Men were too busy fighting heretofore or too exhausted from the struggles of days and nights without sleep and with little food and water.

The heroic men who made the struggle for four days and nights dropped in their tracks when the danger was past, and were hauled off to temporary quarters, where they received medical attention, food, and, best of all, bedding.

One of the stories that will be long remembered deals with the defense of the United States Mint, at Fifth and Mission Streets. A devoted band of men, with flames all about them, held this building. Harold French, one of the defenders, to-day told of the fight.

"Nearly $200,000,000 in coin and bullion are stored in the vaults of the Mint," he said, "and for the preservation of this prize a band of employes, re-enforced by regular soldiers, fought until they baffled the flames.

Fire Raged for Seven Hours.

"For seven hours a sea of fire surged around the Mint, and its little garrison was cut off from retreat for hours at a time. After the fire had swept past the Mission Street side and the certainty of its returning from the north became apparent, Captain of the Watch Laws ordered everything on the roof that would burn thrown into the yard. Soldiers and Mint employes worked with utmost haste, throwing great timbers and tank staves into the court. Here are located some thirty tanks of blue vitriol, the surfaces of which were soon covered with débris, into which increasing showers of cinders fell.

"Fortunately the Mint possesses a good well, and Engineer Brady, at his post, pumped water to the fire fighters assembled on the roof. Of these, forty were Mint employes. They were aided by a company of the Coast Artillery.

Flames Shot Up 200 Feet.

"As the fire swept up Fifth Street the heat increased to a dangerous degree, as the Metropolitan Hall and the historic Lincoln School burst into flames, reinforced by the roaring furnace of the Emporium. The block bounded by Sixth and Market Streets on the north gave the gravest concern, for from this quarter the fire was certain to rage furiously.

"Fanned by a strong northerly wind, the flames rioted through the structures stretching from the Windsor Hotel to the Emma Spreckels Building, sheets of fire 200 feet high licking up the intervening houses on Mint Avenue. Augmented by these tinder boxes, the flames burst fiercely on the northwest corner of the Mint.

"A few desperate fighters under ex-Chief Kennedy of Oakland were driven from between the tottering chimneys, where the determined men had been throwing buckets of water upon the blazing roof over the refinery. It is largely due to the experience of former Chief Kennedy that the tar-covered roof, the weakest spot of all, was saturated with sufficient water to stay the flames.

Sulphuric Acid Under Foot.

"When the fire leaped Mint Avenue in solid masses of flame the refinery men stuck to their windows as long as the glass remained in the frames. Seventy-five feet of an inch hose played a slender stream upon the blazing window sill while the floor was awash with diluted sulphuric acid. Ankle deep in this, soldiers and employes stuck to the floor until the windows were shattered and the inner walls began to burn. Blinding and suffocating smoke necessitated the abandonment of the hose, and the fighters retreated to the floor below.

"Down in the Treasury vaults artillerymen ranged with blanket rolls and leaning on their rifles coughed in the strangling smoke. Then came a lull. The walls of brick buildings across the street had fallen in. There was yet a fighting chance, so back to the upper story the fire fighters returned, led by Supt. Leach, and continued their efforts till the building was saved.

Quarter, on the slope of Telegraph Hill, was the use of wine instead of water in fighting the fire. The only available water supply was found in a well dug in early days. At a critical moment the pump suddenly sucked dry and the water was exhausted.

"Italian residents crashed in their cellar doors with axes, and, calling for assistance, rolled out barrels of red wine. The cellars gave forth barrel after barrel, until there were fully 500 gallons ready for use.

"Then barrel heads were smashed in, and the bucket brigade turned from water to wine. Sacks were dipped in the wine and used for beating out the fire. Beds were stripped of their blankets, and these were soaked in the wine and hung over the exposed portions of the cottages, and men on the roofs drenched the shingles and sides of the houses with wine. The wine won and the plucky fire fighters saved their homes."

LOS ANGELES, April 22.—E. Call Brown, mining engineer and geologist of San Francisco, arrived yesterday. He was at the Argyll Hotel, on McAllister Street, San Francisco, on Wednesday morning. "I was awakened by a slight quivering motion," he said. "I sprang out of bed and ran to the window. I was there looking out at the City Hall when the first real shock came. It seemed to be a great throw of the earth from north to south.

"The first shock flung the whole front of the old Supreme Court Building into a vacant lot on Larkin Street. Two policemen were talking together there, and they were buried deep in a mass of brick and stone. I saw the huge pillars of the City Hall on the Larkin Street side fall away from each other as in pictures I have seen of Samson.

"The most terrible thing I saw was the futile struggle of a policeman and others to rescue a man who was pinned down in burning wreckage. The helpless man watched the flames approach in silence until the fire began burning his feet. Then he begged to be killed. The officer took his name and address and shot him through the head."

Thinks Thousands Were Killed.

Dr. Frank A. Brewster of Rochester, N. Y., said: "I witnessed the burning of Chicago in 1871, and was in Charleston when an earthquake created great destruction there, but the San Francisco horror far outshadowed those calamities. I cannot believe that the loss of life in San Francisco was confined to mere hundreds. I would be the last to stretch the facts, but I am convinced that several thousand persons suffered death.

"Thieves and ghouls were dealt with summarily. I witnessed the sudden demise of several ghoulish men. I saw a fellow cutting rings from the hands of a dead woman in Bush Street, just below Sacramento. There was a rush of men, and within a few minutes the robber was dangling from a pole.

"One innocent man met his death at the hands of the military. He was the cashier of a bank, and refused to obey the command to halt, but continued to run into the bank building. He was shot."

Little Children Got Liquor.

Sufferings endured by the children in San Francisco were witnessed by Mr. and Mrs. Henry Huskey and Mrs. Kate Land, who lived together on Pine Street.

"Under our own observation," said Mrs. Huskey, "was the case of one child, ill of diphtheria, who was carried into the streets Wednesday night by her parents, and died in agony on a lawn that morning.

"Utter lack of water in some districts got the children to moaning and pleading for drink. Men of ruined families made every human effort to satisfy the thirst of their little ones. Failing at last, and in desperation, they invaded the neighboring saloons and brought whisky to the women.

"Unable longer to withstand the pleadings of their children, mothers poured small quantities of the fiery liquor into tin cans and other receptacles and gave to the tots to drink. The natural result was to increase the pangs of thirst twentyfold, and the sight of woebegone, staggering children was witnessed."

DENVER, April 22.—Every incoming train from the West brings refugees from San Francisco, who give graphic descriptions of the terrors of the earthquake and fire.

O. M. Nichols of New York said:

"Reaching the bay, there was no ferry. An old fellow had a tugboat tied up. There were several of us. We asked the boatman what he would take to land us in Oakland. He said $250. We chipped in $50 apiece and took the tug."

George Musgrove's Description.

George Musgrove, the big theatrical manager of Australia, said:

"I shall never forget the scenes at the ferryhouse. It was bedlam, pandemonium, and hell rolled into one big pile. There must have been 10,000 persons trying to get on that boat. Men and women fought like wildcats to push their way aboard. Clothes were torn from the backs of men and women and children indiscriminately. Women fainted, and there was no water at hand with which to revive them.

"Men lost their reason at those awful moments. One big, strong man beat his head against one of the iron pillars on the dock and cried out in a loud voice: 'This fire must be put out. The city must be saved.'

"When the gates were opened the mad rush began. All were swept aboard in irresistible tide. We were jammed on the deck like sardines in a box. No one cared. We were out of the smoke-filled atmosphere, and were on our way to a place of comparative safety.

"Almost every one thought that the end of the world was at hand. Native sons of San Francisco had experienced earthquakes before. This was something new. It was not an earthquake. It was something worse. They had no communication with the outside world. Naturally they imagined that the disturbances were being repeated all over the country."

Woman's Story of the Panic.

Miss Martha Stibbals of Erie, Penn., was in the Randolph Hotel Wednesday morning and escaped to the street.

"Some one passing advised us to get on as high ground as possible," she said, "and we started walking as fast as possible to the high parks back of the city. Fire was starting in hundreds of places over the city and the streets were crowded with hurrying refugees.

"Where people were unable to procure horses, men and women had harnessed themselves to carriages and were drawing their belongings. In the residence district where wealthy people lived we saw automobiles drawn up and loaded down before houses. The owners remained until the flames came too near, and then, getting into the machines, made for the hills.

"We saw one man pay $2,000 for an automobile in which to take his family to a place of safety.

"Before night we reached the summit of the Alta Plaza. People half clad, unfed, hysterical, searching for loved ones, crowded the ground. We passed the night sleepless with a panic-stricken multitude.

"In the morning we started toward the harbor with the assistance of soldiers from the Presidio, who had already been on duty twenty-four hours. We got to the wharf, and hoped to get a launch to Oakland. We were unable to do so, but we were kindly treated by an old skipper who was himself in deep grief because his mother had been crushed to death in their little house. He gave us coffee, the only nourishment we had had excepting a few crackers in twenty-four hours.

"The skipper saw the Government boat coming in the bay, and said if we could reach the Presidio wharf we could escape on the Government boat. We therefore hurried toward the Presidio, greatly impeded by fissures which stretched long distances and around which we had to make our way. At the Presidio we were taken on board with other refugees, and a short time later we were safe in Oakland."

Fighting Mob at Ferry House.

"I climbed over dead bodies, picked my way around flaming débris, and went over almost insurmountable obstacles to get out of San Francisco," said C. C. Kendall, a retired Omaha capitalist, upon his arrival.

"The débris was piled up along Market Street. Fires were starting in every direction. Market Street had sunk at least four feet. It is only a few blocks from the Palace Annex to the ferry, but it took me from 6 A. M. until 10:15 A. M. to cover the space.

"Men and women fought about the entrance of the ferry like infuriated animals. I was as desperate as any of them. As the boat pulled over the bay the smoke and flame rose sky high, and the roar of falling buildings and the cries of the people filled the ear."

Escape from a Twelfth Floor.

Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Harriman of Baltimore were on the twelfth floor of the St. Francis Hotel when the shock came.

"The door stuck, and it required all my strength to open it," said Mr. Harriman. "Men were shouting, women screaming hysterically, and everybody was endeavoring to get to the elevators and stairways. It was soon discovered that the elevators were not running, and the people fell and rolled down the stairs.

"Dressing as we ran, my wife and I found that we had grabbed up enough clothes to present a respectable appearance, except that we had no shoes. We gradually fought our way to the ferries.

"All along the way we saw bodies of human beings. Some had been crushed by falling walls, others had jumped from high buildings, while still others had been trampled to death by the excited populace. Horses, having broken their hitch reins, were dashing frantically along the streets, knocking people down."

Train Was Badly Shaken.

"I was on a Southern Pacific train twenty miles from San Francisco when the shock came," said Frederick Droege of the Licking Rolling Mills of Covington, Ky. "A number of passengers were tumbled out of their berths. The conductor stopped the train and looked to see what he had hit. Nobody could find out what it was. Some one suggested an earthquake, and we ridiculed the idea.

"We went on a few miles and, looking out of the windows, saw the chimneys of the houses had fallen over. Further on two great fissures appeared on each side of the track where the earth had opened. A little further we saw the Santa Fé track, next to ours, had sunk out of sight where there was a deep fill. Then we realized that it was an earthquake, all right."

Hack Seats Sold for $100.

Arthur Woodson of Chicago, who was in the Pacific Hotel at the time of the earthquake, said:

"After breakfast I hustled around to get over the bay to Oakland. A few hacks were in commission, and a regular auction was held over the seats sold to each passenger. The price ranged from $20 to $100. I got a seat in one of the hacks for $35. There were three other men in it that paid $50 for seats.

"We had to go to the ferry in a roundabout way, and when we had covered several blocks two men hailed the driver. They offered him $100 apiece for the privilege of riding to the ferry. The driver took one up on the box with him, handed me my $35, and made me get out, so that his $100 passenger could get into his carriage.

"I hailed the next hack that came along and got up on the box with the driver. Another fellow from the sidewalk called out that he would give $75 to be taken to the ferry, but I told the hack driver that I would throw him off the box if he stopped, as he had no room, either inside or out, for another passenger."

J. B. Fiske of Chicago was sleeping in a room on the third floor of the Termius Hotel when the earthquake came. The second flight of stars gave way when he was going down, and he fell to the hotel lobby.

"I have not a scar to show for the fall of two stories," said he. "But a few bruises make my body sore and tender. I guess I have my lucky stars to thank that I came through the Johnstown flood, the Galveston disaster, and the San Francisco earthquake without serious injury."

Earth Swallowed Herd of Steers.

Special to The New York Times.

OMAHA, Neb., April 22.—Tales of earthquake experiences are told by hundreds of refugees from San Francisco who have arrived here. Many are on the verge of nervous prostration.

G. A. Raymond, a rich mine owner of Tomales, Cal., was in the Palace Hotel when the shock came.

"I witnessed a sight in the streets I never want to see agan," he said. "It was dawn and light. I looked up into the air, and it was filled with falling stones. People around me were crushed to death. All around the huge buildings were shaking and waving. Every moment there were reports like 100 cannon going off at one time. Then streams of fire would shoot out and other reports follow.

"I asked a man standing by me what had happened. Before he could answer bricks fell on him and he was killed. A woman threw her arms around my neck. I pushed her away and fled. All around me buildings were rocking and flames shooting.

"As I ran, people on all sides were crying, praying, and calling for help. The sky was green with lightning. I thought the end of the world had come. I met a Catholic priest, and he said: 'We must get to the ferry.' He knew the way, and we rushed down Market Street.

"At places the streets had cracked and opened. I saw a drove of cattle, wild with fright, rushing up Market Street. I crouched beside a swaying building. As they came nearer they disappeared. When the last had gone I went nearer and found they had been precipitated into a wide fissure. I worked my way around it and ran out to the ferry, crazy with fear and the horrible sights.

"How I reached the ferry I cannot say, but I found myself with thousands of others jumping on the boat. It pulled toward Oakland, and men and women were still jumping for it, only to fall into the water and drown. I don't know how I got aboard this train. I was running when I recovered my nerve enough to know anything. I never will return to California."

Woman Rowed Across Bay.

Mrs. Emma Lane of Richmond, Ind., escaped to Oakland in a skiff.

"I was stopping at the California Hotel with a party of several," she said. "After the shock we hurried into the streets, and with thousands of others were swept along with the crowd. We became separated, and I don't know what became of the others.

"After two hours' wandering I found the crowd thinning, and after a while I reached the bay. I was near a boathouse. I saw a boat inside. I broke a window, crawled through, opened the outside door, and started away in the skiff. I am a good oarsman, but I was out in that little boat for six or seven hours. Then I reached Oakland, got on the first train I saw, and am going home."

C. E. Conway of Fairmount, West Va., said: "I saw thieves looting the ruins not ten minutes after the first crash. Four men were shot by policemen for robbing the dead. I saw a little girl carrying a doll and guarded by a big Newfoundland dog. The dog carried a package in his mouth and was attending to business. The little girl was crying and hugging her doll."

Escape of Philadelphia Party.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Col., April 22.—J. C. Gill, a retired member of the firm of King, Hillman & Gill of Philadelphia, arrived in this city to-day from San Francisco. With him were his wife, W. E. Aumont, a retired officer of the Girard Trust Company of Philadelphia; Mrs. Aumont, Miss Florence Aumont, Miss A. M. Haehnlen, and J. Millard Kessler.

Mr. and Mrs. Gill were on the third floor of the St. Francis Hotel when the earthquake came. They first rushed out; then Mr. Gill made his way back to the room and carefully packed his suitcase and saved a valuable necklace and pearls that his wife had left behind.

"We roamed in the park in front of the hotel for several hours," said Mr. Gill. "When we saw the fire hemming in the lower part of the city we walked toward the outskirts, and were sheltered for a time at 1,317 Jones Street by a Miss McEwen. Early next morning we decided to leave the city and started to the ferry. Policemen would stop us, and it was with difficulty and much trepidation that we walked through the burned district and arrived at the wharf.

"The scenes we passed through were sickening and indescribable. I fancy that scores of men, wharf rats, who had looted wholesale liquor houses and were maudlin drunk, were burned to death without being the wiser, because of their condition."

SALT LAKE, Utah, April 22.—Charles C. Lanferweiler of Fort Dodge, Iowa, who was at the Grand Hotel, says of the earthquake at San Francisco:

"I passed through Chinatown just as a good shock came, and all Chinatown was in the streets, gesticulating, crying, running around, and acting like a lot of monkeys. If left to themselves I know they must all have perished. The authorities drove them up the hill and out of range of the fire. Superstition mastered them, and all sorts of gods were produced from all sorts of pockets, and joss paper was scattered all along the way."

WILL SAVE BIG BUILDINGS.

Damage Not So Great as Feared—Opening Market Street Again.

Special to The New York Times.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 22.—Sunday passed in San Francisco with no halt in the relief work, which is going on on all sides. With the fires practically out, all energies can be turned to care of the homeless people and rebuilding the city. Special trains and boats from all Pacific Coast points are pouring into San Francisco, and there is no fear of a dearth of food.

Some of the great business blocks are not so badly injured as at first reported. The Rialto Building will be rebuilt only in its rear wall, the front and sides being intact. The great Merchants' Exchange, the most costly building in the city, which was reported as fully destroyed, can be repaired at only a nominal cost. The three-million-dollar Fairmont Hotel can also be repaired with comparatively small cost, and a five-hundred-

Supplies and cash so far arrived, together with those pledged by telegraph, amount to $4,500,000, and this amount is growing hourly.

Every man discovered idle is put at work cleaning débris from the streets, especially from Market Street, it being the intention of those having the work in charge to make this great thoroughfare safe from end to end, and to make it the great central artery through which work can be carried on between different sections of the city.

Four sightseers were this afternoon dragged from an automobile in Market Street, and, despite their elegant clothing, were placed at work cleaning the streets. The machine was confiscated, filled with provisions, and started for Golden Gate Park. The automobilists were worked under military guard.

In Golden Gate Park to-day were born twenty-three children, the mothers for the most part being housed in tents. Some of these were children of the slums, while others, if born a week ago, would have been heirs to millions. All are now treated alike, however.

A dramatic incident occurred last night, when an unknown Japanese, who had taken refuge behind an overturned wagon, opened fire with a pistol on the military guards. Fifty shots were fired, and the Japanese was finally killed. He is supposed to have been insane.

Mineral Exhibit Saved.

LOS ANGELES, April 22.—Miss Aubury of this city received yesterday a message from her father, Lewis Aubury, State Mineralogist, announcing that the State's invaluable mineral collection in the San Francisco Ferry Building had been saved from harm.

Firemen's Funds Will Pay All Losses.

MACON, Ga., April 22.—General Southern Manager Wilson was notified by wire to-night from headquarters in San Francisco that the Fireman's Funds Insurance Company will pay all losses sustained in that city.

26 MILES AROUND SAN FRANCISCO'S FIRE

Auto Party Determines Exactly the Extent of the Disaster.

THE FLAMES WERE FREAKISH

Burned Out Big, Heavy Structures, but Left Some Inflammable Freight Houses Unscorched.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 22.—The fire has exhausted itself, with the exception of the still flaming embers in a thousand places here and there through the burned district. The Associated Press, for the purpose of determining with accuracy the boundaries of the fire, sent out to-day an automobile which skirted the fire on its four sides.

The register of this machine at the end of the trip showed that it had traveled twenty-six miles. This area included the financial, commercial, and most of the densely populated portion of the residence district, with all the splendid institutions and great mansions that had grown up with the progress of the city.

The start was made from the Pacific Mail dock at First and Brannan Streets. Traveling along the north line of Brannan the fire ate its way to Second, where it crossed the street and consumed the warehouse of the great wine firm of Lachman & Jacobi at the southeast corner of Brannan and Second. Thence it moved along the west side of Second to Townsend, and along the north line of Townsend to Seventh. On this particular front it licked up the great building of the Southern Pacific at Fourth and Townsend Streets.

Southern Pacific Offices Gone.

This building was formerly the main offices of the system under the Huntington régime, but of late years had been used by the auditors of the freight and passenger departments. Of its contents only the records were saved. But directly in front of the ruins there were already evidences of the undaunted spirit that animates the citizens of San Francisco in this city.

There were at work 100 men clearing the débris from Fourth Street so that the Southern Pacific might run spur tracks northerly along the line of Fourth to Market Street to carry away the immense masses of brick and ruined material littering the streets and the sites of the business houses that so lately crowded that area.

It was noted that the freight and passenger stations along the south side of Townsend Street, as far east as Third, though built in the most fragile manner and of the most perishable materials, were not scorched.

Great Catholic Church in Ruins.

At Fourth and Townsend Streets one's eye caught the ruins of the great brick Catholic Church of St. Rose, one block distant in Brannan Street, near Fourth. Some eight years ago the church suffered a fire, and had only lately risen on its ruin with what seemed to be imperishable brick and stone.

From Townsend Street, at the corner of Seventh, the fire burned along the east line of Seventh Street north half way to Brannan, where it crossed and burned half the block on the south line of Brannan between Seventh and Eighth. Thence, crossing Brannan still in a northerly direction, it burned along the east line of Eighth to Bryant, thence along the south line of Bryant half way to Ninth, thence along the north line of Bryant to Juniper, a small street half way distant between Tenth and Eleventh, sparing the northeast corner of Eleventh and Bryant.

Thence it ran along the east line of Juniper to Harrison, along the east line of Harrison to Fourteenth, and along the north line of Fourteenth to Folsom, jumping the street at this point to lick up the building at the southeast corner of Folsom and Fourteenth, thence half way along the west line of Folsom to Fifteenth, but leaving intact the structure at the northwest corner of Fifteenth and Folsom.

Along the north line of Fourteenth Street it ate its way to Shotwell and along the west line of Shotwell to Fifteenth, skirting the north line of Fifteenth. It then traveled to Howard and along the west line of Howard to Eighteenth, where it again diverged to the north along the north line of Eighteenth as far as Capp, and thence along the west line of Capp Street.

In this immediate district it was noted that the block bounded by Seventeenth and Eighteenth Streets and Howard and Shotwell, though spared by the flames, had been terribly shaken by the earthquake.

In some instances the houses were a mass of ruins. It was thought that of all the buildings in that block the only two that might be saved from the wreck were those of Lawyer W. C. Graves at 2,180 Howard Street. Even the frame Catholic Church at St. Charles, at Shotwell and Eighteenth, appeared to be unsafe.

Great Gaps in the Earth.

The streets in this vicinity were sunk from six to eight feet in places, and the earth opened in great gaps while the rails of the car system were twisted and broken.

The fire consumed all the dwellings along the west line of Capp Street to a point half way between Nineteenth and Twentieth, leaving intact the row of residences fronting on the north line of Twentieth between Capp and Mission; thence it burned along the north line of Twentieth to Dolores, at which point it was stayed by the great openings which were formerly the Jewish cemeteries of this city, but which within a few years have been purchased by the municipality and were being converted into a pleasure ground. Here are camped some of the many homeless.

An independent fire was started on Wednesday morning immediately after the earthquake in the dry goods store at Lipman, Twenty-second and Mission Streets. This fire burned over an area of 180 by 300 feet, but, as there was water in the mains at that time, was checked.

Traveling north in Dolores from Twentieth there was nothing but a waste to be seen on the east line of Dolores, scarcely a vestige remaining of the handsome structure erected by the Sisters of Notre Dame. At the north end of Dolores Street, where it meets the extension of Market Street, the flames were diverted by the great Bare Cut at that point, eating east along the south line of Clinton Park to Guerrero and along the east line of Guerrero, ruining in their course the half-constructed hospital of St. Katherine.

From the Market Street corner they spread along the southerly side of that thoroughfare east to Gough. Thence they went along the east line of Gough to Page, along the north line of Page half way to Octavia, sparing the row of buildings along the southerly line of Octavia as far as Fell, where they reached to the easterly line of Octavia and along that line northerly to Fulton.

Along the south line of McAllister the flames made their way to Gough, thence along the east line of Gough to Golden Gate Avenue, thence along the south line of Golden Gate Avenue to Van Ness, and along the east line of Van Ness to Sutter, where they crossed to the west side and burned the blocks from the north line of Sutter and the east line of Franklin through to Clay.

In this district were some of the most splendid mansions of the city, chief among which was the home of Claus Spreckels, at the southwest corner of Clay and Van Ness. This splendid piece of architecture, done in brown stone in the chateau style and adorned with all that wealth and taste could gather, still stands, though blackened and divested of all its beauty.

Still burning along the east side of Van Ness Avenue toward Fort Mason the fire reached Greenwich Street, along the south line of which it spread to Larkin and along the east line of Larkin to Lombard. Thence it went along the south line of Lombard to Hyde, and along the east line of Hyde to Chestnut east, thence along the south line of Chestnut to Taylor, thence along the east line of Taylor to Bay, along the south line of Bay to Mason, and down the east side of Mason to the water front.

Some 300 houses on the south and east side of Telegraph Hill remain. They were saved by the use of wine stored. The red walls of the houses show the stains where the claret-soaked sacks had been used to cool the heated walls of the buildings.

The one remaining spot unburned within the district is bounded by Montgomery, Battery, Jackson, and Washington. Within this district is the United States Appraisers' building, in which are stored valuable wares worth $500,000 belonging to the importing merchants of San Francisco. The saving of this and the adjoining buildings is ascribed to the heroic efforts of Capt. Wolf and his men of Company D, Twenty-second United States Infantry.

Summing up, all that remained of San Francisco was a fringe of buildings along the docks, along the hilly south boundary and the western addition. The map of San Francisco looks to-day like the picture of a fringe of hair around a bald head.

The houses that are left are wooden residences, corner grocery stores and the like on the outskirts of the city.

The people have fled from many of these, for the houses were shattered by the earthquake, and many of them are unsafe.

OAKLAND CARES FOR 75,000.

Many Refugees Sent Away—Serious Plight of Chinese.

OAKLAND, April 22.—Oakland tonight is caring for 75,000 persons rendered homeless by the San Francisco disaster. The height of the influx has been reached, and the number of the refugees is slightly decreasing. Although they are still coming in large numbers, more are leaving on every train for different points.

Requests for free transportation are investigated as closely as possible, and all the deserving are sent away. Women and children, and married men who wish to join their families in different parts of the State have the preference. The transportation bureau is on a street corner, where a man stands on a box and calls the names of those who are entitled to passes.

No one now goes hungry, and few lack shelter. At the First Presbyterian Church 1,800 were fed to-day and 1,000 people will sleep there to-night. Pews have been turned into beds. Cots are in the aisles, in the gallery, and in the Sunday school room. Every available inch of space is occupied by some substitute for a bed. A maternity hospital has been established at Emeryville.

John D. Rockefeller has sent money for the establishment of a new camp which will bear his name. Los Angeles has provided for a camp in Oakland to accommodate 1,000 persons, and has sent sixty physicians and nurses to look after it.

There is an employment bureau where work is provided when possible.

A wedding took place at the Relief Bureau at midnight last night. Despite the fact that the bridegroom had only $1.30, the newly married couple looked cheerfully on the prospect that confronted them, and departed happy and hopeful.

A relief bureau especially for theatrical people is on Broadway, near 12th Street, and transportation East has been furnished to 200 persons. One hundred are being fed at the Belle Theatre, and will be sent out of town as soon as possible.

The Chinese fared worst of all the San Francisco refugees. Some got out with their belongings at the first alarm of fire, but others remained until the afternoon. Then, as the flames got closer, they were driven out by the soldiors without being allowed to gather food or clothing. A hasty guard shot one as he was going into his own store for goods. Nearly 10,000 of them have arrived here, and the majority have been cared for in the local Chinatown. Nearly all of them are destitute, and it was impossible until this morning to provide any adequate way for feeding them. Many are going to other cities.

Relief Meeting Called in Dublin.

DUBLIN, April 22.—The Lord Mayor of Dublin has called a meeting at the Mansion House for to-morrow, to devise means for the relief of sufferers by the San Francisco earthquake. The Deputy Grand Master of the Irish Free Masons has telegraphed $500 to the Grand Master of California.

FIRE CHIEF SULLIVAN DIES, KNEW NOT OF FIRE

Had Been Injured in Building Wrecked by Earthquake.

CLIFF HOUSE DAMAGE SLIGHT

Manager Wilkins Offers the Hotel and Other Buildings for the Homeless.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 22.—Chief D. J. Sullivan of San Francisco's Fire Department died this morning from the effects in injuries received on the morning of the earthquake. Chief Sullivan and his wife were sleeping in the firehouse adjoining the California Hotel, on Bush Street. The earthquake shook down the chimney of the hotel and sent it crashing through the firehouse.

Chief Sullivan and his wife were carried with the débris two stories to the ground floor, where they were extricated after great difficulty. Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan were at once taken to the Southern Pacific Hospital, but when the flames reached the Mission district they were again moved, this time to the general hospital at the Presidio. Mr. Sullivan was suffering from a fractured skull, four broken ribs, and other injuries.

"Eddie" Graney, the well-known sporting referee, was with Chief Sullivan from the time he was removed from the firehouse until his death. Mr. Graney to-day said that Chief Sullivan never knew there was a fire.

After recovering consciousness he showed great interest in the affairs of the city, being always apprehensive that a fire would start. He knew from the first that he was dying from his injuries, but never forgot the interests of his department. His mind seemed to dwell on the need of a salt-water fire-fighting plant, and he repeatedly spoke to his friends of the increasing necessity for such an adjunct to the Fire Department of the city.

Mrs. Sullivan, who suffered serious injuries, has progressed satisfactorily, and it is expected that she will recover.

Fire Smolders on Water Front.

Little remains of the great fire. There are still some smoldering places on the water front, but these are receiving attention, and undoubtedly all the flames will soon be put out.

South of Market Street the loss on the water front proper is comparatively small. Several sheds will have to be entirely reconstructed, but beyond this the property loss is insignificant. There is nothing to interfere with the unloading of ships and steamers south of the ferry building. Large quantities of coal sufficient to supply all the needs of the city are stored in bunkers south of Market Street. Additional supplies of coal are in the harbor, and in a few days the coal-laden vessels will be towed to their docks and unloaded.

The tower of the Union ferry building has been condemned as unsafe by a board of United States Army engineers, and is being taken down. It was shaken by the earthquake.

City Departments Resume.

The City Auditor, the Treasurer, the Tax Collector, and the City Attorney have established temporary headquarters and are now preparing to resume the work of their offices. The vaults of the Treasurer, the Auditor, and the Tax Collector are intact. There is something like $6,500,000 in the vaults of the City Treasurer.

At the Masonic Cemetery receiving vault all the valuable records of the city are stored along with the dead. The vault is guarded very carefully with a special detail of troops.

Little Damage to Cliff House.

A thorough inspection, made by a correspondent who made the trip in an automobile shows that comparatively little damage was done in the vicinity of the Cliff, which early dispatches said had sunk into the sea. The Cliff House not only stands, but the damage sustained by it from the earthquake will not exceed $500.

The famous Sutro Baths, near the Cliff House, with their hundreds of thousands of square feet of glass roofing, also were practically unharmed. Only a few of the windows in the baths and the Cliff House were broken, and the lofty chimney of the pumping plant in the former establishment was cracked only slightly.

Manager Wilkins of the Cliff House notified the General Relief Committee that he would turn over his establishment, as well as the immense stables of his resort, which are unharmed, to the housing of the homeless. The only difficulty about the acceptance of this tender would be the carting of supplies that distance. The water in the vicinity of the Cliff House has been cut off, but it is expected that an independent supply will be arranged for soon.

The entire district lying west of Golden Gate Park and along the beach from Golden Gate southward suffered less from the earthquake than probably any other section of the peninsula.

APRIL 1906

NATION HAS GIVEN $10,000,000 ALREADY

New York's San Francisco Fund is Probably $2,000,000.

CHURCH BASKETS HEAPED UP

Day's Total in This City Yesterday Was Perhaps $200,000 — Jesuits to Raise Large Fund.

As nearly as an estimate can be made, the contributions from all parts of the country to the San Francisco relief fund this morning approach the $10,000,000 mark. Of this magnificent total, got together in three days, New York has contributed nearly $2,000,000.

Congress has given, or will probably give, $2,500,000 for the aid of the stricken city. From all parts of the country since the first tidings of San Francisco's sad plight came a flood of gold has been pouring into the various funds created for the relief and rehabilitation of its homeless and destitute citizens. Everywhere the story of San Francisco's sorrow has quickened the sympathies of the people, and there is not a city in the land that has not broken all records.

Chicago, up to last night, had contributed about $400,000. Boston has contributed half a million dollars, Philadelphia a quarter of a million. Pittsburg and Los Angeles have given $300,000 each. Portland, Oregon, has given $160,000, and many trains loaded with supplies in addition have been sent to San Francisco.

Although Sunday brought to a temporary standstill the activities of most of the local agencies which have taken up the work for the relief of the earthquake sufferers in San Francisco, the churches and religious organizations entered the field and provided abundant opportunities for New Yorkers to give in aid of the people at the Golden Gate.

Here is a table showing the amounts so far collected in this city by the various relief organizations:

Chamber of Commerce	$396,800
Direct individual contributions	450,000
Mayor's Relief Fund	170,212
Stock Exchange	133,000
Churches, (estimated)	100,000
Red Cross	93,000
Merchants' Association	92,938
Cotton Exchange	18,000
New York Nat. Exchange Bank	14,000
Salvation Army	7,800
Produce Exchange	5,000
Consolidated Exchange	5,000
Silk Association of America	4,475
Curb brokers	1,000
Miscellaneous, (estimated)	250,000
Total	$1,891,225

In many of the 600 churches in this city reference was made from the pulpits to the calamity that has befallen San Francisco. Men and women who already had contributed—some in large amounts—through other channels that have been open since the disaster, were stirred again to willing offer. In most cases it was found impossible to obtain the exact amounts in the collections, but the figures available last night seemed to indicate contributions of at least $200,000 in the city's churches yesterday. The amounts will be published to-day, probably.

The Salvation Army had a field day yesterday on behalf of the victims of the earthquake and fire that devastated San Francisco and caused havoc in neighboring communities. The open air demonstration in Union Square netted $2,100 to the victims of the catastrophe. A majority of those who listened to Commander Booth and the other speakers were working people, to whom a dollar means a good deal.

At the meeting in Union Square Col. McIntyre of the Headquarters Staff read dispatches from the Salvation Army forces in other lands and in other parts of the country, showing that the work of collecting funds in the street, which has been so successfully adopted by the Salvation Army in this city, has been practiced in nearly all the big cities of America, and with results almost as good.

A dispatch from Chicago told of such an effort in that city on Saturday. It brought in $1,500 for the relief fund. The officers in Cleveland sent word that they had $300 for the fund. From the Canadian headquarters $500 was pledged. Gen. Booth cabled from London that he would make a personal contribution of $1,000 to the earthquake and fire sufferers.

One announcement that was greeted with great applause came from the Salvation Army colony at Amityville, Col. On the theory that the manless land should be open to the landless man, the Army has gathered together, mostly from the poorer districts of the great cities, families who were glad to leave these crowded localities and try their hands at agriculture. Most of these families are very poor. Of money a majority has none to dispose, but they sent word to the Commander yesterday that they had sent 450 dozens of eggs for the homeless and hungry in San Francisco.

The Churches.

Only a part of the churches of the city took up their collection for the earthquake sufferers yesterday. In all the Roman Catholic churches in the New York Archdiocese Archbishop Farley has ordered the collections for stricken San Francisco put off until next Sunday. Announcement of the order was made in all the Catholic churches in the diocese yesterday. Mgr. Lavelle, in making the announcement in St. Patrick's Cathedral, of which he is rector, called upon his congregation to be generous in its response and make the collection one that would reflect credit on his parishioners.

In addition to what is being collected in the churches the Archbishop has a special committee of prominent laymen at work getting up a relief fund. A member of the committee said last night that this fund already amounted to $25,000 or more.

In the Brooklyn diocese, which takes in all the Catholic churches of Long Island, Bishop McDonnell had ordered the collection for the earthquake sufferers taken up yesterday. It was said at the See House last evening that no figures would be available until to-day. It was expected that when these were given out they will show at least $50,000 for the stricken San Franciscans.

Many of the Protestant churches in the city have put off the taking up of their collections until next Sunday, because of the nearness of Easter, when a special effort always is called for from the congregations.

As far as known the church that made the largest offering yesterday was the Fifth Avenue Collegiate Church, where, in response to an appeal made by its pastor, the Rev. Dr. Donald Sage Mackay, a collection of $4,000 was taken up. This included a check for $1,000 from Miss Helen Gould, who is a member of the church. With one exception, the Marble Collegiate, collections for the earthquake sufferers were taken up in all the Collegiate churches. It was said last night that the Consistory of this denomination would make a large contribution to the relief fund this week.

Trinity's Offering.

By direction of the Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix, its rector, the collections taken up in Trinity Church and all its nine chapels were set aside for the relief fund. No figures of this were available last night, but the collections in all the chapels were large, and the total may be in the vicinity of $10,000. At Grace Church the Rev. Dr. Huntington made a special appeal, and a collection of several thousand dollars was taken up. St. Thomas made a large offering, but it has not been counted. The Church of the Heavenly Rest gave $600, and the Church of the Ascension almost as much. The Church of the Incarnation gave $3,000. The big Protestant Episcopal Church of St. Andrew's in Harlem will take up a special collection for the earthquake sufferers next Sunday, and the Rev. Dr. Van De Water, rector of the church, said it was certain to be a very substantial one.

The Rev. Dr. Thomas R. Slicer, pastor of All Souls' Unitarian Church, asked for contributions in aid of the destroyed Unitarian churches in San Francisco, and a collection aggregating $1,000 was taken up. In the Unitarian Church of the Messiah a collection will be taken up next Sunday.

Among the Presbyterian churches in this city Dr. Parkhurst's congregation contributed $1,500. The Rutgers Riverside Presbyterian Church gave $1,200. All offerings from the Brick Presbyterian Church yesterday will go to the relief fund. At the morning service $1,100 was raised. The Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, of which John D. Rockefeller is a member, contributed $1,000. At the Calvary Baptist Church a large collection taken up at the morning service was set aside for the fund. The Central Baptist Church, in West Forty-second Street, took up $150 for the relief fund.

Up to a late hour last night the Jesuit Fathers had had no word from San Francisco as to the fate that has overtaken the Jesuit workers there. Every means of communication has been sought in the attempt to get in touch with the Jesuit work there, but so far it has failed, and the fate of the clergy and property is uncertain. It is felt that the church and college property is certainly destroyed.

Jesuits to Help.

Outside of the offering that will be made on Sunday in response to the request of the Archbishop, it is said that all Eastern Jesuits will unite in a sort of a family contribution to replace the $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 of buildings destroyed. Under the auspices of Fordham University and St. Francis Xavier's College, Dudley Field Malone is to lecture in St. Francis College Theatre on Tuesday evening for the benefit of the sufferers. Corporation Counsel Delany is to preside.

More than 3,000 persons attended the services held last night in the Harlem Opera House under the auspices of the Lenox Avenue Union Church of the Disciples of Christ, and listened to an address by Dr. Charles Reign Scoville. The contributions of the service, amounting to about $300, will be sent to San Francisco.

Plymouth Church.

In several of the great Protestant churches in Brooklyn large collections were taken up for the relief fund. The Plymouth Church, of which the Rev. Dr. Newell D. Hillis is pastor, contributed $2,800. The Central Congregational Church gave $2,500. The Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church furnished $1,900 for the relief of the earthquake sufferers, St. Luke's Protestant Episcopal Church $600, and the Church of the Pilgrims, $200.

At the headquarters of the Red Cross Society, at Forty-second Street and Fifth Avenue, the large staff of workers were just as busy yesterday as on any of the previous days of their activity in behalf of the victims in San Francisco. In the first mail yesterday morning $3,428 was received, and this amount was further swelled by the contributions of persons who stepped in on their way to or from church. The grand total so far collected by the uptown office of the Red Cross is, in round figures, $93,000.

One of the letters received in the morning mail was:

"Inclosed find $2.50 in gold coin for the San Francisco sufferers. It is the Easter present of a little girl 9 years old. Please acknowledge in daily papers as below:

"'From Little M..............$2.50.'"

From Miss Lucille Eaves, the special woman worker sent out by the Red Cross to assist Dr. Devine in his relief work in San Francisco, a dispatch was received announcing her departure from Chicago on the Overland Limited last night. The Red Cross organization has received many offers of volunteer workers who are willing to go to the stricken city and give their services to the sufferers free. None of these offers has been accepted as yet, but Secretary Langdon announced yesterday that should it be found practicable and necessary to send workers from New York a headquarters for training and instruction would be established at once.

A special meeting of the Executive Committee of Tammany Hall to take action on the San Francisco disaster has been called for this afternoon at 4:30 by Charles F. Murphy.

The Central Federated Union at its meeting yesterday donated $100 to the earthquake fund and appointed a committee of ten to take charge of a plan to raise funds for union men and their families, who are sufferers through the earthquake and fire. The Rev. John S. Devins, one of the fraternal delegates from the New York Presbytery, attended and offered to assist. Resolutions were adopted asking the Actors' Protective Union and the American Federation of Musicians to assist in getting up a series of benefits for the earthquake sufferers.

The Rev. A. R. Tillinghast, pastor of the Church of the Eternal Hope, in Eighty-first Street, between Columbus and Amsterdam Avenues, announced last night that the church would be glad to receive donations of clothing, linen, &c., for the sufferers.

BROOKLYN RELIEF PLANS.

Littleton Criticises President's Opposition to Aid from Abroad.

Plans for the furtherance of the San Francisco relief work begun by the Brooklyn Division of the New York State Branch of the American National Red Cross were discussed at a public meeting held under the auspices of that body yesterday afternoon in the Kings County Court House. Col. Edward E. Britton, the President of the division, presided, and addresses were made by the Rev. D. Newell Dwight Hillis, pastor of Plymouth Church; Prof. Franklin W. Hooper of the Brooklyn Institute, ex-Borough President Martin W. Littleton, ex-Assistant Corporation Counsel James McKeen, Mrs. Mary Hatch Willard, and William Chauncey Langdon, Secretary of the Executive Committee of the State Branch of the Red Cross.

Mr. Langdon said that Edward T. Devine and Miss Lucille Eaves had been sent to the Pacific Coast to organize and direct the work of distributing the relief funds and supplies collected by the Red Cross. All the world, he said, was speaking of the calamity as the "San Francisco disaster," whereas there were many other communities which were in quite as dire distress as that city as a result of the earthquake. It would be wise to wait until Mr. Devine had looked over the field and had been heard from before sending supplies, that everything might be distributed through him and relief be given where it was most needed.

Dr. Hillis urged the need of immediate and generous response to the appeal for aid. It was not too much to suggest, he said, that a man earning $10 a week or a girl $6 should each give a week's wages to the fund, the professional or business man to give proportionately from his profits.

Mr. Littleton suggested that President Roosevelt's idea, that we should not accept aid from any place outside our own country, was wrong.

"I am certain," said he, "that the shock in San Francisco, which resounded around the world, ought to elicit from every race and every country contributions which would make the whole world more sympathetic, and every man the world over more strong and humane."

L. J. Brown and Harry W. Martin, delegates from the Central Labor Union, who were present, expressed the sympathy of that body in the work, and said that their organization would contribute through the Red Cross.

It was resolved, on motion of Prof. Hooper, to request the Borough President to set aside rooms in the Borough Hall which could be used as a headquarters by the Red Cross for receiving funds and supplies.

William B. Creighton, Secretary of the Brooklyn League, announced that the funds collected by the League would be handed over to the Red Cross for distribution.

The plans for the relief work in Brooklyn will be further discussed at a public meeting to be held in the Court House next Sunday afternoon.

WORK OF THE RED CROSS.

Will Probably Devote Its Efforts Now to Raising Cash.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—Judge W. W. Morrow, President of the California Branch of the Red Cross, sent this dispatch to the Red Cross general officers in this city to-day:

"We are securing immediate relief. Red Cross should prepare to render future relief for the poor who have lost everything."

The Executive Committee of the American Red Cross met in the War Department to-day, and had a long conference concerning the relief work. Reports showed that fifty carloads of food have been sent to San Francisco by representatives of the Red Cross in all parts of the United States. As the army is rushing provisions from every convenient centre, it is likely that the Red Cross will hereafter concentrate its efforts on the raising of cash. The dispatch of Judge Morrow and similar dispatches from other persons in California indicate that food for present needs will be available in a short time, and as storage facilities are limited in California an attempt will be made to avoid any congestion.

More than $100,000 has already reached Mr. Keep, the Red Cross Treasurer, in contributions of all sizes, and every mail brings in additional checks. This money is being sent to army officers in the West who have been designated as purchasing agents. These men are in constant communication with Gen. Funston, and consequently can learn exactly what is needed, and send it in such manner that it will reach Gen. Funston when he is prepared to use it.

Dr. Edward T. Devine, the Special Red Cross agent sent from New York to San Francisco, will reach California to-morrow, and begin immediate co-operation with the army in caring for the needy. Both Mayor Schmitz of San Francisco and Gov. Pardee have advised the Red Cross of their desire to avail themselves of Dr. Devine's assistance.

William C. Edgar of Minneapolis, who is in charge of the Relief Committee of that city, has advised the Red Cross of the shipment of thirty cars of flour to San Francisco, and has advised the Secretary of that organization that the shipment of breadstuffs will be continued as long as the Red Cross officers think it is necessary. Nashville, Tenn., has sent three carloads of provisions; a like amount has been sent from Colorado Springs; Cheyenne has sent two carloads of foodstuffs. St. Paul, Minneapolis, Waterloo, Iowa, and Indianapolis are among the other cities which have already sent one or more carloads of food.

It was announced at the headquarters of the Red Cross that committees of women would be organized throughout the city by the Red Cross to collect, sort, and pack clothing, blankets, and linen to be shipped to the Red Cross agent at San Francisco for the benefit of the sufferers.

The Administration will not in any case deviate from the policy of not receiving foreign contributions for the relief of San Francisco sufferers. Offers of foreign contributions have come from many quarters. All will be declined with the warmest expression of the President's appreciation of the thoughtful generosity which prompted the offers.

Senator Newlands received this telegram to-day from Gov. Pardee of California, dated at Oakland yesterday, regarding the Congressional appropriations for relief of San Francisco sufferers:

"Our people are overpowered by the Nation's generosity. Thanks to every member of our delegation and to Congress."

VOTED IN AUTO TO AID.

Carnegie Hero Fund Commission Will Give $25,000 More.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 22.—The Carnegie Hero Fund Commission has donated another $25,000 to the sufferers of San Francisco, and has arranged for another meeting of the Executive Committee to-morrow, when it is understood that steps will be taken to open relief headquarters at San Francisco. The voting of the second $25,000 was under odd circumstances. Seated in an automobile last night, traveling thirty miles an hour over the Grant Boulevard to a banquet down town, members of the Hero Fund Commission were called to order by President Charles Taylor. After a few miles had been traversed the vote had been taken and a resolution passed to wire the money to Lawrence Phipps at Santa Barbara for immediate use in helping the needy of California.

Those who voted "Aye" while holding their hats on were President Taylor, Secretary F. M. Wilmot, Robert Pitcairn, resident assistant to President Cassatt of the Pennsylvania Railroad; United States Judge Buffington, and Judge James H. Reed.

The churches of Pittsburg gave liberally to-day to the San Francisco relief fund, many of them contributing more than $1,000.

CALIFORNIA WOMEN ACTIVE.

Hope to Send a Carload of Clothing to San Francisco Soon.

The committee of women appointed on Saturday at the Casino Theatre meeting of California residents in New York held a session in the headquarters of the California Club, in the Waldorf-Astoria, yesterday morning. The committee, consisting of Miss Margaret Anglin, Mrs. Thomas Vivian, and Miss Blanche Bates and her mother, Mrs. E. M. Bates, was augmented by Mrs. Thomas Wiffington and Mrs. William Collier. The aim of this committee is to raise funds with which to purchase clothing for the destitute women and children of the stricken California cities.

Miss Anglin jubilantly turned over to the committee $347, which was the result of an inspiring thought which occurred to her at a matinée at the Majestic Theatre, where she is playing.

"It was after the third act," said Miss Anglin. "I went before the curtain and told the audience what our committee hoped to do. I only asked them to put in their pennies, but when the basket that was passed around was returned to me I found in it nearly $100. It was such a success that I repeated the experiment at the evening performance. Mrs. Whiffington, who is in the cast, passed the basket, and when she had finished it contained nearly $250. Wasn't that just grand of the people?"

Melville Ellis, the song writer, sold copies of his songs in the lobby of Hammerstein's Theatre after a matinée, and turned the proceeds—$200—over to the committee.

It was said after the meeting that each member of the committee would attend to getting some particular line of clothing or shoes, or what may be thought best. The goods will be sent to the Majestic Theatre. The committee hopes to send a carload West before to-morrow night. Dress material in bulk will also be purchased, and the women of New York are earnestly requested to send to the Majestic Theatre needles, thread, and clothing, either new or worn.

SUGGESTION BY ROOSEVELT.

He Wishes That the Red Cross May Handle All Contributions.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—This statement was issued from the White House this afternoon:

"To the Public:

"After full consultation with Secretary Taft, the President of the American National Red Cross Association, who also is Secretary of War, is controlling the army work and the expenditure of all the money, probably two millions and a half, appropriated, and to be appropriated, by Congress for the relief of San Francisco, I wish to make the following suggestion:

"Contributions, both in money and in kind, are being given most generously for the relief of those who have suffered through this appalling calamity. Unless there is a proper organization for handling these contributions they will in large part be wasted and will in large part fail to reach the very people whom it is most to be desired they should reach. The American National Red Cross Association has sent out to take charge of the relief work at San Francisco Dr. Edward T. Devine, General Secretary of the Charity Organization Society of New York, whose experience has been very large in work of this kind. Dr. Devine will work in conjunction with Judge Morrow, United States Circuit Judge of the Ninth Circuit and the head of the California Red Cross Association.

"Gen. Funston has already been directed to co-operate with Dr. Devine, and has advised the Secretary of War that he will do so. Secretary Metcalf, who is on his way to the Pacific Slope, will at once put himself in touch with Dr. Devine as well as with Judge Morrow, the Governor of California, and the Mayor of San Francisco, to see if there is anything else the Administration can do, and he will assist in all possible ways in the effort to systematize what is being done.

"I recommend that all charitable and relief organizations and individuals who desire to contribute do so through the Red Cross Association, and that where provisions and supplies are sent they be consigned to Dr. Devine, Red Cross, San Francisco, and that Dr. Devine be notified by telegraph of the consignments. At the same time Mr. Jacob H. Schiff, the Treasurer of the New York Red Cross Association in New York, may be notified that the consignments have been sent to Dr. Devine, or else the notification can be sent to the Hon. Charles H. Keep, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C., and Treasurer of the American National Red Cross Association. I also suggest that all contributions that have already been forwarded be brought to the attention of Dr. Devine by telegraph, which telegram should state the name and address of the consignee and the amount and nature of the consignment. It is better to send all moneys to Mr. Keep or Mr. Schiff; they will then be telegraphed to Dr. Devine as the money is needed. THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

"The White House, April 22, 1906."

SUNDAY PLAY IN BOSTON.

Authorities Let Hackett and Mannering Appear for the Aid Fund.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 22.—At the Tremont Theatre to-night James K. Hackett and Mary Mannering presented "The Walls of Jericho" for the benefit of the San Francisco sufferers. Between $2,000 and $3,000 was realized.

Mayor Fitzgerald issued a special license, whereby the play was given with all the scenery and accessories, the first instance that a theatrical performance was ever given here on a Sunday with the permission of the authorities.

How to Transfer Money.

OAKLAND, April 22.—Banks and bankers throughout the United States who desire to make telegraphic transfers to Oakland should place the funds with the correspondents of the Oakland banks in New York, and have them wire Oakland, instead of remitting drafts.

WEST HURRYING AID TO SAN FRANCISCO

Fifty Express Trains Now Being Rushed from Omaha.

THE FAST MAILS HELD UP

Los Angeles Sending a Train Restaurant—Steamships Full of Stuff Going Down the Coast.

That the Middle West and towns on the Pacific Coast are doing nobly in the San Francisco relief work and are doing it without loss of time is shown in dispatch after dispatch sent by The Associated Press and special correspondents to THE TIMES last night.

Between Omaha and San Francisco yesterday the Union Pacific Railroad was hurrying fifty fast express trains filled with provisions and supplies for the earthquake and fire sufferers. The east-bound Overland Limited, Pacific Express, Los Angeles Limited, and even the fast Eastern mail trains—the fastest mail trains in the West—were sidetracked at little stations while the long line of trains rushed westward.

These fifty trains were run with ten cars to each train. Incidentally the Union Pacific will not receive one cent for the long haul of 500 cars half way across the continent. E. H. Harriman has ordered that everything of a relief nature be hauled free.

Many of the cars were filled with packing house products from South Omaha, orders having been received by the big packers from almost every State in the Union. Other cars come from all over the country, and are filled with everything needed. Six trains were turned over to the Union Pacific by the Burlington at Denver yesterday to be forwarded to San Francisco. The first train reached San Francisco yesterday. Others will follow every hour or two.

Among the hundreds of carloads of assorted provisions that are being sent out from Los Angeles for San Francisco sufferers, are several carloads of lemons and oranges. Manager Woodford of the California Fruit Exchange issued an appeal to fruit growers to send large shipments of both lemons and oranges at once.

What is perhaps the largest commissary train in the world has been rushed north over the Southern Pacific from Los Angeles. This huge restaurant, destined to cater to the hungry refugees of San Francisco, is the Shattuck & Desmond "mess" outfit, enlarged to a guaranteed capacity of 20,000 meals a day. Supported by the local relief committees this train is expected to cost $15,000. It was made up of thirty cars which are all kitchens and pantries. This train is expected to be in Oakland in time to serve early morning breakfasts to-day.

A carload of food intended for the use of the babies has been gathered by Los Angeles committees and sent north.

Los Angeles has now raised $305,000 for San Francisco's sufferers. It is being spent for food shipments. More money will be raised in Los Angeles by a great boxing tournament, which will be held at the pavilion of the Pacific Athletic Club to-morrow night, under the auspices of the Chamber of Commerce Relief Committee, which will handle all the funds.

By a coincidence, practically all the prize ring champions are in training in and around Los Angeles, preparing for the series of fights to be held here in May. Jeffries, the retired heavyweight champion of the world, will appear in an exhibition bout. Battling Nelson, Aurelio and Mauro Herrera, "Abe" and "Monte" Attell, "Kid" Herman and "Tommy" Burns, and several other pugilists will box. It is expected that more than $10,000 will be cleared.

California's neighbors on the north have been as generous as Los Angeles. The steamer Queen was sent for San Francisco from Tacoma yesterday with $25,000 worth of disinfectants, medical stores, and food supplies ordered purchased there by the Mayor of Philadelphia. The United States cableship Burnside will leave Tacoma to-day with another big cargo. Orders from Eastern cities for Tacoma are pouring in. Transportation, stevedoring, and other charges are free, and in view of the railroad freight congestion, a ship will be sent off every day this week.

The steamer Buckman sailed from Seattle yesterday with 800 tons of supplies for San Francisco sufferers. Eleven hundred tons of supplies are now piled up on the wharf. Cash contributions received by the Seattle Relief Committees to date are $107,223. This amount will be increased by fully $15,000.

The steamer Amur has been given by the Canadian Pacific Railroad free of charge for a trip to San Francisco from Vancouver and Victoria, with a cargo of provisions for the relief of sufferers. The Amur will leave Vancouver for San Francisco to-day.

AID IN OUTSIDE TOWNS.

Cities Nearby Swelling the Funds for San Francisco.

Individual contributions and collections taken up at all the churches throughout the country yesterday continued to swell the San Francisco relief fund in cities and towns outside of New York. Massachusetts is striving toward the promised $3,000,000, Chicago toward $1,000,000, while the Pittsburg fund stood last night at a figure considerably more than $300,000.

Philadelphia continued its vigorous efforts yesterday. Church collections amounted to $25,000. Up to the present more than $250,000 has been sent West from the Quaker City, and the various musicales and theatrical benefits this week, it is expected, will more than double this amount.

Baltimore raised $4,000 and probably much more for its fund yesterday. The Chinese residents of the city subscribed $400. Carloads of supplies are being sent out from Baltimore attached to fast freight trains as fast as they can be loaded. Eight have gone thus far, four of them yesterday, carrying blankets and comforts exclusively.

At Portland, Oregon, the committee having in charge the raising of the relief fund was confident yesterday that when the subscriptions to date were totaled they would amount to $250,000. Up to last night $160,000 had been received, and this sum was growing every minute.

In Washington, where numerous societies have piled up a big sum, the Daughters of the Revolution, at a meeting held last night, added $400 to the $1,000 which this society has already sent to California.

More than $8,000 is the fund that Wilmington, Del., has raised so far. With the collections taken in the churches yesterday and the subscriptions of the next few days, it is confidently expected that that city will contribute fully $20,000.

Hartford's contribution to the big fund amounted last night to $12,000, but a much greater total is expected in a few days. A mass meeting will be held to-night, at which a collection will be raised.

More than $25,000 was taken up in the churches at Austin, Texas. This, added to the numerous private subscriptions already reported from various parts of the Lone Star State, makes $200,000 as the contribution of Texas to date.

Outside cities and towns in New York State continue to swell the generous relief fund already raised. Mount Vernon will ship a carload of provisions to California to-morrow morning. The car will stand on a siding at Mount Vernon all day to-day, and will receive donations from a quart of potatoes to a complete household outfit. From the way provisions are being provided it is not improbable that a train will start instead of a car.

The Protestant churches on Staten Island donated over $5,000 yesterday to the fund. Next Sunday the Catholic churches will take up a special collection.

Utica announced last night that $6,000 collected to date has been forwarded by wire to San Francisco.

Jersey City has been divided into four collecting districts by the Committee of Fifty-five appointed by Mayor Fagan. Sub-committees will take up the donations in each of these districts to-day, and a large fund is expected.

A mass meeting held in Columbia Theatre, Newark, yesterday was addressed by Mayor Doremus and others. Plans were formulated for the collection of a relief fund. Various organizations are already taking up donations, while the theatres are planning benefits.

Mayor Fisher of Bloomfield, N. J., issued an appeal for relief funds yesterday, while at Bayonne relief funds in every other town in Jersey collections were taken up.

ARTISTS TO HELP ARTISTS.

An Exhibition Here for the Aid of San Francisco Painters.

At the studios of Miss Francesca P. Del Mar yesterday morning there gathered a group of artists who formed themselves into an organization to assist their brother and sister artists who have suffered severely in San Francisco. Emil Carlson of 43 East Fifty-ninth Street was elected President, Gutzon Borglum of 166 East Thirty-eighth Street was chosen Treasurer, and Miss Francesca P. Del Mar of 132 West Fifty-fifth Street was elected Secretary.

It is the purpose of the organization to solicit from all the artists in the city gifts of original drawings and canvases which will be exhibited in some gallery to be decided on to-day. These exhibits will be sold, and the money obtained will go to the San Francisco Relief Fund. Many of the artists in the stricken city are without shelter, and all their belongings and studios have been destroyed.

Miss Del Mar announced at the meeting that already fifty pictures had been contributed. Among the artists who have sent pictures are John La Farge, Kenyon Cox, Alden Weir, George de Forest Brush, Ernest Peixotto. Homer Davenport has contributed 1,000 of his original drawings.

CHOATE STIRS MEETING HELD BY SALVATIONISTS

5,000 in Union Square Give for San Francisco's Relief.

BISHOP GREER A SPEAKER

Miss Booth and Dr. MacArthur Also Appeal for the Aid Fund—$2,100 Raised.

An open-air mass meeting under the auspices of the Salvation Army to raise funds for the San Francisco sufferers was held in front of the cottage in Union Square yesterday afternoon.

Joseph H. Choate presided and made an appeal to the generosity of the 5,000 or more men and women present. His appeal for financial aid was seconded by Miss Evangeline Booth, Bishop Coadjutor Greer, and the Rev. Dr. Robert S. MacArthur. The women members of the army passed through the crowd after the speeches and gathered money in their tambourines. The offerings ranged from 1 cent up, and approximately $2,100 was collected.

When Mr. Choate held up his hands in appeal for aid he said that every man, woman, and child in the audience ought to give something. He directed attention to the fact that many corporations were now prohibited from giving money in such cases as the California disaster, and that it was the duty of individuals to replace this usually generous source of supply by offering as large sums as possible.

"I consider it a very great honor," he said, "to be invited to this affair, which has been organized under the auspices of the Salvation Army for the relief of the sufferers at San Francisco. It will not be necessary for me or any of the other speakers to dwell upon the terrible event which has reduced the ninth city of the United States in wealth and population, a city that has not only been the pride of the Pacific, but the boast of the whole country. It has been reduced in one hour to a heap of dust and ashes. No such calamity in the United States has occurred before within my recollection. No such visitation has happened in any city since 155 years ago, when the great City of Lisbon was reduced in the same manner, completely destroyed by one shock of an earthquake, and then, as in San Francisco, a great fire set in by which between 30,000 and 40,000 people were destroyed.

Unprecedented, Says Choate.

"The feelings of the American people within my recollection," continued Mr. Choate, "have never been so stirred as they are now in this shocking event. I cannot recall one possible instance like this, where the press, with its wonderful faculty of conveying the intelligence, has made every man, woman, and child in the United States perfectly acquainted with all its horrors.

"The great question is: 'What shall be done, and how shall it best be done for the relief of the sufferers?' The Government of the United States has promptly taken the lead. Under its direction relief trains are speeding across the continent in many directions, all destined for the doomed city, at the rate of sixty miles an hour, carrying food and clothing for immediate succor. And a fund of $1,500,000 has already been raised to meet many of the needs of the situation. But all this is a mere drop in the bucket to the immense amounts that will be required in the months and years to come for the resurrection of San Francisco and for the relief of its stricken people.

"A catastrophe like this leveled all classes, and on the morning after the earthquake the whole population of the city, the rich and the poor, the old and the young, the white, the black, and the yellow, found themselves reduced to absolute destitution. I do not believe it is possible to calculate or to name the amount of relief they will necessarily require. Happily they are saved from starvation, but the perils of pestilence and the dreadful perils of poverty are waiting, and will rise upon them until they are finally relieved.

"Every family has got to begin its life over again, and they all stand there to-day with only the clothes upon their backs, a mark for relief.

Rich Doing Their Duty.

"It is beautiful to see how the rich men of the country are doing their duty. Many of them are making subscriptions of $100,000 each. But I say that the hundred thousand of the man who is worth millions does not carry the same feeling as that conveyed by the dollar of the man who is poor. [Applause.] That dollar comes from a hand which cannot spare it without bringing some suffering or some new restraint upon the donor. I have no fear that the rich will not do their duty. They will do it nobly. But this is a case where every man, woman, and child in the country who has a dollar, or a dime, should be prompted to contribute. This is a work which the Salvation Army, so thoroughly organized throughout the country, is admirably equipped to do. I have had some occasion in London to see its great and glorious work, and I know that this is an emergency in which it is fitted to perform the best services.

"Messages which we receive from San Francisco," concluded Mr. Choate, "say that the Army is doing great service there for the relief of the suffering and the starving in that ill-fated city. What I hope to see is that in their old fashion they will make every man, woman, and child in this community contribute. Even though they don't get mention in the newspapers, let the people contribute all they can, and, like the mite of the widow, it will go further than the $100,000 of the rich."

Bishop Greer Speaks.

Bishop Coadjutor Greer then continued the appeal:

"It is not necessary to urge you," he said. "The feeling of relief is in every heart throughout the whole of this American land, and far beyond its borders. When the intelligence was flashed across this country that San Francisco was smitten many of us felt that, as in many cases, the shock would be followed by a tidal wave. So it has been, but not of the kind that was feared. The tidal wave of sympathy, strong and with resistless current, has been in the past few days flowing over the land, bearing upon its bosom from the Atlantic to the Pacific every kind of sympathy from all conditions of life. From the halls of legislation, from the halls of commerce, of trade, from the railroads, and from the corporations, and the churches, the theatres, that great tidal wave has been flowing. The rich and the poor, the Jew and the Gentile, the young and the old, capitalists and laboring men, are forgetting their own for a moment, rising above their differences and joined in the vital point of human brotherhood. Had it been a simple, sentimental sympathy it would have spent itself in motion, but it has expressed itself in action. Suffering humanity is calling, and with a quick reply humanity is responding. [Applause.]

"And what a spectacle it is! How it strengthens and renews our faith in human nature! How it ennobles it! How bravely San Francisco has faced the terror of the trembling earth! How hopeful is she in meeting the condition which confronts her, bowed down, but not destroyed, distressed and perplexed, but not in despair! I read the other day of an incident where a young woman on the night of the earthquake had been asked where she had found lodging.

"'I slept upon a grave,' she replied.

"San Francisco is, in truth, on her grave to-day, but not dead and not even asleep. Already with characteristic American energy, although facing her dissolution and her grave, she shall rise again with stronger life." [Applause.]

No Foreign Aid.

At the end of Bishop Greer's remarks Mr. Choate again spoke.

"You know," he said, "that it has been wisely decided not to ask for any foreign aid to assist us in this great calamity. [Applause.] This has been done on the principle that America is strong enough to take care of her own. You know also that it is stated that many of the great companies and the great banks and the great corporations may not make contributions from their corporate funds even in this work of mercy. Therefore I want to say to you that it becomes every policy holder, every stockholder, and every depositor in a savings bank to take notice. You know that the amount of money in the savings banks aggregates hundreds of millions of dollars. Now it becomes all of you to make up this sum which might have come from the sources I have indicated which are held in restraint."

Dr. MacArthur then added his appeal. "The Salvation Army," he said, "has sanctified common sense. We call it common sense because it is so uncommon. The army also has a remarkable power of the initiative. It is a wonderful thing to have enterprise for the good of man and the glory of God. It seems to me that the first great lesson which we ought to learn from this calamity is the lesson of human brotherhood. It is the lesson of common sympathy.

"This revolution of earnest sympathy and splendid hopefulness is worth much to us in this country just now. We have had much criticism of public men and public movements. We have had the man with the muck-rake until we are rather tired of the muck and the work of the rake. The time has come now for man to show us not the muck-rake, but an open pocketbook, an open hand, and a big-born human heart. [Applause.]

"I have been impressed by the lessons which God has taught us in this calamity. We are learning how little, after all, is human science and human knowledge. Where are all the great scientists of today? Why didn't they predict this terrible calamity? There are forces which science has not been able to discover. I tell you that the great God is not dead. During this past week I have received many letters from boys and girls, earning small salaries, inclosing fifty-cent pieces and dollars, and I had a letter from a rich man also, saying:

"'Tell me whether or not your church is to make a joint offering. If not, I want to send my contribution at once.'

All Uncovered.

"Our hearts are aching, our hands are open, and we are ready to help our brother-man to the last degree of our power. Now I honor you men and women of the Salvation Army. I take off my hat to the Salvation Army lassie."

Here Mr. Choate removed his hat, and everybody in the crowd did likewise.

Col. McIntyre of the Salvation Army then read a list of subscriptions which had been sent by telegram, saying that $500 had been raised at headquarters in Cleveland, Ohio; $1,000 in Chicago, $500 in Canada, $1,000 from Gen. Booth, and a contribution of 450 dozens of eggs from the army colony at Amityville, Col.

This telegram from Miss Booth to headquarters at San Francisco, in reply to one detailing the destruction of the army headquarters there and the general privation, was read:

"Appalled beyond expression at the calamity, my heart stands still at the pains of the suffering. Overwhelmed concerning your needs and conditions, every Salvationist the world over upholding you. The General has cabled his prayers. Organizing every possible means to send relief quickly. Will hold large mass meeting in Union Square in your behalf. But God will not fail."

A telegram from Sir Wilfrid Laurier saying that the Canadian Parliament had appropriated $100,000 added: "This action is universally commended by the Canadian people and the sympathy of all is almost as deep as it can be among the American people."

Mr. Choate then arose to announce the singing of a hymn. "We will sing," he said, "that hymn which begins":

Have we trials and temptations,
Is there trouble anywhere?

Miss Booth's Appeal.

Miss Booth was then introduced by Mr. Choate, who said:

"It is my great privilege to present to you one whom all America is proud of, and one who by her life has shown that actions speak louder than words."

"I would like to say," said Miss Booth, "that I consider this occasion to be the most worthy which I have ever been privileged to take part in. Last Wednesday morning there was a catastrophe which horrified the whole world. And the heart of the whole Nation and the hearts across the ocean come to this Nation in pity for the suffering that came down upon one of our children. Now San Francisco's streets are ruins, and there is nothing but charred remains of what once she was so proud of. But the glory of California is not in her beauty, her vineyards, her warehouses, or her factories, but in her people and their dauntless spirit, energy, and enterprise, which misfortunes cannot conquer and which earthquakes cannot shock. This is the spirit which built her and the spirit which remains to lift her again.

"No man or woman here can now escape the duty at his or her door. They must do their parts without wavering, and they must help turn back the still great remains of horror and distress of pestilence, famine, and death which always follow. None of us can escape it. We should cast upon the waves of this great sea of opportunity in behalf of humanity our gifts be they large or small. Make those contributions as large as the sympathy within our hearts if we can do so, and if not make them the best that we can."

Mr. Choate then announced the collection.

"Let no man here dare leave his place until the collection has been made," he said. "Every dollar that you give to the Salvation Army to-day goes straight to the mark."

NEWARK LOSES A MILLION.

Many New Jersey Houses Had Branches in San Francisco.

It is estimated that Newark manufacturers will lose about $1,000,000 by the San Francisco earthquake and fire. Many jewelers, leather manufacturers, and other concerns had branch establishments in the devastated district.

W. Campbell Clark of the Clark Thread Company said that his concern would lose $75,000 or $80,000 through the destruction of its large warehouse. The Art Metal Works of 7 Mulberry Street, Newark, will probably lose about $20,000. The concern's branch was at 738 Mission Street. Every shoe manufacturer as well as every manufacturing jeweler and leather man in Newark had a large stock of samples in San Francisco, and the indications are that all have suffered.

The Prudential Insurance Company of America did a big life insurance business in and around San Francisco, and will probably have many claims to pay. The American Insurance Company of Newark will probably lose more than $1,000,000 through the fire.

OUTSIDE LOSSES HEAVY.

Fire Underwriters Expect Large Claims from California Towns.

Now that information as to the exact lines of the burned districts in San Francisco is beginning to come East fire underwriters are beginning to try to learn their losses in California outside of San Francisco. That these outside losses will reach into the millions is conceded. Oakland, Monterey, Sausalito, Santa Rosa, Berkeley, and several other places have loss claims to present which would be formidable had no conflagration followed the earthquake in San Francisco.

By the end of this week all the large companies expect to get their expert adjusters to the stricken city and to hear that a loss claims committee has been organized, headquarters opened, and work of adjustment begun on a large scale. The methods followed in Baltimore will be used in San Francisco. At Baltimore the work of the loss adjustment committee was done so carefully that not one bad snarl ever went to the courts.

The prospect of crippled companies is regarded in local insurance circles as much slighter now than on Thursday of last week, when the strongest companies were afraid of what might happen before the conflagration was checked. Companies are now giving out statements of losses, but no two are estimating in the same way. Then some are figuring their gross liability, while others, when asked, quote net losses after deductions have been made for reinsurance. When the adjusters have been on the ground for a few days the reports may be more optimistic because it may be that in the steel and brick ruins a considerable percentage of salvage exists.

CROCKER'S PAINTINGS WERE SAVED AFTER ALL

"The Man with the Hoe" and the Others Taken Out.

BUTLER CARRIED THEM OFF

Tapestry Chairs and Other Art Treasures Not Burned in the San Francisco Disaster.

Millet's famous picture, "The Man with the Hoe," was saved after all with the other paintings in the collection of William H. Crocker. Mr. Crocker received a telegram yesterday from Wellington Gregg, Jr., his secretary, as follows:

"California Street houses entirely destroyed. Head saved paintings, tapestries, and chairs."

Mr. Crocker talked yesterday afternoon in his apartments at the St. Regis Hotel about the rescue of the paintings.

"The California Street houses to which the telegram refers," he said, "are Nos. 1,100 and 1,150, which occupied the whole block. No. 1,100 was the family residence that belonged to my father. It was not occupied, but the family retained it as a matter of sentiment. No. 1,150 was my own house.

"I am very much gratified at the devotion the butler, Head, displayed in saving my pictures and tapestries at such a time. I have no details of what has been done. Of course everybody knows of Millet's 'The Man with the Hoe.' Some experts place it for delicacy of workmanship above 'The Angelus' by the same artist, and Edwin Markham's poem has made it famous in another way.

"Besides that I have pictures by Tenniel, Troyon, Paul Potter, Corot, Monet, Renoir, Puvis de Chavannes, Pissaro, and Constable. The tapestries consisted of six Flemish pieces dating from the sixteenth century, of which the finest is a 'Resurrection.' It is a splendid example of tissue d'or work, and was once the property of the Duc d'Albe. There are also two specimens of Boucher work.

"The chairs to which the telegram refers are six tapestry chairs that I value very highly. I bought them sixteen years ago from Lowengard in Paris. They were made for Mme. de Maintenon, and are beautiful examples of petit-point."

Mr. Crocker, when asked if he had any further news from San Francisco, said that William G. Henshaw, President of the Oakland Bank of Savings, had wired him:

"The Crocker Building badly burned, but in much better condition than most buildings. The foundation, floors, and walls in remarkably good condition. They can be repaired in comparatively short time. The vaults, money, and securities are in fine condition.

"We shall have continuous holidays till the banks have their affairs well in hand."

ROADS DISCOURAGE VISITORS.

New Arrivals in San Francisco Merely Make Trouble.

SALT LAKE CITY, April 21.—"People should not go to San Francisco," is the warning The Associated Press is requested by W. H. Bancroft of the Harriman railroad lines to give the public. At every place along the line hundreds are clamoring for tickets and transportation.

"Every arrival at San Francisco," says Mr. Bancroft, "increases the trouble of the authorities and enhances the danger. The authorities are doing everything that can possibly be done. Instead of helping the sufferers, an influx of outsiders at this time will add to the confusion and impede the work of relief."

Mr. Bancroft, accompanying E. H. Harriman, passed through Ogden to-night, going West.

MISSED THE EARTHQUAKE.

The Millers and Brown Also Dodged a Storm at Sea.

Fred C. Miller, employed in the Government Printing Department in Manila, reached this city yesterday, with his wife, from San Francisco. They took the last Southern Pacific train from San Francisco before the earthquake. With them was a friend, Samuel Brown, who had the same close call.

On the ocean trip to San Francisco the Millers and Mr. Brown missed a cyclone by an hour or two. Mr. Miller said yesterday that he was mighty glad to be back in New York with a whole skin and his belongings.

ANOTHER EARTHQUAKE SCARE

Operators at San Francisco Driven from Keys by Falling Timber.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—There was an earthquake scare here late this afternoon, when a message was received at the War Department from the San Francisco operator, saying that a fresh shock had driven the men from the building they were occupying.

The operator at the War Department explains that subsequent advices are that the operators on duty at the Market Street Ferry, from which the report came, were frightened by the noise of a lot of timber falling and left their keys.

A LIGHTHOUSE DISAPPEARED.

110 Miles Away from San Francisco—Totally Destroyed.

ASTORIA, Oregon, April 22.—The steamer Alliance, which arrived this morning from Eureka, reports that the Punta Arenas Lighthouse was destroyed by the earthquake. The vessel, while off Eureka on Wednesday morning, was severely shaken. The Captain thought the vessel had struck bottom, but after making soundings found that she was in twelve fathoms of water. The Captain changed his course to westward.

The lighthouse referred to was on the coast of Mendocino County, California, about 110 miles northwest of San Francisco.

One of the hardest things in all merchandising is to make little prices littler. It is often comparatively easy to clip a $5 bill from a $20 article, but to sell 5c. sewing thread for 3c. means a bigger disturbance of manufacturing or retailing conditions than you would think possible.

All the more credit to THE BIG STORE when it can take such a list of penny-priced items as this and make every one of them a special, under-priced bargain. Standard goods, every one. Just the things that women who sew need most, at just the time they are most needed. Just read!

2000 Pairs of Juliette Slippers at 98c a Pair

The regular prices for these Juliettes are $1.50 and $2.00—that will give you an idea of the importance of this offering. There's a good reason for it. A well-known maker of this class of shoes was a bit too confident as to his selling outlet, and the result—a natural one—he made more than his market could absorb. We bought the surplus of his factory—about 2000 pairs—literally at our own price.

Your choice of the two styles. One is the plain "common sense" and the other has a patent leather tip and narrow toe; both are made of kidskin with hand turned leather soles—all sizes of both in D, E and EE widths.

Beautiful Spring Suits for Women at $22.50

There's no suit in New York with which to compare it in value, and we have never had a suit just like it here, so we can't tell you what its "regular" price would be. But it's a wonderfully good suit for $22.50.

This price has been one of our strongest fields all the season, but we have never given anything better at the figure.

The materials are those which you find usually only in the highest priced suits—$30 to $40. They are Henrietta, chiffon Panama and imported Toile in the beautiful new shades of pearl gray, Alice blue, rose, reseda and violet.

The design and trimming are new, tasteful and indescribably attractive. The suit would sell like hot cakes on its mere looks aside from any special value.

NEWS OF NEW YORKERS WHO ESCAPED IN 'FRISCO

Communicate with Friends from Cities They Fled To.

SOME RECOUNT EXPERIENCES

Tell of Thrilling Rescue Work and the Extortion of Vehicle Drivers and Boatmen.

More news of New Yorkers and residents of towns near here began to come through last night. Among those who reached Salt Lake City, Utah, in safety was Maurice M. Sternberger of Sternberger, Sinn & Co., brokers, of 74 Broadway. He had been on a pleasure trip with his family, and was stopping at the St. Francis Hotel. He was on the fourth floor, and when the shock came he and his family dressed hurriedly and rushed into Union Square.

"We had hardly got seated," said he, "when firemen came along asking for volunteers to take bodies from the rooms just above the hotel. There was a ready and willing response. It was a low building on which had toppled a lofty one, and all in the former were buried in debris. We heard the stifled cries and prayers, 'For God's sake come this way.' 'For God's sake lift this off my back,' 'My God, I am dying,' and many others nerving us to greater efforts. Finally we got to some of them. Bruised, bleeding, blinded by smoke and dust, terrified past reason, the poor fellows who fell in the street dropped from utter exhaustion.

"Those that were penned away below we could not reach, and their seeming far-off cries for mercy and life will ring in my ears til death."

Mrs. Caesar Young, the widow of the bookmaker who was shot in a cab while with Nan Patterson two years ago, passed through the city with other refugees, none of whom had saved anything but the clothes they wore. Mrs. Young was in the St. Francis Hotel at the time of the earthquake.

Another New Yorker who escaped safely to Salt Lake City was Henry Herz, a traveling man, who, after a terrible experience, constituted himself a traveling relief committee. At Sacramento he organized a shipment of eggs, at Reno he set the housewives to baking bread, and at Salt Lake he has raised a potato fund of $400. Mr. Herz crossed the bay in a launch. The boatman asked him how much money he had, and when he replied, with a mental reservation $46.60, the boatman charged him $46.60, and collected the money in advance.

F. A. Baker of this city arrived yesterday at Los Angeles. He was asleep on the fourth floor of the St. Francis Hotel at the moment of the earthquake. This is not Fisher A. Baker of Yonkers, who has a law office at 2 Wall Street. It is not known just who the Mr. Baker referred to in the dispatch is.

Among the surviors who have reached Colorado is Walter V. Marsh, the Albany agent of the National Express Company. He was stopping with his wife at the Savoy Hotel, opposite the St. Francis Hotel, in San Francisco. They made their escape only half clad, and arrived in Colorado Springs with no belongings.

O. M. Nichols, another New York survivor, is in Denver. He fled from the Palace Hotel, leaving a vest behind in the pocket of which was $200. He paid $30 to ride two blocks to the ferry, and was one of a party who paid $250 for a tug to take them to Oakland.

Joseph C. Handlon of Kearny, N. J., who was living at the California Hotel, telegraphed his mother of his safety soon after the hotel was wrecked. He said that he and every one else in the house had escaped, with the exception of a porter, who was killed. Mrs. Handlon received this message at 2 o'clock Wednesday afternoon, and she has heard nothing from her son since. As the district in which the hotel was located has been wiped out, she now fears that he has perished.

Miss Artie Hill Fulgora, who is "Artie Hall," the vaudeville artist, was reported to have been killed, but she was heard from in Washington yesterday. A telegram was received saying that she and her husband, Robert Fulgora, had saved their lives, but had lost all their possessions.

At the close of services in the Rutgers Riverside Presbyterian Church yesterday morning the pastor, the Rev. Dr. Robert MacKenzie, was the recipient of many anxious inquiries concerning his son, a resident of San Francisco. To all Pastor MacKenzie had but one reply, that no word had come despite his telegrams, many in number, sent to the stricken city.

Dr. MacKenzie was formerly a San Francisco pastor and came to New York from that city. His church yesterday gave a considerable sum for the relief fund.

IT MADE DENVER SMILE.

A Request from New York to be Generous Was Anticipated.

Special to The New York Times.

DENVER, April 22.—Away back in "dear old New York" there are yet a host of otherwise good fellows who are sadly ignorant of Denver and the way its citizens do things when they make up their minds to act. Witness the following telegram received by Mayor Speer yesterday morning from "Louis E. Cook, in charge of the General Relief Committee in New York":

"To the Mayor of Denver: The citizens of New York are sending forward to-night a trainload of needed provisions and other supplies for the relief of the people of San Francisco. The train will pass through your city. Can you not issue a call to the Denver people to assist in this noble work of relieving distress? San Francisco and other towns in California have been destroyed, and their men, women, and children are in immediate need of assistance. If you can secure enough to load up a car or even half a car and attach to our train it will be thankfully taken to its destination."

The Mayor of Denver's reply ran something like this:

"Denver's citizens sent forward a special train of seventeen cars last night and will duplicate the shipment to-night by sending forward another special."

OUR CHINESE AIDING 'FRISCO.

Have Already Raised $5,000—And It's Not for Chinese Only.

Chinatown here is making up a contribution for the aid of the earthquake and fire sufferers at San Francisco. So far the Chinese have raised about $5,000, which is in the hands of three merchants of the district, and when the fund is completed, as it is expected to be on Tuesday, it will be taken to the City Hall and handed to Mayor McClellan to forward.

This money is not alone for the fellow countrymen of the Chinamen, but is to be added to the general fund.

The committee designated to receive these contributions consists of Tuck High of 19 Mott Street; Soy Kee of 7 and 9 Mott Street, and Quen Yuen Shing & Co. of 18 Mott Street.

Tom Lee, the "Mayor of Chinatown," started the list with a gift of $50.

RATIONS ENOUGH THERE.

Army Surgeon Tells of Hospital Work in San Francisco.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—Dispatches were received at the War Department late to-night from San Francisco suggesting that the rations already ordered will be adequate for the destitute there and outlining the work of the army medical officers.

A dispatch from Major Krauthoff, Chief Commissary of the army at San Francisco in charge of the relief work, says that it is not believed that rations other than those ordered at the present time will be necessary for the destitute. The Major reports that he is working with the relief committee, that everything is going well and in perfect harmony with the civil authorities. He adds:

"One large depot established where all relief supplies and Government supplies shipped by order are received. Another large depot established which will hold seventy carloads of supplies."

A long telegram from Lieut. Col. Torney, Chief Surgeon at the Presidio military reservation, to Surgeon General O'Reilly says three troops of the Fourteenth Cavalry have been detailed for sanitary police work, which has previously been performed by details from the Hospital Corps and the Field Artillery under the immediate charge of Capts. Truby and Rutherford and Lieut. Patterson of the Medical Department, with a large sub-district under Murtaugh. Gen. A. C. Girard has been placed in charge of the temporary hospital at Golden Gate Park. A hospital for contagious diseases has been established near this temporary hospital, and another in the pavilions of Harborview, near the Presidio.

Col. Torney says a few cases of smallpox and scarlet fever have come under observation, and a large number of cases of measles have been cared for. The dispatch also says:

"It is expected that medical supplies will begin to arrive to-day. Have arranged for their immediate delivery at General Hospital and distribution. Murtaugh has been placed in charge of sanitation camp of refugees in open space north of Lombard Street and between Baker and Hyde Streets. Physicians from city are his assistants and Inspectors. Brochomin has been detailed for duty in connection with sanitation of the small parks of the city."

THINKS ONLY 300 DIED.

Mint Superintendent Thinks Loss of Life Was Exaggerated.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—The loss of life at San Francisco is estimated at less than 300 in telegrams addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury by Superintendent of the Mint Leach. The telegram is dated at Oakland yesterday and is:

"Stories losses of life greatly exaggerated. Have been in it every day from the first. Have men reporting to me continually from all parts of the city, and I do not believe the list will reach 400. My estimate from statements to me will not reach 300. The fire did not travel fast and the authorities took trouble to keep ahead of flames, notifying people of the danger and caring for the helpless.

"The homeless are being cared for in Oakland and other suburban places. Thousands are camped out in the park and other open country south of the city. People are able to get into the ruins in places, especially from Market Street, and I am informed that some of the modern buildings, like the Spreckels, Crocker, Union Trust, and Mutual Savings, all of which having banking institutions, can be fixed up so as to be able to allow banks to resume after some form in a few days. Am told Crocker-Woolworth and Union Trust hope to open up by Monday."

Another message of the same date from Supt. Leach, says:

"In matter of establishing a bureau of information, suggested by you, find relief committees in both cities are trying to accomplish this purpose with aid of Associated Press. Had talk with Manager Western Union, who thinks impracticable at this time to try to get through such information, as wires are more than forty-eight hours behind with private and official messages. Would suggest that reassuring telegrams be spread through the country that stories of loss of life have been most grossly exaggerated. Loss of life and list of injured exceedingly small considering extent of disaster."

Other messages given out at the Treasury Department to-day announce that Assistant United States Treasurer Jacobs and his deputy will make temporary quarters at the Mint Monday and that they will make limited payments from funds supplied by Supt. Leach. All of the Sub-Treasury stationery, blanks, forms, books, and checkbooks were destroyed. Collector of Customs Stratton telegraphs:

"Appraisers' Stores and Custom House completely saved. Business handled easily, but commercial interests in utmost confusion. Please send mail and telegrams to 1,301 Harrison Street, Oakland."

STILL IN ASYLUM WRECK.

Many Bodies at Agnews Not Recovered Yet—40 Patients Escaped.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., April 22.—A dispatch to The Union from Agnews says that the work of taking out the bodies of patients who were killed in the wreck of the Insane Asylum buildings is still going on. At present it is estimated that at least 100 are dead.

The cupola over the administration department went down, and all the wards in that part of the building collapsed. Twelve attendants were killed, and Dr. Kelly, second assistant physician, was instantly crushed to death. There were 1,100 patients in the hospital, and C. L. Seardee, Secretary of the State Commission in Lunacy, who has been here attending to official business, declares that it is a marvel that many more were not killed.

One hundred patients were transferred to Stockton yesterday. It is believed that forty or fifty patients have escaped.

Mr. Seardo says:

"The loss of buildings is complete, and the buildings will never be restored. From what I have learned of the plans for the future my impression is that no such buildings will ever be erected again. Everything will be of steel and concrete."

Santa Rosa, in proportion to its size, has suffered worse than San Francisco. The list of dead numbers about 60, but a great number of persons are missing, and a still greater number are wounded.

As in the case of San Francisco, an admirable organization has the situation well in hand.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—In response to inquiries regarding the conditions at Santa Rosa, Cal., the War Department to-night received this from Gen. Funston:

"Telegram in reference to situation in Santa Rosa just received. Communication has been cut off. Nothing was known of the conditions of the surrounding country. An officer will be detailed at once and sent to investigate conditions. All available means for relief will be taken.

SAN FRANCISCO THE TEXT OF YESTERDAY'S SERMONS

Clergymen of All Denominations Ask for Large Contributions.

LESSONS OF THE DISASTER

Collections in Most of the City Churches Devoted to Relief of the Earthquake Sufferers.

Many of the clergymen in this city referred with deep feeling in their sermons yesterday to the suffering and want in San Francisco, due to the ravages of fire and earthquake in that city.

The Rev. Dr. Donald Sage Mackay, at the Collegiate Church, Fifth Avenue and Forty-eighth Street, made the following reference to the disaster, before taking up a collection for the sufferers, which included a gift of $1,000 from Miss Helen M. Gould, one of the members of the church.

"Does God care?" is doubtless the question which many earnest people are asking in these days of National calamity. It was different when two weeks ago the lava of Vesuvius engulfed hundreds of our fellow-beings in a distant land, but to-day, when flaming fingers have written ruin and death over one of the fairest cities of our own land, the religious question becomes insistent; in the words of Eliphaz to Job, 'It toucheth thee and thou art troubled.' And from many pulpits to-day trite and wholesome lessons will be drawn defending the ways of Providence, and commending to the hearts of the faithful a proper spirit of humility. And yet, as Job replied to his comforters of old, 'The thunders of the Almighty, who can understand?' His ways are past finding out.

"It is not the function of the Christian pulpit to justify, far less defend, the dealings of the Almighty. The calamity of San Francisco has a profound religious significance, but that significance is not to be discovered by human ingenuity scrutinizing the methods of divine judgment. In itself, in all its appalling horrors, the catastrophe, which in a few hours hours wiped out the pride and glory of a modern city, staggers the mind. It is an impressive picture of the awful resources of natural law working out in periodic course their appointed destiny. That we cannot explain, but we can give to this calamity a profound religious significance by recognizing in it an opportunity, not for vindicating God, but for helping men. God does care for his children, and that love of His is not limited by death. It is for us who believe in that love to mediate its power through the channels of human sympathy and human brotherhood. We make this disaster beautiful in the light of our Christian charity.

"Ashes make a good fertilizer, and out of the ashes and ruin of San Francisco to-day will grow, not only a statelier city of stone, but, as we believe, a worthier city of good citizenship, stirred to independence and self-control, while also reall ing the blessings of helpfulness and comradeship in this hour of its direst distress."

That a collection is to be taken up next Sunday morning at the 11 o'clock service at St. Patrick's Cathedral for the California sufferers was announced yesterday morning by Father Lavelle, the rector. Father Lavelle asked that his congregation be generous in its response, and said he hoped the collection would be one reflecting credit upon the generosity of his parishioners.

At the conclusion of his sermon, Father Lavelle spoke briefly about the San Francisco catastrophe. Now that the worst had passed, he said, it was natural that the inhabitants should be philosophical; some might even call it a visitation of God, but there was no evidence that the citizens of San Francisco were more evil than the residents of other cities. On the other hand, Father Lavelle said, it was known that they were a loyal, energetic, law-abiding community, and doing as far as possible about what was right. It recalled, he said, that occasion told of in the Bible, when Christ restored the sight of the blind man. The Apostles asked if the man had been stricken because of the sins of the afflicted man or the sins of his parents. The Master replied that he had not been stricken because of the sins of either, but that his sight had been taken and restored to prove the power of God.

Dr. Joseph Silverman, Rabbi of Temple Emanu-El, at Fifth Avenue and Forty-third Street, in his discourse used the disaster in San Francisco as an argument in favor of the existence of a divine God.

"There are those who complain that there is no God because a just and everlasting God would not thrust such terrible visitations upon his children," he said. "They are wrong. The earthquake on the Pacific Coast has furnished a basis to refute the arguments of the many who murmur against God.

"Is the earthquake right or wrong?" he continued. "It is not a moral but a scientific question. The answer is that God did not tell men to locate on the edge of a crater, nor did he tell them to build on the rocky strata subject to seismic disturbances. It is their own cupidity and greed for wealth which makes them rear cities in places they know to be dangerous."

The collection taken up at the Madison Square Presbyterian Church yesterday, which will go to the relief fund for the California sufferers, amounted to $1,507.11. In his invocation the Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst said:

"Sanctify to us all the various experience of life, and especially at this time wilt thou bless to thine afflicted children, the experience of sorrow, of loss, and of sudden calamity.

"We would not seek to understand the providence of life, but we do seek to have given to us, and to all the weary, hungry, and impoverished thousands and hundreds of thousands that are to-day knit together in the fellowship of sorrow, the grace to submit to this appalling visitation without resentment, to carry the burden without breaking under it, and through the instrumentality of loss to have made over to them a class of values that shall be finer and less destructible than those of which they have been bereft."

CORPORATIONS HAVE HEARTS.

Dr. Lyman Abbott Points to Their Free Transportation to 'Frisco.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., April 22.—The Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott addressed the Yale seniors in Battell Chapel this morning, the class wearing caps and gowns for the first time. Dr. Abbott's theme was the transient building by mortal hands and the ever-continued fellowship of man. Referring to the earthquake he said in part:

"This calamity comes at a time when the Nation has been aroused by the exposure of various crimes, political and otherwise; at a time when the magazines have been attacking capitalists, calling them selfish with no redeeming features; when the President had just finished his address on the man with the muck-rake.

"Look at what happened. Capital came to the front with large sums for the sufferers. The soulless corporations which own the railroads offered free transportation for people and provisions. Congress appropriated millions, and New York, with all its vice and sin, has given over $8,000,000. The American people respond nobly, showing that human sympathy still exists in all the rush of our busy life."

In conclusion he said: "Live for America, and foster this broad feeling of sympathy for your fellow-man in your breasts."

ROCKEFELLER PASTOR SAYS:

Theatres Have No Religion; Getting Avertising Out of 'Frisco.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, April 22.—The two theatre benefits given to-night for the San Francisco relief fund came in for a severe attack from the Rev. Dr. Charles A. Eaton, pastor of John D. Rockefeller's Euclid Avenue Baptist Church. Dr. Eaton does not believe in Sunday night theatrical performances. He told his audience this evening that the local play-houses were selfish; that they were giving to the sufferers that which cost them practically nothing.

"Here the theatres will run for themselves all week," he said, "and when it comes Sunday evening they break the law just to get a little advertising. They have no religion. It is foreign to their natures.

"Sunday night performances given under the guise of charity are a scantily clothed and hideous attempt at advertising."

MAY PROVIDE A HOSPITAL.

American Women in London Organize to Show Their Sympathy.

LONDON, April 22.—Prominent American women residing in England are organizing a committee to promote some object expressing their sympathy with the sufferers by the California earthquake. The form their effort will take has not yet been decided, but it is suggested that they build a hospital.

Mrs. Adair, Mrs. Joseph Chamberlain, Mrs. Craigie, Mrs. Arthur Paget, and Lady Craven have already joined in the movement. Mrs. Whitelaw Reid will be unable to join the committee, owing to the official position of her husband, but she has sent a large donation.

NO EPIDEMIC IN 'FRISCO.

Officials Say There Is No Truth in Stories to the Contrary.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 22.—The Associated Press is requested to transmit the following:

"War Department Headquarters, Pacific Division, San Francisco, April, 22.—Several telegrams have been received at these headquarters requesting information as to epidemics of contagious diseases in the City of San Francisco. There is absolutely no truth in any of these statements. There is no epidemic of any kind, and no present prospect of any. Such statements are simply doing harm to San Francisco and injuring the country in general. It would be deemed a great service to the suffering people of San Francisco and all their friends if it could be published throughout the country that the conditions are not so.

His hair was brown before the earthquake. It is now almost entirely white.

He was 22 years old. He had been home for a month on account of ill health. He had brooded much in the last few days over the earthquake wreck at Stanford University.

THE OPERA SINGERS ARE NOW IN OMAHA

Fremstad's Maid Says She'll Never Leave New York Again.

ALL DUE HERE TO-MORROW

Miss Weed and Miss Jacoby in Chicago—Chorus Delayed on the Southern Route.

Special to The New York Times.

OMAHA, Neb., April 22.—The members of the Metropolitan Opera Company never wore more gantastic costumes on the stage than those in which they were attired when they went through Omaha this afternoon on the Overland Limited bound for New York. With this contingent were Mmes. Sembrich, Olive Fremstad, Louise Homer, Edyth Walker, Bella Alten, and Bessie Abott; Messrs. Paul Kalisch, Hertz, Caruso, Plançon, Dippel, Campanari, Journet, Rossi, Ernst, Goerlitz, and a few others.

There was a great jumble of French, Italian, and German, and other languages when the Overland rolled in, and then the artists retired from public gaze and refused to talk. However, Miss Fremstad's maid was quite communicative about the escape of herself and her mistress. She said:

"We were staying at the St. Dunstan, at Van Ness Avenue and Sutter Street. When the awful shake came, my feeling was the most terrible I have ever known. The earth falls out from beneath my feet, and there is nothing to hold to. Things falling and the bed slides across the room. A crash and a roar in every direction like a big storm; but above it all rise the screams of women and the perishing shrieks of children.

"I go up in the air a foot or two, it seems, then the floor sinks beneath me and I think I am going to fall forever. I go to the window and look out. All around me big stone and brick buildings are going to pieces like houses of blocks. I know that the end of the world has come.

"I do not stop for the elevator, but I run down six flights of stairs—one of them I fall down. On the first floor I find Mme. Fremstad.

"'Oh, Marie,' she says, 'get your hat and we will leave the city.'

"So I run back up to the seventh floor to get my hat and coat. Then I come back down and fall down another flight.

"Mme. Fremstad and I go out to an open place where thousands of other people are. All day we stay there trying to get some one to take us to the ferry, for Madame thinks if we get to Oakland we can find a train. We don't get any water at all.

"People are so crazy they do not stop for money. Sometimes men drive by, and we offer them money, but they shake their heads and never stop. The flames leap up from the big fires all over the city, and the air is filled with smoke. Oh, it is terrible to wait there, when we want so much to get across the bay.

"Late in the afternoon Mme. Fremstad gives a man $50 and he takes us to the ferry. One of the last men we see is Manager Goerlitz. He says he can get no tickets, no trains, no drays, no hacks, no anything, and he and Sembrich and Caruso and the rest of them will get away when they can. We go across the bay and hurry to the station at Oakland. The train is just starting. We scream and wave our hands. The train stops and we get on. I never leave New York again."

Mme. Fremstad left the train at Salt Lake City and joined the other members of the company on the Overland as they came through yesterday.

CHEYENNE, Wyoming, April 22.—The twenty-two principals of the Metropolitan Opera Company who went through the San Francisco earthquake passed through here on the Overland Limited to-night on their way East. Many were wearing borrowed clothing, but all were happy that they had escaped with their lives. To use Signor Caruso's own words: "It was a miracle we were saved."

Mme. Eames has remained behind. She will stay in California for a time visiting friends.

Caruso has saved three trunks of clothes. He says that after the earthquake he slept on the grass in Lafayette Square. When he tried to get into the square the soldiers pushed him back. He pleaded with them, but they would not listen. Then he remembered that he had under his arm a large photograph of President Roosevelt on which was written, "With kindest regards, Theodore Roosevelt."

"I showed this," said M. Caruso, "and one of the soldiers said: 'If you are a friend of Teddy come in and make yourself at home.'"

Dispatches received last night at the Metropolitan predicted the arrival of the opera stars in Chicago early to-day, and in New York some time to-morrow. Mme. Josephine Jacoby and Miss Marian West got away a little in advance of the others, and are expected this morning. The chorus, coming by the Southern route, is likely to get here Thursday.

CHICAGO, April 22.—A score or more persons who were in San Francisco on the morning of the earthquake reached Chicago to-day, among them Miss Marion Weed and Miss Josephine Jacoby of the Metropolitan Opera Company. Others of the company will reach Chicago to-morrow morning and will leave in the afternoon on the Twentieth Century Limited for New York. Speaking of the experiences of the company last Wednesday morning, Miss Jacoby said:

"We were stopping at the Palace Hotel, and when we were awakened by the first shock the building was rolling like a cork in the sea. Glass was breaking, plaster was falling, and the furniture was being thrown about in all directions. The first shock lasted for over a minute. We were about to start downstairs when the second shock came. That lasted for probably two minutes. We were in the street when the third shock came.

"In spite of the confusion the members of the company all got together and Mr. Goerlitz, the manager, told us to meet at 10 o'clock in the morning at a square near the hotel. We did so, and arranged to meet at the same place on Thursday morning. The fire, however, made this impossible, and Miss Weed and I came on to Chicago."

Train Bearing the Chorus Delayed.

Special to The New York Times.

EL PASO, Texas, April 22.—The special train bearing the Conried opera chorus and musicians has been delayed several hours on the trip from San Francisco to New York. It started from this city to-night, and will reach El Paso to-morrow night.

ELK FUND TO BE LARGE.

Exalted Ruler of the Order Well on His Way to the Coast.

OMAHA, April 22.—R. W. Brown, Grand Exalted Ruler of the Elks, went through Omaha to-day on the way to San Francisco personally to supervise the relief measures of that organization. As soon as he reaches Oakland, Mr. Brown will appoint a relief committee composed of Judge Henry Melvin of Oakland, Percy Long of San Francisco, and Dr. Ralph Hagen of Los Angeles. These men will have direct charge of all relief measures, and Mr. Brown will superintend things generally.

"I expect the Elk fund will amount to not less than a quarter of a million dollars," he said.

DOCTOR ACCIDENTALLY SHOT.

Bullet from an Automatic Pistol Passes Through His Heart.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 22.—Dr. Charles F. Taggert of Los Angeles, who had charge of a corps of nurses at the Hearst Relief Hospital, in the Crocker Grammar School, in Page Street, near Baker Street, was instantly killed to-day. An automatic revolver dropped out of his pocket and was discharged. The bullet passed through his heart. He was one of California's prominent physicians.

PHILADELPHIA, April 22.—Count Gerolema Naselli, the Italian Consul in Philadelphia, received a cablegram from Rome to-day appointing him Consul General at San Francisco. The cablegram instructed Count Naselli to proceed to San Francisco at once and care for the Italian interests in that city.

EASY TO RECONSTRUCT MANY OF THE BUILDINGS

New Skyscrapers to be Rushed Up in San Francisco.

STEEL MILLS BUSY ALREADY

So a Good Deal of the Work Will Probably Go to Great Britain and Germany.

FRESNO, Cal., April 22.—C. C. Lindgren of the Lindgren-Hicks Company, a contracting firm of San Francisco and Fresno, returned last evening from San Francisco with definite news that the disaster is to have no deterrent effect upon contemplated skyscrapers for San Francisco. He also says that many of the great buildings reported destroyed can be rebuilt, although the expense in the case of some will be great.

The Humboldt Bank, which had planned to erect on Market Street, between Third and Fourth Streets, an eighteen-story structure to overlook the Call building, has given orders to build the structure according to the original plans and rush it as fast as possible.

It will be necessary to rebuild the first two stories of the Fairmount Hotel. A $500,000 annex to the Fairmount, containing the largest theatre in San Francisco, is contracted for. The Hayward building, at Montgomery and California Streets, is only slightly damaged and can be repaired at small cost, from $5,000 to $10,000.

The Merchants' Exchange, although badly burned inside, can be repaired at an expenditure of about $200,000 or $300,000. The building cost $6,000,000. The front of the Rialto building will stand, but the rear was dynamited.

Other buildings in the burned district that have withstood the flames sufficiently to admit of rebuilding are:

The James Flood, the Union Trust, the new Chronicle, the Call, the Mutual Savings Bank, the Crocker-Woolworth, and the St. Francis Hotel.

Buildings that are practically undamaged are the new Post Office, the Mint, and the old Custom House.

Lindgren has volunteered to clear a way through Market Street for traffic.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 22.—Many of the most substantial business men and property owners of San Francisco already are in consultation with architects. While the work of clearing away the débris is going forward a corps of draughtsmen will be busily occupied preparing plans for the new buildings to adorn the city.

It is understood that James D. Phelan will be one of the first to rebuild in Market Street. His plans are not complete, but in general call for a fine structure at Market and O'Farrel Streets. Mr. Phelan recently purchased the property adjoining and reaching to Stockton Street. His intention is to cover the entire frontage with buildings as soon as it can be done.

Practically every bank in San Francisco will be rebuilt. All of these institutions have Eastern connections, and many of them are affiliated with foreign banks. Owing to the great prosperity of San Francisco, the local institutions almost without exception have large deposits to their credit in New York and European capitals. This money will be available at once, and after the strain of the moment has been relieved building operations will begin. P. W. Lilienthal, President of the Anglo-California Bank, said:

"Now is the time for every man to put his shoulder to the wheel to build up the new city. There is going to be a new city, and I am going to do all I can to make it the greatest city in the world. It will mean work, and lots of it, but the people of San Francisco are equal to the task."

Several large establishments have sent messages to their customers throughout the State that they would open for business in San Francisco as soon as the authorities permit.

William Greer Harrison, President of the Olympic Club, announces that the club building, which was destroyed by fire, will be rebuilt.

PITTSBURG MILLS TOO BUSY.

Think San Francisco Steel Work Must Be Done Abroad.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 22.—Great Britain and Germany will have to supply the greater part of the material for the rebuilding of San Francisco, according to the steel men of this city. The mills in the United States that are manufacturing structural shapes are so crowded at present it is feared that the rebuilding of the city will be greatly retarded by the necessity of going abroad for structural shapes. Even before the fire the Pittsburg mills were refusing orders that called for immediate delivery, and were taking no orders except for delivery after Jan. 1 next.

That steel will enter almost exclusively into the rebuilding of the new San Francisco is considered a certainty by the Pittsburg steel men. From accounts that have already been received from the local agents of the Carnegie Steel Company and the Jones & Laughlin Company in San Francisco it was the buildings of steel construction which withstood the earthquake shocks as well as the attacks of the fire. As was the case in Baltimore, all of the steel buildings were practically unharmed by the flames. In building the new San Francisco it is believed here that steel shapes will be used almost exclusively.

The Carnegie Steel Company has practically closed its books for additional orders where delivery is required within the next eight months. Much of this work is for Pittsburg alone, where more than $20,000,000 in new buildings is to be spent this Summer.

Jones & Laughlin, the big independent concern, have just completed and started a new plant for structural shapes, but, even with their additional capacity, they are unable to handle the business which they now have on their books, without counting anything additional. The Pennsylvania and Lackawanna Steel Companies and the Illinois Steel Company will be able to handle some of the work that will come from San Francisco, but it will only be a small percentage of the great amount that will be needed.

The steel mills of Germany are rushed with orders for immediate delivery, but those of Great Britain can accommodate quite a large amount of additional business. On account of the freight rates from the Pittsburg district to the Pacific Coast, Great Britain and Germany will be able to deliver structural shapes in San Francisco as cheaply or probably more cheaply than could the local mills. It will, however, necessitate considerable delay in getting the material here. Pittsburg manufacturers will, it is believed, put aside whatever orders they can to assist in the rebuilding of San Francisco.

WILL THE UNIONS HINDER?

Secretary of Chicago Employers Sees Danger Ahead in Rebuilding.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, April 22.—Secretary Fred W. Job of the Chicago Employers' Association, who recently returned from an investigation of the industrial situation in California, sees an obstacle to the rebuilding of San Francisco in the labor conditions existing in the coast city, which he pronounced to-day the "most union ridden city in the country."

"I believe it will be a harder task to rebuild San Francisco than any other city in the United States," he said. "Practically all the skilled trades there are controlled by the labor organizations, and if the unions attempt to enforce their wage agreements in force before the disaster, cheap labor will be out of the question. For several years employers have been fighting the unions, but the conditions which the latter have succeeded in imposing are very onerous. Building contractors especially have found great difficulty in completing work without many strikes and labor disturbances."

Secretary Job estimated that between 75 and 85 per cent. of all the workmen in San Francisco are organized, leaving only a small percentage of non-union labor free from union influences. He expressed the opinion that the Citizens' Alliance, which has a strong membership among the employers, may be able to overcome the unfavorable conditions, and expressed the hope that the union men, being common sharers in the catastrophe, may abandon the principles of organization in the present crisis."

REFUGEES IN LOS ANGELES.

600 Come in on One Train — All of Them Cared For.

Special to The New York Times.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., April 22.—Hundreds of refugees poured into Los Angeles on every train from San Francisco to-day. One train this evening brought 600, including about sixty Chinamen, who will be cared for in the local Chinatown. Churches, schools, and homes have been thrown open here to the homeless, and several camps are being established in this city and nearby places where the destitute will be cared for.

It was a motley crowd that came in to-day. Men and women of the better class, negros, Chinamen, and the scum of the water front huddled together in each car, every seat being taken. Worn and wasted with the long trip of 500 miles from the smitten city, they bore up remarkably well, and were overjoyed to step from the train in which they had sat or lain on the car floors for nearly twenty-four hours. The train that brought the refugees was free to all, and it was loaded to the limit of its thirteen day coaches.

Arriving here, the refugees were fed at great tables spread in the open air near the Southern Pacific station, after which the local Relief Committees took them in charge and sent them to various places of refuge throughout the city, at the beach, and in the foothill towns.

Up to to-night more than $250,000 in cash has been subscribed through various Los Angeles channels, while more than 150 carloads of provisions, clothing, and other supplies have gone forward. Ten thousand cots for the use of the homeless in the San Francisco and Oakland parks were sent out to-day, and efforts are being made to fill every need named by those in charge of the relief work in the North.

Los Angeles students, returning from Leland Stanford University, tell of the awful havoc wrought by the earthquake upon the beautiful buildings of that educational centre. The library, the memorial arch, the memorial church, and many others of the finest buildings in the Stanford grounds are torn and shattered, and it will require hundreds of thousands of dollars to restore them.

Steps were taken here to-day to invite to Los Angeles the meeting of the National Educational Association, which was to meet in San Francisco in July. Los Angeles is in no way affected by the seismic disturbance.

Through irresponsible agencies reports have been sent out of fear and trembling that never existed here, and an attempt is being made to assure people in the East that Los Angeles, separated as far from San Francisco as is Buffalo from New York City, was not affected by the disturbance.

NOT A BIT OF FRICTION.

Funston and Schmitz Both Say They Are Working Well Together.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—After Secretary Taft's attention had been directed to the reports that friction existed at San Francisco between Gen. Funston and Mayor Schmitz, he sent a message to Gen. Funston asking for the facts in the case. Gen. Funston's reply was received at the War Department to-day, and read:

"Report of disagreement between Mayor Schmitz and myself must be based on the excited imagination of some overworked newspaper correspondent. Mayor Schmitz and myself have been working together in the unity of doing great work, and we are helping to the extent of our ability and apparently to the satisfaction of every friend of the community and all unfortunate people of the city."

The department also received to-day two telegrams from Mayor Schmitz on this subject. The first one, which was dated yesterday, reads:

"Report of conflict between Gen. Funston and myself absolutely without foundation. We are not only without difference, but are co-operating in the utmost friendship and harmony. Gen. Funston's excellent work, his good judgment, and his zeal in our cause by day and by night are appreciated by the people of San Francisco in this hour of great distress. The army and Nation are to be congratulated on the possession of such officers as Gen. Funston."

The second dispatch from Mayor Schmitz, which is dated to-day, is:

"Supplementing my telegram of yesterday, I wish again, even in the midst of our great troubles, to express my indignation at the remarkably malicious and decidedly untruthful suggestion that a conflict exists between Gen. Funston and myself. I wish to emphasize the pleasantness and harmony of our relations and co-operation."

MORE TELEGRAPH WIRES.

But the Messages at Oakland Overwhelm Operators and Clerks.

OAKLAND, April 22.—The telegraph situation is improving, and new circuits are being opened, enabling the companies to send an increased volume of business. There is no decrease in the amount of business. At the Western Union office a dozen clerks are kept busy receiving messages to be sent out. There are not enough coin drawers to accommodate the clerks, and each holds in his hand a sack of money from which he makes change.

The messages received are overwhelming in number. Most of them are addressed to people who lived in the burned districts of San Francisco, and it is impossible to deliver them. As the offices are too small to accommodate the inquirers for messages, nine booths have been erected. The messages, alphabetically arranged, are sent to these booths. Every booth is crowded with persons expecting messages of inquiry or answers to telegrams they have sent.

Arrangements have been made by the Western Union for the cashing of small amounts sent by telegraph. Similar conditions prevail at the offices of the Postal Company.

About 300 soldiers are guarding the city, and two battalions of the Seventh Regulars are to arrive from Los Angeles to-night.

There has been practically no disorder and not a shot has been fired. Health conditions are good, and the hospitals, though full, are able to take care of all cases. About fifty insane persons have been caught and are in confinement. Some of them undoubtedly escaped from asylums and hospitals in San Francisco, while others are temporarily insane through exposure.

Japanese Seismograph Record Shows Speed of Earthquake's Travel.

LONDON, April 22.—According to a dispatch from Tokio to The Times, seismographs in the Imperial University show that the San Francisco earthquake reached Japan in eleven minutes.

Two seismologists from Japan will go to San Francisco forthwith. The Red Cross Society of Japan is sending a hospital ship.

FUGITIVE SHOT AT SHERIFF.

Man Charged with Murder of Mine Paymaster Is Captured.

PLATTSBURG, N. Y., April 22.—James Brown, charged with the murder of Paymaster David Rosenberry of the Witherbee, Sherman & Co. mines at Mineville, N. Y., was arrested to-day at the home of his brother-in-law in Mineville, after he had attempted to shoot Sheriff Bernard of Essex County.

Rosenberry, accompanied by a driver named Wickes, left Mineville yesterday afternoon to drive to the Cook shaft, a few miles away, to pay off the men at work there. He had about $5,000 with him. Both men were armed with revolvers. They had not gone far when a man, said to have been recognized as Brown, jumped from the woods into the road ahead of the horse, and, leveling a rifle at the occupants of the buggy, demanded that they stop and throw up their hands. Instead Wickes lashed the horse into a run.

The highwayman fired five shots, three of them striking Rosenberry, who was killed instantly. Wickes escaped with the team, the money, and Rosenberry's body. The highwayman disappeared in the woods. A general alarm soon was sent out and Sheriff Barnard personally headed a posse of Deputies.

Private detectives were also summoned. The mine owners offered $1,000 reward for Brown's capture. The search was kept up all last night and all day to-day.

Brown was found this afternoon hiding in a hay mow in the barn of Barney Comiskey, his brother-in-law. Sheriff Barnard was notified, and accompanied by detectives and Deputy Marshal Spring, searched the barn without result and then entered Comiskey's house.

Ascending the stairs Sheriff Barnard was confronted by Brown, who fired his rifle, the bullet just grazing the Sheriff's head. Barnard ran back down stairs and called up to Brown that he would give him two minutes in which to throw down his gun and surrender or suffer the consequences. Brown coolly waited the full two minutes, and then hurled his rifle down stairs.

The Sheriff had difficulty in getting Brown out of the house and into a wagon because of a crowd of miners who surrounded the house and threatened lynching.

CROWD TO SEE IMMIGRANTS.

Ellis Island Congestion Detains Italians Four Days on a Liner.

Owing to the crush at Ellis Island following the arrival of thousands of aliens in this port the past week, 300 Italian immigrants have been detained for the last four days on the Italian Line steamer Citta Di Napoli, awaiting her turn to send her passengers to the immigrant station. They have been four impatient days for the aliens and vexatious days to several hundred Italians who have vainly tried to see their countrymen on the ship at her berth at the foot of West Thirty-fourth Street.

Yesterday's sunshine brought out an immense crowd, which tried in vain to reach the ship. So troublesome did they become that the steamship officials and the immigration officials had to request a special police detail from the West Thirty-seventh Street Station to maintain police lines and hold back the Italians, who did not take kindly to the delay of the disembarkation of their friends, and who were still angrier at not being able to send fruit, food, and messages aboard the vessel.

Several sand and brick scows tied up in the slip were crowded with Italians. Women brought their babies, many brought lunches, and every available inch of space was filled when the police drove them off the pier.

One man was pushed off one of the scows by an excited man behind him who recognized his brother among the detained passengers. He was Castanzo Garotari of 520 East Thirteenth Street, and was pulled out of the water by some of the men on the scow. Patrolman May of the West Thirty-seventh Street Station sent him to Bellevue Hospital. He was little worse for his wetting.

OLD ST. GEORGE'S REOPENED.

The Historic Church at Hempstead Has Been Renovated.

Historic St. George's Church at Hempstead was formally reopened yesterday, after being closed since Christmas to allow its being restored along Colonial lines. Many well-known persons subscribed toward its renovation and were present to-day, among them being August Belmont, S. A. Havemeyer, Mr. and Mrs. Oliver W. Bird, H. V. R. Kennedy, Mrs. Sidney Dillon Ripley, Mr. and Mrs. August Belmont, Jr., Miss Anna Ripley, and Roswell P. Eldridge.

St. George's dates back to 1665. In 1706 Queen Anne presented to the parish a silver communion service, a Bible, and a Prayer Book, and in 1735 King George II. gave the church its charter. The Rev. S. De Lancey Townsend of All Angels' Church, and the Rev. Dr. Henry Mottet of the Church of the Holy Communion, and the Rev. Percy Stickney Grant of the Church of the Ascension took part in the service.

TRIED TO UNDRESS IN CHURCH

Man Thought to be Crazy Interrupted Mass at St. Joseph's.

A man who is believed to be out of his mind entered St. Joseph's Church, at Sixth Avenue and Washington Place, yesterday morning while the celebration of the 6 o'clock mass was in progress and walked down the middle aisle of the church to the steps of the altar. There with great deliberation he removed his coat and vest, and tossed them on the altar, asking in a voice heard all over the church that the celebrant of the mass would bless them.

Morris Griffin of 150 Waverley Place, one of the worshippers, escorted him out of the church. At the close of the service the man was still in front of the church. A valise and bundle that he carried, as well as his coat and vest, were handed back to him, and he was requested not to annoy the congregation again.

Despite this request, the man hung around the church building all day, and frequently rang the rectory bell with a request to see the priest. His actions becoming unbearable, Patrolman Twillman of the Charles Street Station was called and he placed the man under arrest.

NATION'S TRADE WITH PANAMA IS GROWING

Jumps in Single Year from $6,000,000 to $12,000,000.

EXPORTS EXCEED IMPORTS

Largest Single Item for Year Ended June 1, 1905, Was Flour, $252,613 —Other Figures Analyzed.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—The trade of the United States with Panama is showing a very rapid growth, and will amount to approximately $12,000,000 in the fiscal year which ends with June, 1906. The total trade in the fiscal year 1905 was less than $6,000,000.

While $12,000,000 forms a small percentage of the total commerce of the United States, the details of this trade with the youngest and smallest of the American republics are interesting at this time, when discussions of the trade of the United States with the various American countries, one by one, are being presented by the Department of Commerce and Labor through its Bureau of Statistics.

Exports form naturally the larger proportion of our trade with Panama. In the eight months ended with February, the latest figures which have reached the Bureau of Statistics, the total exports amount to $6,843,028, against $2,578,185 in the corresponding months of 1905.

The exports to the area now known as Panama were included in the statement of exports to Colombia prior to Jan. 1, 1904, so that it is only practicable to compare the eight months ended with February, 1906, with the eight months ended with February, 1905.

The imports from Panama are much smaller than the exports to that country since its producing area is small, while its consuming power is proportionately large by reason of the presence of large numbers of people engaged upon the canal and in preparations for that work. Panama contains 31,600 square miles, or about the area of South Carolina, and the population numbers probably 300,000, including the recent additions, the estimated population when Panama established itself as a republic having been about 340,000.

For the eight months ending February, 1906, the imports from Panama were $627,090, or less than one-tenth as much as the exports. The details of imports from Panama are not yet available so far as relates to the articles forming the total, but figures for the last fiscal year show that bananas formed about one-half and india rubber about one-fifth of the value of merchandise imported.

The largest single item on the list of exports from the United States to Panama in the year ending June 30, 1905, was flour, $252,613. Cotton cloth, colored, amounted to $205,286, and uncolored cotton cloth to $69,242; other cotton goods amounted to $146,867, making the total for all cotton goods considerably in excess of the figures for flour. Iron and steel manufactures, as a whole, showed an even larger total, steel rails alone amounting to $168,324; locks, hinges, and other builders' hardware, $41,395; structural iron and steel, $33,376; sewing machines, $13,188; typewriters, $21,702; machinery and other miscellaneous classes not separately specified, $825,706.

Logs, lumber, and manufactures of wood are also an important item, logs in the last fiscal year amounting to $168,768; boards, $198,375; furniture, $94,247; sash, doors, and blinds, $16,587, and other manufactures of wood, $25,067.

The figures of exports to Panama include no shipments made by the Government in its own vessels, but do include any shipments by the Government sent as freight in the vessels engaged in general transportation between the United States and Panama. Of the merchandise exported to Panama, about $3,000,000 went from New York, $750,000 from New Orleans, $330,000 from Mobile, and $250,000 from San Francisco, while of the imports from Panama, which amounted last year to $813,154, a little more than one-half was brought in through the Port of Mobile, and nearly all of the remainder through the Port of New York.

Are You Interested in Finest Ready-to-Wear Clothes?

Who Makes Them Rochester, N. Y., is the fountain-head of all that is best in ready-to-wear clothes. There generation of craftsmen has succeeded generation, constantly advancing and improving, until now very few tailors elsewhere can even approach the work of these experts.

One organization there—our Shop L. B.—is composed only of veterans of proven ability, directed by men acknowledged for years as among the most practical ready-to-wear tailors.

Copyright, Brill Brothers.

All Hand Work The garments they produce approach the ideal. Every one is moulded into shape entirely by hand, stitch by stitch, step by step. The canvas of the coat-front is shrunk, shaped and padded and felled entirely by hand. The hair-cloth is worked on and shrunk by hand; the shoulders built layer by layer, worked and shaped entirely by hand. So carefully and thoroughly are these foundations built by hand that when the outer cloth of the coat is removed they alone form a perfect mould. Excepting on outside seams and edges the hand work is continued in every detail of construction.

Fine Tailoring Points. There are many superior features derived from this unusual amount of hand work, viz., introducing for the first time in ready-to-wear clothes these superior tailoring features: Double one-sixteenth inch stitched edges, possible of accomplishment only by cleverest needle-workers. Half and half shaped and full draped sleeves that eliminate former ugly wrinkles back of shoulder and conform to natural lines of the arms.

Shoulders built entirely by hand, so that they retain their shapeliness and will not break under hardest usage.

Vest shoulders hand shaped and padded (first time ready-to-wear). Each part of trousers shaped and shrunk by hand before joining together and finshed entirely by hand.

FOUR BURNED TO DEATH IN CONEY ISLAND BLAZE

Fireman Gavin Finds His Brother Among the Victims.

SEVEN BUILDINGS DESTROYED

It Was Thought Until Daylight That All Had Escaped—Then Bodies Were Discovered.

Four men were burned to death in a fire which destroyed seven buildings and threatened to destroy a large part of Coney Island early yesterday morning.

Shortly after midnight fire was discovered in the stable owned by Dennis McGrath, a contractor, at West Second Street, near Park Place. When Chief Rogers of the Coney Island Station arrived he quickly sent in a second alarm, and when Chief Lally arrived, fearing a serious conflagration like the one that swept over Coney Island two years ago, he turned in a third alarm.

The high wind carried the flames to the adjoining structures, and in less than an hour seven houses had been burned. Only by great efforts on the part of the firemen and the police and the tearing down of several fences adjoining the frame structures was the fire prevented from reaching Public School No. 100 and the Concourse Hotel on the Boulevard, which are nearby.

The occupants of the cottages were hurried out of their homes, losing nearly all their belongings. Mrs. Annie Blumenberg, who lives next to the McGrath stable, where the fire started, was carried out by Policeman Lingletter of the Coney Island Station.

At first it was thought that every one had escaped, but when daylight came Assistant Foreman Thomas Gavin of Engine Company 145 discovered the body of his brother, James Gavin, with three other bodies in the McGrath stable. Later the other bodies were identified as those of Dennis McGrath, 75 years old, the owner of the stable; his son, Peter McGrath, and John Brown, all of whom were employed at the stable.

Under the body of the elder McGrath was found a roll of bills estimated by the police at $2,000, about one-half of which was unscorched. The damage to the structures is placed at $25,000.

It is supposed by the police that the fire started by some one of the employes of the stable throwing a lighted match among some loose hay.

SEND THE IMMIGRANT WEST.

He'll Be Happy There, Not Here, Says Archbishop McGlennon.

At the annual concert and lecture given under the auspices of the Society of St. Vincent de Paul last night at Carnegie Hall Archbishop Farley introduced Archbishop McGlellon of St. Louis. Archbishop Farley referred to the San Francisco disaster, and the way the people of the United States had made all haste to give liberally that the suffering of the victims on the coast might be alleviated.

The proceeds of last night's concert and lecture are to go towards the maintenance of the society's fresh air farm this Summer at Spring Valley, in the Ramapo Hills. Nearly two thousand poor children had a two weeks' outing there last Summer, and the society hopes to give a similar outing this year to at least 2,000 of New York's poor children.

Archbishop McGlennon's subject was "An Apology for Charity." He praised charity as against philapthropy. He defined philanthropy as a worship of humanity; charity as a worship of God; the former as working for the good of the Nation in helping to make strong men and virtuous women, the latter as working for the individual in pointing his way to heaven.

"Philanthropy would take a man to the grave," he said, "and there leave him. Charity goes with him not only to the grave but to the resurrection, and finally leads him to the side of his elder brother, Christ.

"We have so many men now, especially in America, who will devote their millions to philanthropy, not to charity," continued Archbishop McGlennon. "Millions for universities, for settlements, for hospitals, for institutions that look only after the physical are given each year. Is poverty eliminated by these? Are the poor satisfied? They cry out, 'You have given us money; we want more. You sit in golden palaces and discuss our condition; we want your palaces, not your sympathy.'"

Touching on New York's ever present and difficult problem of its poor, Archbishop McGlennon continued: "And you have to deal not only with the thousands of poor that are always with you, but with the poor of other countries that are coming at the rate of two every minute. Over there in their little homes they have heard of the land of freedom and of gold. They come, and they find neither freedom nor gold. Down in the tenements into which their circumstances drive them, they lose their happiness and their health.

"For the good of the nation, for the happiness of those whom the name of America lures from their homes across the seas, I would have you tell those that come by the thousands:

"'You shall not settle in New York, nor in Chicago, nor in St. Louis. Go on your way far out West. There are thousands of acres of land. There you can build up again homes such as you have known. There you can know again the grass and the growing vines and the broad, bending skies. There you can know happiness. There you can come close to God.'"

MATHOT THERE TO SEE.

Had Heard of Cabmen's Wrangles and Witnessed One.

Deputy Police Commissioner Mathot and James Brown, President of the Hackmen's Association, are in a set-to over the great question as to whether a free-lance cabby may invade the specific territory claimed by private hackmen to [illegible] trade. After hot argument Saturday afternoon and night Deputy Commissioner Mathot had Policeman Judge arrest Brown Saturday night in front of a restaurant near Sixth Avenue and Forty-second Street.

Since Magistrate Wahle decided in favor of a free lance cabby as against the private hackman about a week ago, the wanderers have become very bold. The fight has seemed to center in front of the Sixth Avenue restaurants. On Saturday President Brown, for his association, and Lawyer Andrews, for the restaurant, appeared before Deputy Commissioner Mathot. So acute became the argument that President Brown was ordered from the building.

Then Deputy Mathot went with Policeman Judge to the centre of the disturbances. He waited in vain a long time, but just before midnight President Brown came sailing down Sixth Avenue and sidled into the territory claimed by the private hackmen of the restaurant. At the end of the orations and counter orations, President Brown was taken down from his freelancing cab and locked up on the ground that he was abusive and threatening.

In the West Side Court yesterday there were many to give moral and linguistic support to both sides in the case. The case was adjourned until to-day.

TALKS OF CONGO ATROCITIES.

3,000,000 Natives Slain Every Year, Dr. G. Stanley Hall Asserts.

BOSTON, April 22.—Dr. G. Stanley Hall of Clark University addressed a large audience in Potter Hall to-day on conditions in the Congo Free State.

Dr. Hall asserted that out of a population estimated at between 30,000,000 and 40,000,000, 3,000,000 are yearly put to death by the laws of King Leopold. Many natives, he said, were flogged to death because of their inability to collect a sufficient amount of rubber.

LOCAL REVOLUTIONISTS CHEER GREGORY MAXIME

Grand Central Palace Filled with Friends of Free Russia.

ARMS, NOT SYMPATHY, ASKED

Russian Apostle of Force Says They Have the Men but Lack the Munitions of War.

For more than three minutes last night an audience of fully 3,000 persons, at the Grand Central Palace, cheered Gregory Maxime, the representative of the Revolutionary Bund in Russia, who recently came to this country.

The meeting was held under the auspices of the Jewish Revolutionary Bund of New York, and Meyer London presided. It required considerable diplomacy upon the part of Mr. London to keep the large crowd in order, while the various delegates from the Social Democratic Party, the Democratic Labor Party, and other associated organizations made brief addresses of welcome to the Russian leader.

Maxime is about 30 years old, has a high forehead, a pale face, black eyes and square jaws. He appealed for arms and not for sympathy. His speech was delivered in Yiddish, and began as follows:

"We have the blood, the men, both young and old. We have the courage, we have the purpose, we have the courage of our convictions, but our hands are empty. We ask you to fill them. I know you will."

Maxime said the audience reminded him of the great crowds that gathered in the Baltic city of Riga on Oct. 18 and 19, when 80,000 people were addressed from 14 platforms. It was the first time they had dared speak the truth, free from the espionage of the Russian police.

He was glad to be in America, he said, and to be with his fellow-countrymen, but that pleasure was nothing compared to the joy it gave him to see that the Russians living in the free land of America had not forgotten their brethren in far-away oppressed Russia. The Social Democratic Party in Russia had accomplished much, he said, by its propaganda. As an evidence of it, Maxime said that when the "Hooligans," as the anti-Jewish faction there is termed, made an ineffectual attempt to murder the Jews, the Lettish peasants fought shoulder to shoulder with the Jews.

When the Central Committee told him to start for New York, he asked it what he could possibly do in that city. "Go and see," was the reply. After witnessing the enthusiasm of the crowd, he said he now knew the committee was wiser than he.

One of the preliminary speakers said that Gorky would address a meeting in the Grand Central Palace on Wednesday night next. The mention of the Russian writer's name was the signal for vigorous applause. Maxime, however, made no mention of Gorky's name or mission to this country in his address. After the meeting had adjourned, when questioned about Gorky, he asked to be excused from making any statement.

"But," he added hastily, "I know nothing against him. I do not refuse because of that, but because I haven't time just now. At another time I will discuss him with you with pleasure."

ARRESTS FOR SUNDAY SALES.

Retail Clerks' Union Agitating for One Day's Rest in Seven.

Two proprietors of dry goods stores on the lower east side were arrested yesterday afternoon by the police of the Eldridge Street Station for violation of the Sunday law. Customers of the stores appeared as complainants, but the matter is said to be the result of agitation by the Retail Clerks' Union, which is trying to obtain the abolition of Sunday labor in the east side dry goods stores.

President Henry Kiser of the Union said that there was going to be a parade of 1,000 clerks next month, and that they would march to Police Headquarters and there call on Commissioner Bingham to interest himself in their behalf.

TRIED TO KILL DAUGHTER.

Then Gertz Shot Himself Dead—Woman May Die, Too.

Stanley Gertz of 154 Passaic Street, Passaic, shot his daughter yesterday afternoon, shot at her husband, and then killed himself. The daughter is not likely to recover.

Gertz was considered wealthy, and, though well along in years, was strong and vigorous. Some weeks ago he and his wife disagreed over property, and Mrs. Gertz went to Germany. Before going she told Mrs. Peters, her daughter, where she was going, and gave to Mrs. Peters and her husband, Dr. Walter Peters, power of attorney.

The whereabouts of Mrs. Gertz were kept from her husband, but the need of using the power of attorney Saturday showed him that the young couple knew where his wife was. This enraged Gertz, and yesterday afternoon he called Mrs. Peters into his room, and, after a quarrel, shot her. Dr. Peters was below, and started to run upstairs. As he did so Gertz appeared at the head of the stairs and fired at him. The bullet went wild, and Gertz then put the revolver to his own head and fired. He died at once.

TWENTY-TWO KILLED IN A COLORADO MINE

Explosion of Dust Spreads Death and Destruction.

17 MEN REACH SAFETY

One Miner Out of Forty Working in a Colorado Fuel and Iron Pit Still Unaccounted For.

TRINIDAD, Col., April 22.—As the result of a dust explosion in a mine of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, forty miles west of Trinidad, to-day, twenty-two miners were killed and one other is missing. The bodies have been recovered. Among the dead is James E. Reed, fire boss. Most of the others were Italians and Japanese.

There were forty men in the mine at the time of the explosion. Seventeen miners who were working 3,700 feet from the entrance escaped uninjured through another opening. The explosion occurred in Rooms 3 and 4, near the main entrance, and was the result of a windy shot, which ignited the dust.

Miners from adjacent camps assisted the rescuers. General Superintendent Robert O'Neill left here at noon and personally directed the rescue work.

The mine was not badly damaged, and work can be resumed in a couple of days. The full working force is 180 men.

WARNS WHITES OF NEGROES.

To be 100,000,000 Colored People Here in a Century, Says Dr. Holmes.

In a sermon on "The Race Problem and Higher Education of the Negro," delivered yesterday morning to the congregation of the First Presbyterian Church, Orange, the Rev. Dr. Richard S. Holmes of Philadelphia warned the white race to beware, or they would be overwhelmed. Within a century, he declared, there would be 100,000,000 negroes in the United States.

"The Lord help the present dominant race when this great giant awakes!" Dr. Holmes exclaimed.

Dr. Holmes declared that the negro problem was well-nigh impossible of solution because of three prejudices. These prejudices, he said, were that of the American people against the negroes, that of the negro against the white, and that of the negro against his own race.

CAROLINA PERFECTO
The Best Known FINE CIGAR in the World

Actual size.—See that the band has the word "PERFECTO" across the medals. Price 25 cents everywhere.
This cigar has long been recognized as the standard of value in fine imported Havana cigars. The sale of Carolina Perfectos has increased a million and a half during the past year in the United States, making more sold than all other Imported Perfectos combined. Carolina Perfecto is a guarantee of uniform quality, full weight, and superiority of workmanship. Made of ripe, mellow, perfectly cured tobacco. The reputation of this cigar tempts some retailers to offer substitutes instead of the genuine Carolina Perfecto.
For value insist on having the Carolina Perfecto.
SPECIAL NOTICE—The long-continued heavy rains during last December and January destroyed more than half of this year's tobacco crop in Cuba. This will not, however, affect the high quality of Carolina Perfectos, as the Havana Tobacco Company holds a sufficient supply of fine, ripe, perfectly matured tobaccos to continue its output of Carolina Perfectos for two years.

CHAIRMAN SHONTS BACK, SAYS CANAL IS BOOMING

Water Supply and General Sanitary System Now in Good Shape.

LITTLE DISEASE ON ISTHMUS

Forty Additional Steam Shovels to be Installed in Culebra Cut—Bigelow Charges Buried.

Theodore P. Shonts, Chairman of the Panama Canal Commission, who arrived from Colon Saturday, and left for Washington last night, spoke hopefully of the future of the work on the canal and declared that health conditions are good on the Isthmus, and that the water supply is adequate.

Mr. Shonts while on the Isthmus consulted all of the higher officials connected with canal work, and also had a conference relative to the interchange of traffic between the Panama Railroad and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

One of the first things called to his attention when he arrived at Colon, Mr. Shonts said, was the condition of the water supply in that city. Owing to the prolonged dry season, he said, the streams were low, but the reservoirs supplying Panama, Empire, Gorgona, and Bas Obispo had sufficient supplies for months to come. Chief Engineer Stevens of the canal, he added, had recommended the hauling of water into Colon for daily consumption so as to preserve as much as possible the reservoir supply for an emergency. Accordingly a water train was equipped, three water stations established, and 250,000 gallons of water a day brought into Colon. This will continue until the rainy season. The water is supplied free of charge to the citizens.

"The only man who has been charged for water in Colon," said Mr. Shonts, "is a hotel keeper. He desired a particular water to be found on the line of the Panama Railroad. He was charged a reasonable rate for the transportation of his car. I mention this because I am told some exaggerated stories have been circulated in the United States relative to this incident.

"As to health conditions," added Mr. Shonts, "they are most satisfactory. With twenty-two to twenty-three thousand employes on the payroll and a constant working force of about seventeen thousand, there were fewer patients in the hospital in March than for many months past. Dr. W. C. Gorgas, in charge of the sanitation, reports more than 450 vacant beds for the month. There has been no authentic case of yellow fever since December, and Dr. Gorgas now feels confident that no epidemic can originate there. The matter of quarantine is receiving earnest attention. Dr. Gorgas says the rate of sickness is only twenty in a thousand."

The preliminary work on the canal and railroad, Mr. Shonts said, had been carried on with vigor by Chief Engineer Stevens. The docking facilities at Colon, he said, had been made effective. The dock at Cristobal, on the Atlantic side, is completed and can be used by the largest steamships. The new dock at La Boca, on the Pacific side, has also been completed.

The construction of houses for laborers is now so far advanced that the Manager of Labor and Quarters on the Isthmus, Mr. Shonts said, had informed him that he had accommodations for 3,000 more laborers than are at present on the canal strip. The work of putting Culebra cut in shape for the wet season, as well as the installation of the steam shovels, has been steadily carried forward by Mr. Stevens, said Mr. Shonts, and a well-ballasted double track railroad through most of the cut has been constructed.

"Chief Engineer Stevens," he continued, "in the month of March, 1906, without making any special effort, but following out the general policy of the commission, moved 240,000 cubic yards of material. The reports up to the 15th of the present month indicate still greater efficiency. By July or August, it is believed, he will be able to install forty new shovels, and be in a position to move approximately 1,000,000 cubic yards a month. The actual cost, figuring in contractor's expenses for the work done in March, is 53¾ cents a cubic yard.

"The effective working force on the 1st of April," Mr. Shonts said, "was distributed on the work as follows:

Government and sanitation, 2,845; materials and supplies, 1,670; auditing and disbursing, 90; administration, engineering, and construction, including quarters, 460; municipal engineering in charge of construction of water supply, sewerage, roads, &c., 8,295; master builders in charge of houses and quarters, 2,946; motive power, shops, &c., 1,521; Culebra Division of canal, 3,193; La Boca Division, 384; Cristobal Division, 433; Chagres Division, 184.

"Vice President and General Manager Stevens has reorganized the Panama Railroad, with a distinct assignment of duties, to go into effect March 1.

"Law and order," concluded Mr. Shonts, "is maintained in a high degree, even though the vast army of employes is made up of recruits from all parts of the world. The policing of the Canal Zone is well organized and effective."

Mr. Shonts did not have anything to say in regard to the Bigelow charges.

"All that is behind us," said he. "Secretary Taft blew Bigelow out of the water at the time the charges were made. That was a full and sufficient answer."

VERONICA McCANN BURIED.

Funeral Held When Physicians Agreed That the Girl Was Dead.

Coroner's Physician O'Hanlon and several other physicians agreed yesterday that Veronica McCann was dead, and she was accordingly buried in Calvary Cemetery.

Veronica was the 11-year-old girl who lived in White Place Alley, a little blind lane running south from 214 West Eighteenth Street. She died on Wednesday, the doctors said, but she looked so lifelike that it was believed she might be still alive, and her funeral was put off Friday, when the hearse was at the door.

It took place yesterday, however. Services were held at St. Francis Xavier's Church in West Sixteenth Street, Father McGrath officiating. Owing to the doubt which had existed regarding the girl's death and the incidental publicity a large crowd gathered about the alley as the body was carried to the hearse. A large number of the schoolmates of the dead girl followed the hearse as far north on Eighth Avenue as Twentieth Street.

"Soccer" Player Breaks a Leg.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, N. J., April 22.—Thomas Warburton, 31 years old, of 53 West Ninth Street, Manhattan, had his right leg fractured in a game of Association football at Cosmopolitan Park, East Newark, to-day. Warburton is a member of the Robert Burns Club of New York, which was playing the Association team of West Hudson the second round in the cup tie series of the American Football Association. He was taken to St. Michael's Hospital, Newark. The game was won by the West Hudson team by the score of 5 to 0.

Baker First in Motor Cycle Run.

The first century run of the season was given yesterday afternoon from Bedford Rest to Patchogue and return by the New York Motor Cycle Club, and won by F. A. Baker of the Brooklyn Club in 4 hours and 20 minutes. Henry Wehman, Ralph De Palma, E. W. Carritt, E. Ovington, J. McLaughlin, T. K. Hastings, A. Jeonette, R. G. Betts, and F. P. Baker were the first to finish.

WHALERS WELL OFF.

Americans in the Arctic Sea Have Had Plenty of Food.

Special to The New York Times.

WINNIPEG, Manitoba, April 22.—Thomas Anderson of the Hudson Bay Company has arrived here, and laughs at the idea that the American whalers frozen up in the Arctic Sea will suffer great hardships, and he adds that the story that fully 75 per cent. of the crews will die of scurvy and starvation is absolutely ridiculous.

Mr. Anderson has charge of the Mackenzie River District for the Hudson Bay Company, and makes his headquarters at Fort Simpson, situated at the junction of the Laird and Mackenzie Rivers. He came here on a dog sled. He says that he was close to Herschel Island shortly after Christmas, and at that time the whalers had groceries to last them for several months and a plentiful supply of deer meat, deer being very plentiful along the shores of the Arctic Sea in that vicinity during the past Winter.

In giving some details about life in the far northern post, Mr. Anderson said that at his headquarters there were twenty-five white men, all in the employ of the company. These men had come from Eastern Canada and were good seamen, this being a necessity for the work required of them. A noteworthy feature of this northern post, over 1,500 miles due north of the international boundary, is the electric light plant there. The light is used for illuminating the company's offices and the dwelling huts; during the Winter it is kept burning all the time on account of the darkness of the days, but during the Summer it is not used at all, the nights consisting of three hours of twilight, during which artificial light is unnecessary.

While on the way south Mr. Anderson saw a herd of forty-three buffalo running wild, probably the only herd existing which is not in captivity or semi-captivity. Fur-bearing animals are very plentiful along the northern rivers this year, and the catch will be well up to the average.

STARTS FOR JUNIOR REPUBLIC.

Pittsburg Boy, Sentenced for Theft, Goes There Unaccompanied.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 23.—Roy Herbert, aged 15, was sentenced yesterday in the juvenile court by Judge John M. Kennedy to the George Junior Republic at Freeville, N. Y. Several weeks ago he stole $120 from his mother, who asked the Judge to send him to the republic instead of to the Pennsylvania Reform School.

Young Herbert is the first boy ever sent from this section to the model reformatory in New York, where boys reform themselves. He went without an escort, having expressed a willingness to go, and started out "bound in honor" to deliver himself to the authorities at Freeville. His mother argued that he would deliver himself if he said he would, and if he broke his word it would simply prove he was a hopeless case and unworthy of the love and confidence she reposed in him.

PREFERRED LIFE, AFTER ALL.

Woman Changed Her Mind About Suicide After She Hit the Water.

After jumping into the East River at the foot of Fifth Street early yesterday morning, Elizabeth Giller, 27 years old, an Austrian cigarmaker of 805 Fifth Street, regained her desire for life and swam for it until she was rescued.

Miss Giller had been suffering from insomnia for several months. She is now a prisoner at Bellevue Hospital, charged with attempted suicide.

Unable to sleep and suffering from an agonizing headache, Miss Giller left her home early in the morning, went to the bulkhead at the foot of the street, and threw herself in.

Capt. Edward Kane of the tugboat Shohola heard a scream, followed by a splash. There was a little steam up in the tug's boiler, and the Captain pulled the whistle cord half a dozen times.

The toots brought Patrolman Wagner of the Union Market Station. A small boat was fastened to the bulkhead. Capt. Kane and Wagner jumped into this and shoved the boat out into the dark water of the slip, where Wagner pulled the woman aboard with a boat hook.

RUSSIAN AUTHORS PROTEST.

Amazed at and Offended by Twain's Treatment of Gorky.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 22.—Twenty-five Russian authors, headed by M. Cherekoff, author of the drama, "The Jews," and M. Kuprin, author of "The Duel," to-day published a resolution condemning Americans for their treatment of Maxim Gorky.

"The American authors represented by Mark Twain," the resolution says, "have offended Russian authors in the person of Maxim Gorky and Russian womanhood in the person of Mme. Andreieva by interfering with their private affairs. We Russian authors are amazed at such disregard of the principles of privacy recognized by every civilized country, and hereby express our deep indignation."

Fell Four Stories, but Will Live.

While delirious, Louis Brass, a mechanic, 40 years old, jumped out of a fourth-story window of his home, 860 Park Avenue, Williamsburg, to the sidewalk early yesterday morning. An awning broke his fall and saved him from instant death. The only injuries he sustained were a fracture of the right leg and contusions over the left eye and shock. He will recover.

Baltimore & Ohio Inspection Trip.

BALTIMORE, April 22.—President Oscar G. Murray of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, with Third Vice President Potter and several heads of departments, started this evening on the annual inspection trip, which is to take in the entire system. The trip is expected to extend over about three weeks. The first stop is to be made at Chicago, where the party will spend several days.

RUNAWAY ON SPEEDWAY STOPPED THE BRUSHING

Promptness of Mounted Policeman Prevented Mishap.

MANY ROAD DRIVERS OUT

Candidates for Cup Contests Made Good Impression — Big Crowd Watched Fast Speed Trials.

A runaway on the Speedway yesterday morning, when the racing was at its height, put a stop to the sport for a while, and narrowly escaped bringing disaster to some teams which crowded the famous course.

Only the promptness of Mounted Policeman Sowarby prevented more serious consequences. John Mitchell of 334 East Fifty-fourth Street, with his fourteen-year-old daughter, rode in a two-seated wagon, which was drawn by a spirited bay mare. Coming down the half-mile stretch the horse showed signs of restlessness. The driver succeeded in holding her in check until he neared the big crowd of spectators at the finishing line of the brushes. Here the horse got beyond control of the driver and bolted. As he did so the young girl shrieked, and Sowarby was after the runaway like a flash. Near the bridge he grabbed the reins, but the horse swerved and got away again. The horsemen scattered all over the Speedway drive and the promenaders quickly found shelter. The wagon rocked and swerved from one side of the drive to the other, and the occupants were several times in danger of being thrown out. After a hard chase of over half a mile, Sowarby succeeded in again catching hold of the reins and brought the horse to a standstill. Thinking the horse had spent itself, the policeman released his hold on the reins, and the animal feeling her head free made another mad dash. Another long chase followed, but the policeman once more brought the horse into subjection, and held it for a time. Mr. Mitchell finally drove quietly to the stable.

Miss Giulia Morosini, in a white driving coat suit and wearing a jaunty red hat, drove her prize-winning high steppers, Tom and Jerry. With her father by her side, she was loudly applauded as she drove past the grand stand, showing her horses off to the best advantage. Mrs. J. S. Caldwell, wife of the Superintendent of the Speedway, in a plain white chiffon broadcloth suit, and pale blue hat, driving Minnehaha and Laughing Water to a racing wagon, was another feature. Several other women drove fast horses during the day.

The pleasant weather brought out several thousand interested spectators, and public interest was rife as the new Speedway performers are fast becoming known. The old performers more than held their own with the new-comers, and both showed themselves to be in condition for the big annual parade and the approaching cup contests.

George H. Huber drove Gracie Pandit several heats. He won and lost with S. T. Debee, driving Leo T., but defeated Estrella, driven by Ren Clark, in two successive heats. Claus Bohling was behind the one-time Speedway champion Kingmond, and after an exciting brush won by a close margin from Kitty Wilkes, with W. Scott driving. The latter showed several fast half miles, and is better this year than ever. When in proper condition Kitty Wilkes will make it interesting for the other fast ones.

Dr. H. D. Gill, President of the Road Drivers' Association, drove Sue Dix, and afterward Coast Marie. With I. Fleming driving the former and Dr. Lee behind Coast Marie, the pair with G. W. Archer and Lady Direct made one of the best three-cornered brushes of the day, with Coast Marie first and Lady Direct second. Sue Dix and Coast Marie afterward broke even in two heats.

William O'Brien's trotting pair, Ollie Keep and Quartermaster, beat H. B. Gates's pacers Andy Mack and Frank Bashford in two brushes. The first was a close one, but in the second the Gates pair broke and lost considerable distance. Team racing promises to become one of the Speedway features this year. Among the other teams were: Frederick Dietz and his well-matched pair, Mineola Prince and Royal Light, and W. J. Hiscock and a new pair, Quick and Fannie. Mr. Evisson's team was among those which attracted attention.

L. W. Boynton driving Lord March engaged in several brushes, defeating, among others, C. C. Lloyd's Malzour. J. Blackburn Miller was driving Nick Duff, 2:22¼, which won from Kingmond in a couple of brushes the latter part of last season.

Charles Weiland showed several fast half miles with his new purchase, Sir Albert S., the fastest horse by records now owned in this city. Sir Albert S. has a record of 2:03¾, and formerly belonged to C. K. G. Billings. Andrew Crawford's Effie Shannon beat Charles Sokedo's Ila, and then led John F. Cockerill and the one-time matinée favorite Annie Little over the finish line.

Nathan L. Ely showed his new cup candidate, Staff, (2:29¾,) a good-looking trotter, which shaped like a winner.

J. Campbell's cup winner Susie G. made an excellent showing against S. T. Debee's Leo T., and won a good brush from the latter. Joseph F. Gibbons again drove his mysterious pacer, which is being kept under cover. E. J. La Place was busy both morning and afternoon. With Star Pugh he made matters lively in the morning, and did good work with Baron de Shay in the afternoon. W. W. Archer held the reins over Chestnut, (2:13¾;) Harry Richmond drove Harry Van, and E. J. La Place closed the day's work by jogging Cascade.

Eifler Brothers Lead Cyclists.

J. M. Eifler of the Century Road Club Association won the seven-mile handicap road race on the Merrick Road from Freeport to Valley Stream, L. I., yesterday. Eifler rode from scratch and covered the distance in 19 minutes. F. W. Eifler, also on scratch, finished second, two-fifths of a second later. George Gunz, with 2 minutes handicap, was third, and D. Steinhauser, with 2:30 handicap, was fourth.

Holligan Beats Road Riders.

J. T. Halligan of the Bay View Wheelmen won the twenty-two-mile road race from Hicksville to Valley Stream, held in conjunction with the century run under the auspices of the Century Road Club of America, yesterday. Holligan's time was 1:05. B. Hill, also of the Bay View Wheelmen, finished second two minutes later; W. Rawleigh of the Park Circle Club was third. Hill, however, was protested for taking pace.

ANOTHER KEARSARGE VICTIM.

Electrician McArdle Dies Aboard the Maryland—Officers' Bodies Here.

The armored cruiser Maryland, having on board the bodies of Lieuts. Joseph W. Graeme and John M. Hudgins, the two officers who were killed in the explosion in the forward thirteen-inch gun turret of the battleship Kearsarge on April 13, arrived in New York yesterday morning. The original orders were for the cruiser to proceed to Hampton Roads, but when she was 500 miles off Cape Henry she received wireless instructions to come here.

As soon as the Maryland anchored off Tompkinsville the naval tug Pawnee came alongside to take off the body of Lieut. Hudgins. The body was sent to Washington, and will be buried in Arlington Cemetery.

The funeral services of Lieut. Graeme will take place in Calvary Church, Twenty-first Street and Fourth Avenue, this morning at 10:30 o'clock, the burial following in Calvary Cemetery. The body will be escorted by 300 officers, sailors, and marines, and the consolidated bands of the armored cruisers Pennsylvania, Colorado, and Maryland, the first two vessels having arrived yesterday soon after the Maryland.

On the way to New York Electrician McArdle of the Kearsarge, who was injured in the explosion, died as a result of his injuries. His body will be buried in this city.

Four of the sailors injured in the explosion on the battleship Kearsarge arrived on the Maryland. They were W. R. Lydig, yeoman, second class; M. J. Maher, gunner's mate; L. T. Nolan, gunner's mate, and J. D. Shea, seaman. They are all doing well, and were sent to the navy yard for treatment.

AGAIN THE AXE IN QUEENS.

Supt. Hicks Emulates the Late Mayor Gleason in Checking Tunnel Co.

Superintendent of Highways James P. Hicks of the Borough of Queens has adopted the plan of the late Mayor "Battle Axe" Gleason in dealing with the Degnon Contracting Company, builders of the Belmont tunnel under the East River. The swamp land between Hunter's Point and Biswell has been nearly all bought up by the company for the purpose of deepening and widening Dutch Kills Creek in order to create sites for factories. The contractors have been working with a free hand and big steam pumps have been covering portions of the meadows with black mud from the swamp holes.

Residents of Hunter's Point are in fear of an epidemic of malaria or something worse as soon as warm weather sets in. The contractors are now in a clash with the Superintendent of Highways over the building of a fence cutting off Beach Street. Supt. Hicks ordered the work stopped, and declared yesterday that if the contractors attempted to continue work on the fence to-day he would personally visit the spot with an axe and cut it down.

AFTER FOREIGN AUTO PRIZE.

Percy Pierce Will Compete Against Best European Cars.

Percy Pierce of Buffalo, the winner of the Glidden Cup tour last year, will probably be the only American competitor abroad this year in the big European automobile events. He will not enter the Grand Prix race in France on June 26 and 27 for that speed contest, and his interest in motor contests has been confined to endurance or reliability competitions with regular touring cars. Mr. Pierce will drive in the European circuit, the biggest touring event that has ever been planned, and after that he will enter the Herkomer Cup contest in Germany.

The European circuit will cover a distance of 2,905 miles. It will begin July 26 at Paris, and end at Paris on Aug. 15. In that interval there will be fifteen days of actual driving, the daily distances running from 246 miles on the first day to 99 miles on the last day. This event is in charge of a general committee, including representatives of the automobile clubs of France, Germany, Italy, Austria, and Belgium. It is in one respect the outcome of the protest made last year by many leading automobilists against road races, where speed alone was considered.

Over twenty cars have been entered for this long tour, but when the entries are closed it is believed the number will reach nearly fifty.

It is to be regretted that Percy Pierce will not be seen in this year's Glidden Cup tour, but his career abroad as the American automobile representative in the biggest motor tour ever planned will be watched with keen interest. Mr. Pierce will drive an improved model of the Pierce-Arrow car that he used in the Glidden tour last year.

Automobile Notes of Interest.

No matter what route may be selected for the Glidden Cup tour this year half a dozen Thomas cars may take part in it. The season is early as yet for entries to be announced, but several enthusiastic owners of "flyers" have declared their intention of competing. Among these are C. A. Coey of Chicago, C. S. Henshaw of Boston, and A. V. Hart of Rochester. All will drive their own cars.

Instead of arranging the programme of Atlantic City races after all the contestants have gone to the course the Race Committee has prepared in advance a programme of the events that will be run on the beach on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday. The events for the first day, next Wednesday, are: Record trials, steam, (three entries;) four-cylinder cars, championship, (four entries;) John H. Lyons Cup, for American touring cars of thirty horse power or less, (ten entries;) standing start, championship, gasoline cars, (five entries;) touring cars, gasoline, selling at $4,000 or less, (fifteen entries;) special event for stripped touring cars of fifty horse power or less, (five entries;) Price handicap for four-cylinder touring cars, (twenty-one entries.)

F. E. Moskovics, who will drive one of the Frayer-Miller cars in the Vanderbilt Cup race, has just returned from a trip to the factory, where he made a careful examination of the racing cars. One of the engines is nearly assembled and the work on the other parts is going rapidly forward. Nearly every essential detail in the engine is novel to a marked degree, and shows great study by the designer, Lee Frayer. The compression of the machines will be over 120 pounds, which is considerably higher than in the speediest water-cooled machines.

The E. H. V. Company of Middletown, Conn., is installing the new power plant in an Otto racing boat, 80 feet long and of 5 feet beam. The power is to be furnished by a 32 horse power plant consisting of two of the 16 horse power compound engines arranged tandem. The new equipment is expected to be sufficient to secure a speed of twenty miles per hour, and the compound boat will be seen in a number of the motor-boat races this year.

A great deal of misapprehension exists as to what constitutes speed of thirty miles an hour and upward. A good many motorists, who perhaps at times drive as fast as thirty miles an hour, are certain that they are going at least ten miles faster. Thirty miles an hour on an ordinary road is pretty fast, and the impression made upon the occupant of the car is similar to what he would feel at a sixty-mile-an-hour rate on a broad straightaway course with first-class surface.

TAKE 1,000 PRISONERS IN PITTSBURG RAID

New Reform Mayor Sweeps the Tenderloin.

SOME WELL-KNOWN CAPTIVES

But No Favor Is Shown, and They Stay in Jail—Magistrates Unable to Hear All the Cases.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 22.—The most complete raid ever made in Pittsburg started at 11 o'clock last evening, and by 6 o'clock this morning, when the last wagon discharged its load at the police station, 1,000 persons had been arrested by the thirty-five plain clothes men who conducted the raid.

The entire Tenderloin of Pittsburg has been cleared up, and Mayor Guthrie declares that the lid is down to stay.

Caught in the dragnet were the sons of some of the most prominent Pittsburg families. Although they pleaded for their release, all were treated alike. On account of the great number of prisoners, it was impossible for them to arrange bail until this morning, and all had to remain huddled up like sheep in Central Station.

This morning the work of hearing the cases started early and continued until the Magistrates were completely worn out. Then they refused to hear more, and the others had to go over until to-morrow. In all 522 cases were heard, 200 persons were released on bail, while the remainder of the unfortunates are still behind the bars. The Sergeant's desk was piled high with money, diamonds, and other valuables.

When George W. Guthrie, the reform Mayor, took office on April 1 he promised that the lid would go down. He had been in office for three weeks, there was no sign of impending trouble, and the Tenderloin came to believe that none was coming. But the preparations had been going on quietly. Plain-clothes men gathered all the testimony, and, because the keepers of the resorts knew the regular detectives, men were picked from the ranks who were unknown.

Warrants were sworn out against the owners of 122 resorts. The raids were made under the personal supervision of Frank Ridgeway, Director of the Department of Public Safety, and Supt. Thomas McQuaide.

"I am well satisfied with the result of last night's work," declared Mayor Guthrie this evening. "I believe that the city can be run without these disorderly places, and we will do our best to keep them out."

Each of the principal prisoners was fined $100 costs, with the alternative of three months in the Workhouse. The other prisoners were fined $1 to $10.

TROLLEY CARS WRECKED.

Passengers Have Narrow Escapes in an East Orange Collision.

In a rear-end collision which took place at Main and Mulford Streets, East Orange, shortly after 8 o'clock last night, two trolley cars were wrecked and several passengers had narrow escapes from injury.

Both cars were west bound, and the first had stopped to take on some passengers. The other car, of which John Feren of Newark was motorman, was running close behind the first, and its brakes failed to work.

Several men were on the rear platform of the first car, and a number of them managed to jump to safety before the cars came together. The others were cut with flying glass. The front of the rear car was completely demolished.

Oarsmen on the Harlem River.

President James Pilkington of the National Association of Amateur Oarsmen is arranging for a special meeting to forward the project to make a National regatta course at Pelham Bay. There has recently been a big revival of interest in the proposed new waterway. President Pilkington believes the time is ripe to organize committees to carry the project to a completion. The effort to make New York the headquarters of rowing was halted last Fall by the political campaign, but as all the various heads of municipal departments have been appointed, a determined effort will now be made to interest the public officials in the project and secure the necessary appropriation to build the dyke and dredge the course.

There was a big turnout on the Harlem River yesterday, there being over two hundred oarsmen practicing during the day. The Nassau Club led the rowing men in the morning with an intermediate eight, with John Smith coaching. The crew rowed in good style and was composed of Kohler, Covert, Herbert, Hagan, Nixon, O'Connor, Walsh, and Warts. The club also sent out two doubles, a junior four, and several singles. Fred. Fuessel of the Harlem Club went out in a single and then doubled with his partner, Julius Bradley. The club's junior octuple shell made a good showing, and Capt. Nagle was kept busy with his junior eight and four.

The Nonpareils sent out a number of crews. C. S. Titus and O'Neill led in a double. Charles Steinkamp and Fred. Bachus did some good work, and there are many members of the club who believe they will win from Titus and O'Neill. Steinkamp was Titus's partner last year. Within a couple of weeks the two doubles will row a trial heat and the winner will be entered in the Harlem Regatta. The Unions had an intermediate eight and four out. The latter is a likely-looking crew. The four-oared gig, Neal, Lyons, Pullman, and McDonald, put in a good hour's work. The junior eight shell rowed several miles in the afternoon.

Joseph Colahan rowed a Metropolitan single and coached the club's intermediate four. He had a lot of men out on the river and boated about eight different combinations, a total of forty men. The club is planning an active season. Kiely and Corbett promise to make a fast intermediate double.

The Crescent junior eight was made up of Hoskins, Turner, Virge, Livingston, Koop, J. Pattenaude, Graham, and Robinson. This crew is showing big improvement. A Crescent junior four and a brace of doubles completed the crews sent out by the club. From the Wyanoke Clubhouse Hart and Hartenstein, a junior double, and James Breen in a single shell kept company. A junior four also went out in the morning.

Frank Veseley and Julius Bradley of the Bohemians were in a senior double and Veseley also rowed in a single. William Milacek stroked a junior eight which showed improvement over last week. The Friendships and Lone Stars each showed an intermediate four, and Capt. J. Mulcahy had charge of the Atalanta junior eight. The latter club also sent out a junior double, senior single, and junior four. The Dauntless made an excellent showing with two doubles, a single, and a senior and junior four.

At Travers Island the junior eight created a good impression. The men have become thoroughly familiar with the outdoor conditions, and the New York Athletic Club should make some sort of a showing in this season's regattas. Durando Miller is doing well in training for the intermediate singles, and Quinn and Stewart should develop into a strong pair. Coach Giannini looked after his junior eight and sent them around Glen Island at good speed.

REBUILDING SAN FRANCISCO.

A correspondent in another column makes an interesting suggestion as to the mode of structure to be employed in San Francisco, based on the example of the new Capitol in the City of Mexico. There the steel frame is used, incased in masonry of light volcanic rock ground and mixed with cement, giving apparently great strength and solidity, combined with moderate weight, and avoiding the small blocks that are supposed to be liable to be shaken off in case of any shock. Unquestionably the facts as to the Capitol of Mexico, which was designed after much study especially for resisting earthquakes, will be carefully investigated and considered by those charged with the San Francisco problem.

But the most formidable and important part of that problem does not relate to the erection of high or large buildings. These can unquestionably be made sufficiently resistant to earthquakes and sufficiently secure from ordinary fire risks to serve all usual purposes. There will be money enough for that, and skilled talent enough to spend it effectively. The gist of the difficulty in San Francisco is how to replace with fire-proof buildings the vast number that were cheaply built of wood and served as fuel for the conflagration before which many of the great buildings and multitudes of the more expensive dwellings went down helplessly. If the highly inflammable structures crowded in great masses over extended sections of the town cannot thus be replaced, and at a feasible cost, then the renewal of the awful risk is as certain as anything can be. For this work there is needed some material that is at once substantially indestructible by fire and sufficiently inexpensive.

Reinforced concrete, of which the Mexican Capitol is an adaptation, naturally suggests itself. There is no doubt at all of its almost complete indestructibility, in ordinary combinations, by fire. The question of cost, however, is an extremely important one. It happens that the Pacific Coast is a dear market for both steel and cement, as compared with the East, and that it is the cheapest market on the continent for lumber. That is one reason why wood has been so almost uniformly employed in the cities. Such difficulties as these may be met by organized capital, energy, and intelligence, though the task must be hard. If it were practicable to form an extensive organization of this sort, which could command the lowest prices for material and services, and would give individual owners the benefit of such command, instead of leaving them to work out their plans each for himself, and in competition with all others, the cost could very greatly be reduced. That is a "trust" that would be received with praise and thanksgiving by the great body of sensible and humane people. It would, if properly managed, be entirely beneficent, and yet there would be in it enormous advantage for the vast interests centred in the rebuilding of San Francisco. The two hundred millions of insurance money that has been swallowed up, and further masses of capital the investment of which has been imperiled and impaired, show the interests which would derive immense profit from absolute security that the conflagration of last week could not be repeated.

UNDERTAKING TOO MUCH.

There is no sort of doubt that the Kaiser wrote his telegram to the Austrian Minister of Foreign Affairs, and it is equally clear that President ROOSEVELT himself wrote his remarks regarding the confiscation of wealth and the regulation of railways and corporations. In both cases the echoes showed how clearly drawn is the line between ecumenical and personal deliverances. The views of the Kaiser regarding Morocco and the Transvaal are interesting and even disturbing, but not even in Germany are such deliverances regarded as ranking with the utterances written for the Kaiser by his Chancellor.

The personal authority of THEODORE ROOSEVELT is as great as popularity can make it, but he himself is teaching us to draw distinctions between his personal and official authority. He can agitate, but he cannot legislate. The reversals of his personal policy be hard to surpass, but he has written his signature as President at the foot of no closed chapters. It is a pity that such an enormous influence for good is so far wasted through defective judgment in selection of subjects and methods of attack. A less pretentious programme would have been more fruitful of results.

MOTES AND BEAMS.

Secretary TAFT reprimands Mr. WALLACE as publicly and sharply as President ROOSEVELT scolded Judge HUMPHREY. But so far as we have observed lawyers and Judges approve Judge HUMPHREY's course, and engineers have publicly expressed their opinions that Mr. WALLACE had excuse for leaving an employment which subsequent events have proved not to be what it had been represented to be, and which still is a record of aspiration rather than achievement. If the Administration travels much further along these lines self-respecting men of reputation will hesitate to enter a service in which adulation is a greater qualification than ability or loyalty to public duty.

The Judge who fined the railway rebaters $60,000 the other day said nothing about his colleagues in a co-ordinate jurisdiction, but such easy success in prosecution at this late day is an arraignment for permitting breaches of law to accumulate through years until we have a railway problem of present proportions, but which would have no existence if the laws had been well enforced. This is something for the Executive Department to think about when it is so freely blaming others for their shortcomings.

THE ENGLISH SCHOOL QUESTION.

It is not easy for us Americans, accustomed for so many years to non-sectarian and practically secular instruction of all the children in every community at the common expense of the taxpayers, to realize the complexity and difficulty the new English Government must encounter in dealing with the question of education. The bill that has just been introduced in the House of Commons by Mr. BIRRELL for the Government bristles with provisions of the most minute nature relating to matters that have absolutely nothing to do with schooling as we understand it, mostly connected with religious instruction or religious exercises. In this country it seems the most natural thing in the world for the public Treasury to supply the best secular schooling the local authorities choose to arrange for, and to leave religious training entirely to the parents or to such agencies as the parents select. It is true that this system does not suit a very large minority, who think that the school moneys should be in part divided among the sects which are taxed—as individuals, not as sects—to be used as the sects may prefer. But this minority view is probably less sustained now than at any previous time, and, despite sincere and earnest effort, has left, so far as we are aware, no trace on the school legislation of any of the States.

By the act of 1902, the cost of education in what were known as "voluntary," and since then have been known as "non-provided," schools has been borne by taxation, but the control of these schools has not been vested in the educational authorities. These are now to pass under such control, if public money continues to be expended on them. In these and in all "provided" schools, that is to say, in all schools supported by taxation, the religious instruction is limited to the Bible and the fundamental beliefs of Christianity. This is the provision of the bill that has made and is making all the trouble. The Churchmen, as a rule—there are many conspicuous exceptions—object to the kind of religious instruction to be given as "Nonconformist," and in their view practically not really religious at all. On the other hand, there is a large body of Englishmen, mostly Nonconformist, but in part Catholics and in part non-sectarian, who object strongly to the payment of expenses of schools under the control of the Church of England, as is now the case to a large extent.

There is another provision in the bill that will seem curious enough to American readers. It permits the local school authorities in urban districts, where the parents of four-fifths of the children in attendance unite in requesting it, to give "extended facilities" for religious instruction. That is to say, in a district where four-fifths of the parents are Roman Catholics, Wesleyans, Jews, or of any other specific belief, and they request that their belief be taught in the schools, the authorities are allowed to make such provision. All this, as will be seen, is very far from the notion of public school management we are used to. It is probably, however, a step in the direction of ours. It is significant that one of the opponents of the bill, Mr. MASTERMAN, who is reported to be a High Churchman and a Socialist, declared that there was but one solution of the religious difficulty, and that was for the State to cease wholly to subsidize any form of religion in any way. He was supported by Mr. MACDONALD, a Labor member.

A LOOK AROUND AND AHEAD.

A foolish writer who has access to a respectable journal has assumed to reckon the losses at San Francisco at a billion dollars. The basis of calcuburned. It would be dastardly to exaggerate the situation, and no one of perception of responsibility would minimize it. There is every reason for sizing up the case exactly as it is. For ourselves we are content to let our first estimate of $200,000,000, more or less, stand, although it was made when some were estimating the loss at a quarter of that, and although the billion dollar estimate arrived after ample opportunity for leisurely correction. To double the entire assessed valuation as a means of arriving at the realized loss, and without deduction for insurance or for the sites which were unburned although swept of buildings, is a rough and ready means for deriving a shocker which defeats its own purpose. The result is a laugh, not a moan.

Taking the loss at a quarter billion there is still something to think about. Here in a week we have a loss of a good part of the cost of the Boer war to England, which spread through many months, or of Japan's war expenses. Can we go scot free where serious results might be expected? The textbook illustration of the effect of such destruction is that of repairs to a broken window. The glazier and the glass factory get business, and that is good for labor and trade. But such forced circulation of money is not as good as though the window had not been broken and the cost of repairs had been spent otherwise while the window remained whole. The swift rebound of the security market should not be interpreted as meaning that unparalleled generosity has done anything more than relieve distress. There are dragging days ahead, and possibly reaction. It therefore may be as well to ask what further reassuring considerations the situation contains.

The broken window illustration is imperfect, because the window was not producing wealth. The distinction is that between destruction of mined gold and destruction of a producing mine. San Francisco was an immense going concern, and its tools are lost. But the organization remains, and its history is a magnificent demonstration that the investment is grandly profitable. The mined gold is gone, but the mine may be made better than ever. San Francisco's real wealth was not its destroyed buildings, but its power of earning profits. That is unblemished. The situation is that presented when one of CARNEGIE's mills was destroyed and he said he did not care—his staff survived. The mortality of San Francisco's catastrophe is a hardly calculable percentage. The Governor of California estimates San Francisco's wealth at one-fifteenth of the State's, and upon the considerations above set out it may be reckoned that San Francisco's wealth is substantially untouched. The infinitesimal calculus is necessary to reckon the relation of the quarter billion loss—no small thing in itself—to the Nation's wealth. There will not be a bushel less in the crops, nor a bale less in the cotton crop, no man will lose a day's labor, but the contrary, and railway tonnage will be increased.

Once more. This is not the same as saying there will be no loss. What will happen will be a diversion of profits. The profits will be as large as ever, but they will go to different recipients in cases of poverty, and those who are able to retain their investments must increase them in order to renew their incomes. Those who furnish the new money for rebuilding and starting the machinery again will have first lien upon the renewed earnings, and only after their demands are satisfied will the old owners be reinstated. Baltimore is a perfect illustration. It is indeed wealthier than ever, but its mortgage records tell the tale. San Francisco will repeat Baltimore's experience, including the mortgages. The recuperation will amaze the world, but the scar will remain. The loss and the creation of fortunes will both date from the past week.

We are puzzled by our telegram from Chicago to the effect that the meat packers are "beating" the railways. We had supposed from the few paragraphs which come from Washington upon the subject of railway abuses that the railways are the rascals, but it appears that the shippers are rather the worse of the two. They understate weights and misdescribe contents of packages, and otherwise cheat railways running out of Chicago by $5,000,000 yearly. It will be recalled that similar petty thefts were sworn to here. When the railways know that they are carrying fresh meat at salt pork rates they are accomplices in fraud upon the competitors of the shippers and upon the consuming public. This is the offense which everybody agrees with President ROOSEVELT in condemning. But when the railways are deceived into carrying high-class freight at low-class rates they are as much injured as anybody. In defending their rate sheets they are conferring a service on the community and perhaps making it possible to reduce rates later on. But the first effect is to raise the average rate by making everybody pay on the same basis. This was not the result reckoned upon by the shippers in their agitation, and it lends a touch of humor to a topic sadly in need of enlivening.

It is no wonder that the passage of the bill exempting alcohol from taxation when in a form unfit for drinking harmed. The experiments made by the Automobile Club of France show that within certain limits alcohol can be used.

In the graphic account of the recent terrific outbreak of Vesuvius, given in yesterday's issue of this newspaper, from a special correspondent in Naples, readers of THE TIMES got the first adequate and comprehensive description of the ruin wrought by that untamed and untamable giant. It reconstructed for the reader's benefit, as nothing previously printed had done, the fearful sublimity of the scenes of April 6 and the following days, the ruin that followed, the flight, the terror, and the desolation. No one who read it is likely to forget it. Yet the fugitives from the wrath of the mountain are already creeping back to their smitten farms. It may not be long before the vineyards are again tended on the slopes of Vesuvius.

The mangosteen of the Malay Archipelago, a fruit of Hesperidian beauty and delicacy, with white pulp and purple-brown rind, is described in The National Geographic Magazine by Mr. DAVID FAIRCHILD, Agricultural Explorer of the Office of Plant Introduction in Washington. It may yield to efforts at naturalization in America. Over 170 varieties of the best dates from Egyptian oases, the Valley of the Tigris, and Southern Tunis are grown in the plantations of Arizona and California. California produces for market Smyrna figs, Corsican citrons, and the famous hard-shelled almonds of Andalusia. The mango of East India, without fibre and more richly flavored than a peach, blossoms and ripens luxuriantly in Florida.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Chinatown Under Chinatown. A curious feature of the San Francisco fire is its revelation of the extent to which "Chinatown" was a place of cellars under cellars and of long passages far below the streets, into which white men had never penetrated. The existence of these lairs had long been suspected, and stories of the terrible crimes committed in them have been current, but it took the removal of the buildings to show the existence of a second Chinatown under the first. The one to some degrees in view was bad enough, but what went on among the prisoners and jailers of the subterranean city probably passes the Occidental imagination. In the rebuilding of San Francisco an effort should and doubtless will be made to prevent any duplication of these cave dwellings. They were, of course, the slow growth of many years, and a new Chinatown would doubtless be content with the ordinary equipment of cellars—for a while. Then the excavation would begin again and in time the old evils would be renewed. The Boston police long ago found it expedient to prevent the establishment of such dens by inventing one reason or another to make the Chinese move from house to house occasionally. That would seem to be a good plan—if the reasons for applying it were sufficiently ingenious. "Colonies" are always bad in direct proportion to their unlikeness to the surrounding population, and Chinese colonies are especially bad, not because the Chinese are all and necessarily wicked, but because their dissimilarity is extreme. It is stated in the dispatches that the Chinese now driven from San Francisco, instead of returning to their old district, will found a city of their own at a considerable distance. This is a rather disquieting scheme, and, if carried out, it will create a "race problem" of an entirely new kind. We have, of course, had small towns in which, for a time, all the inhabitants were foreigners of one kind, but always there has been the intention of final Americanization, more or less complete, while the Chinese city now proposed would have as fundamental principle a continuous separation from American influences. It would be an extremely queer place and there is some question if the addition to our diversities would be desirable. There is, indeed, some difficulty in seeing how the inhabitants of such a city would live, for the Chinese do not come over here to trade among themselves, but to make money out of us.

A Lesson in Spelling. A dog story over 300 years old has just been found in the records of the Southampton court-leet, and is well worth printing just as it was written, not only as a dog story, but because the spelling beautifully illustrates the consistency of those who oppose a reformed orthography because they are so fond of the familiar forms and consider anything new to be barbarous. The tale, as reproduced in The London Chronicle, runs thus: "Item—we present yt at the tyme of our sytting ther hath ben complaynt made of another dogg, betwene a masty & a mungerell, of Peter Quoyte's which hath stronng qualyties by himselfe, which goyng lose abrode doth many times offend the neyghbors & wyll fetch owt of ther howses whole peces of meate, as loynes of mutton & veal & such lyke & a pasty of venson or a whole pownde of candells at a tyme, & will not spoyle yt by the way but cary yt whole to his masters howse, which being a profytable dogg for his master, yet because he is offensyffe to many yt is not sufferable, wherfor his master hath forfeyt for every time 3s. 4d. And be yt comaunded to kepe him tyed or to putt him away upon payn to forfeyte for every tyme he shalbe found in the streets 3s. 4d." There, now, is a fine specimen of Shakespearean spelling, for it is dated 1587. Even this, of course, is itself the flower of numberless reformations and changes, all in the direction of simplicity and phonetics—or intended to be. It is at least as different from the so-called long-established spelling as is that of the letters contributed to our columns occasionally by correspondents who think they are showing by horrible examples the dreadful orthography to which the Carnegie iconoclasts would reduce us all. But what a fine dog story it is, and how quaintly phrased! And how magnanimous is the admission that the animal "betwene a masty and a mungerell," though addicted to larceny, "hath stronng qualyties of himselfe"! The man who made the record was evidently a lover and a judge of dogs, and the implication is that a "mungerell" was then regarded as belonging to a breed of his own as much as did a "masty." This indicates that our use of the word "mongrel" is a misuse, though the accepted etymology supports us.

Certain In a discussion of "Fads in Dietetics,"

"Few of our families," it says, after declaring that we have not been in America long enough to be thoroughly acclimated, "have been on this side of the Atlantic for over 100 years, and those that have enroll themselves in societies to emphasize their own regrettable scarcity." The enrollment is hardly for that purpose, though it undoubtedly has that effect—when one comes to think the matter over. There is certainly cause for thought in the fact that to be the son or daughter of ancestors who lived only a few generations ago really is a distinction, of a sort, in the America of to-day. It hints at a fast-approaching extinction of the original strain and the substitution therefor of others. Ah, well—the fittest will survive, for survival is the last and convincing and irrefutable proof of fitness, by inevitable definition.

THE NEW WESTERN BUILDING.

Type of Structure That Should Be Erected in the New San Francisco.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Amid the horror of this catastrophe there are surely valuable lessons to be learned from a study of the constructions still standing in California, and, to avert future disaster, it is certain that architects and engineers will make a careful study of the effects of this disturbance upon various classes of buildings. The question arises, even now, whether Eastern capital will be easily obtainable for new constructions in a country now recognized as liable to such disaster, and a word upon this point, and upon the probable style of the new Western skyscraper, may now be in order, for all know that the West will soon spring up from its prostrate condition. The chief question confronting us is, How shall the new Western building be constructed?

Behind the fire lines, during the Baltimore fire, I saw the effects of heat upon the modern skyscraper, but the effect of earthquake is a very different one. Fortunately, however, the construction of the modern steel skeleton building, with its roots deeply imbedded in the soil, can be adapted to resist earthquakes; at least this has been believed, and the results in California, as we now hear of them, bear out this theory. The skeleton steel construction appears to have stood the best, although its terra-cotta filling seems to have had an uncomfortable habit of shaking out, thus exposing the steel frame work.

Little has been published of the new Capitol of Mexico, a palace for which the Mexican Government has now allotted $6,000,000 as a primary installment toward a home for its Senate, Chamber of Deputies, and National Library. This edifice is now under way, and has been especially designed to resist earthquakes. A general skeleton of steel columns and beams is erecting, which will not be filled with the small pieces of terra-cotta usually used in the United States. In Mexico there is a light volcanic rock, resembling coarse pumice stone, which is mixed with cement to form a masonry, and this entire skeleton of steel will be solidly imbedded in this material. The masonry will be strong enough to support the steel, and this steel will form a gigantic basket-work strong enough to support the masonry and prevent cracks forming under strain from terrestrial disturbances.

To my mind this is approximately the form of construction which should now be adopted for important works upon the Pacific Slope. As an Eastern man, I must acknowledge that the Westerner is usually the first to generally apply a new idea, and our new construction, termed "reinforced concrete," of which the Mexican Capitol is an adaptation, is sure to find favor in California, where this new style of building may furnish veritable white monoliths, rising like mushrooms upon now wasted soil.

BRITISH MILITARY RED TAPE.

Prompt Relief of St. John's Shows It Does Not Always Hamper the Navy.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In an editorial yesterday in regard to the efficiency of the military aid to the San Francisco sufferers you say, "Special dispatches from London express envy as well as admiration for the Gordian manner in which the American sword cleared the tangle of red tape which hampers the efforts to perform such a feat of prompt relief by means of the machinery of the British Army."

I remember being in Halifax, Nova Scotia, some fifteen years ago when the news reached that city of the great fire which had swept St. John's, Newfoundland. The cruiser Blake lay in harbor. The Admiral was hundreds of miles off in New Brunswick, salmon fishing. Half the officers were on leave. Yet within an hour of the time the news was received all arrangements had been made with headquarters in London, and the great ship, one of the fastest cruisers then afloat, was being coaled and loaded with lightninglike rapidity and dispatch. Thousands of tents and vast quantities of provisions were taken on board, and also a corps of Royal Engineers, with all appliances for blowing up dangerous buildings, &c. Precision, keenness, and the smoothness of clockwork marked all preparations, and within a few hours H. M. S. Blake was making a record run to Newfoundland, bringing the first aid possible to the stricken colony. I shall never forget the magnificent spectacle of the great warship coming down the bay with the speed of an express, tearing through the green water, her outlines black against the setting sun, with officers on deck and band playing.

To the eye of at least one impartial observer there had not been much "red tape" apparent in this, very probably, average incident in the British service.

MESSAGES TO THE ANXIOUS.

Would It Have Helped to Send the Surplus at Oakland to Ogden by Train?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The telegraph companies have taken pains to assure the public that all possible efforts to transmit messages from San Francisco and the bay cities near by have been made by them since the San Francisco disaster.

My family lives across the bay from San Francisco, and I have every reason to believe made great efforts to reach me with a telegram on Wednesday, assuring me that none of them had been killed. I did not hear from them until this morning, when I received a telegram from a relative in Chicago. She had just received a letter from my family giving the news I had so anxiously awaited.

If the telegraph companies had more than they could possibly handle and of business piled up, as reported, three days ahead at Oakland and San Francisco, why did they not put some of their piled-up thousands of messages on a train, send them to Ogden or Los Angeles or Portland and then have them forwarded to Eastern points over the many wires available at those places?

WEALTH NOT AT FAULT.

Evil Lies in Methods by Which It is Diverted to Favored Holders.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

From much that is said about the danger of great fortunes one might be led to ask why it is that wealth, the friend of man, the offspring of his toil, becomes, as soon as great enough, his enemy. It is evident that even the smallest amount of wealth may be put to dangerous uses, but not easy to see why any wealth that is properly used should become dangerous simply because of its greatness. Is there any reason why one who makes proper use of his wealth up to a certain amount should all at once or even gradually begin to abuse it and turn it to dangerous uses when that amount is exceeded?

The real danger, the shadow only of which seems to perturb the public mind, lies not in the greatness of fortunes, but in their composition. They consist in great part not of wealth, but of privilege falsely accounted wealth, because of its value in acquiring wealth it has no part in producing. Dissipate the fortunes as often as they appear and still the danger will remain as long as the privilege continues. Destroy the privilege and the danger will cease. The fortunes will, moreover, be thereby reduced without the least diminution of wealth, or any taking of it from its present possessors.

Privileges are not wealth, but governmental devices for diverting it from channels of ownership which exists in the nature of things and cannot be changed by conceits of law or custom. Not to wealth but to the manner of its accumulation should attention be directed, to land monopoly, inequitable taxation, and grants of corporate power.

JOHN SHERWIN CROSBY.

New York, April 22, 1906.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I. A. W., in his letter in your issue to-day, states clearly the principle upon which property passes upon the death of the accumulator. While it passes by grace of the State, it does not and never did pass in a State of the Union by grace of the Federal Government. What might be a necessary or proper State policy is one thing. What the Federal Government ought to do is another. Mr. Roosevelt's proposal is that the taking be done by the National Government, not for the purpose of its support, but to reduce fortunes. The taxing power exists for the purpose of supporting Government only. To pervert it to the scheme developed by Mr. Roosevelt would open the door to confiscation in the guise of taxation.

PRAISE FOR POETS' CORNER.

A Reader Who Likes the Verse He Finds on This Page.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Permit me to express my appreciation of the "Poet's Corner" on the editorial page of your esteemed paper. To me it is its most valuable feature, and I always find myself turning to it before reading the rest of the paper. Your Foley and Guiterman are indeed great poets; the refreshing, boyish wholesomeness and delightfully human quality of the former are as welcome as the breadth of view and intensity of imagination of the latter, who, by the way, does not contribute often enough to suit his admirers.

In particular I wish to express great admiration for "The Secret" of the former and "Men" of the latter; both are masterpieces, and ought to be classed with the best poetry ever written. Keep it up—Foley and Guiterman! S. G.

Gloucester City, N. Y., April 21, 1906.

A CRITICISM.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

What is the use in publishing such an editorial as your leader in to-day's issue, which must either disgust or befog your readers? Can it be possible that the editors of THE TIMES are unable to distinguish between "relentless exposure of and attack upon every evil man," &c., and "indiscriminate assault upon character"? And yet your editorial on "Mr. ROOSEVELT's Speech," implies such inability.

You ask, "What, precisely, is Mr. ROOSEVELT driving at?" and then ask: "How are the general public, with their means of getting at the truth, to know accurately when the talk is exaggerated and when it is within the proper limits?" That is the point exactly. They cannot know, and therefore Mr. ROOSEVELT calls upon their informants—the journalists and magazine writers—to give them only the exact truth.

Of course, much of the speech was trite. The bulk of Mr. ROOSEVELT's public utterances are. But in these days of sensational and highly spiced current literature a little commonplace common sense will do no harm, but may do much good.

I believe, that President ROOSEVELT's speech of yesterday was a most timely and valuable one, and I regret greatly that so influential a journal as THE TIMES should—for no conceivable reason except political effect—attempt to belittle it.

E. H. SEWARD.

New York, April 15, 1906.

We willingly give Mr. SEWARD a hearing. We venture to suggest to him, however, that his statement that THE TIMES attempted to "belittle" the speech of Mr. ROOSEVELT "for no conceivable reason except for political effect" is one which he cannot possibly know to be true, and which we, who do know, assure him is quite devoid of foundation.

In Favor of Special Police.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Commissioner Bingham and THE TIMES are absolutely correct in the contention that owners of private enterprises should pay their own special policemen. Now that the issue has been ventilated the position taken will undoubtedly be sustained by public opinion. Of course, private business interests will put up an energetic fight for the continuation of the privilege which they have enjoyed so long at public expense.

It is a matter of common observation that when a strike is declared policemen paid by the community are sent posthaste to guard the interests of the employing class as against the working class, although nominally detailed to preserve "law and order." During the last Subway strike so many police officers were detailed to duty in the interests of the corporation that the patrol force was very materially reduced, and the officers were forced to do extra duty.

Let Gen. Bingham and THE TIMES keep up the agitation against prostituting the public powers for furthering private ends, and carry out this just principle to its logical conclusion.

Wouldn't Allow $1.40 for a Tombstone.

From The Los Angeles Times.

W. Westlake of Chicago refused yesterday in the Superior Court to allow $1.40 of the estate of his grandmother, Mrs. Arabella Dinsmore of Redding, to be expended on a tombstone for her grave.

There was just $96.46 left in the estate. A score or more of heirs, with the exception of Westlake, agreed to expend the entire sum for a tombstone to the memory of Mrs. Dinsmore. Westlake insisted on having his share of the estate delivered to him in coin, and the court

HEART OF RAMESES II. FOUND.

Organ of Egyptian King Preserved in a Vase for 3,164 Years.

A recent issue of the Comptes Rendus of the Paris Academy contains an account of the successful identification of the heart of Rameses II., the Sesostris of the Greeks, after having been preserved since 1258 B. C. in soda and resinoid antiseptics.

Some months ago the Council of the National Museum of the Louvre acquired possession of the four vases in blue enamel which contain the viscera and heart of Rameses II., and bear large medallions, representing the names and attributes of the King.

The Directors of the Egyptian Museum desired absolute confirmation as to the contents of the vases, and intrusted the examination of their contents to M. Lortet, who, with his colleagues, Profs. Hugounenq, Renaut, and Rigan, made a careful physiological examination. Three of the vases contained bandages of linen tightly compacted, and hardened by the carbonate of soda and aromatic resinous substance of reddish color, which had been employed as antiseptics, and had probably contained the stomach, intestines, and liver of the great King. These viscera, however, were only found to be represented by a quantity of granular matter, mixed with a large proportion of powdered carbonate of soda, and so could not be identified.

The fourth vase, which was fitted with a lid or cover adorned with the head of a jackal, proved to contain the heart. This organ was found transformed into a kind of oval plate, 8 centimeters long and 4 centimeters wide. The substance of the heart was hornlike, and the saw had to be used in obtaining sections of it for examination, and finally the razor, so as to reduce these sections to the attenuation necessary for microscopic examination.

Under the microscope these sections gave unmistakable evidence of the muscular fibres peculiar to the heart, especially characterized by being arranged in bundles of such fibres, crossing each other. Since this special muscular arrangement is not found in any other part of the body except the tongue, and, as the mummy of Rameses II., which is preserved at Cairo, contains the tongue intact, the experts have no doubt whatever that the vase actually contained the heart of Rameses II., flattened and transformed into a hornlike substance by its long sojourn in the soda preservative.

King Rameses II. died 1,258 years before the Christian era, and hence some 3,164 years have elapsed since his heart was first embalmed.

Cruelty of Bearing Reins.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Would that our fashionable women could appreciate the suffering they permit to be imposed upon their gentle and willing servants by the cruel bits and check reins which an unwise custom of the day ordains for their beautiful and valuable horses! Noble and tender-hearted women who would not willingly hurt the very least of God's creatures allow these poor dumb victims to suffer these tortures, because they do not appreciate the suffering, or have been informed perhaps that their horses cannot be harnessed or driven otherwise.

I have owned many horses for many years, and I have known many horsemen, some of them the best and most experienced in the land, and from them I hear but one opinion, that horses are in all ways better without such restraint, and that it is not only entirely unnecessary, but of the utmost cruelty.

Need for a Williamsbridge Library.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I heartily indorse Alexander Wynne's "call for a library" in Williamsbridge and Wakefield. We need it—more than anything else, and we want one. Is there any good reason why we can't? I am a great reader, and, like very many others in Williamsbridge and Wakefield, do not have time to spend in traveling back and forth to the city for books. We have three or four schools within short distances of each other crowded with students who have no books other than school books to read. I have also heard many of our school teachers say that they felt the need of a public library here. THE NEW YORK TIMES has done so much along other lines, I wonder if it is not possible for it to do something for us now? WILLIAM WIGHTMAN.

Exiled Prince's Adventure.

From El Imparcial of Madrid.

Don Jaime, son of Don Carlo, Pretender to the throne of Spain, visited Barcelona lately without being recognized by the police. Upon one occasion he was obliged to enter a police station, an adventure recited by himself to a correspondent of a Spanish paper at Paris:

"Upon my arrival at Barcelona, and so as to escape being seen, I went to a modest hotel, where I took the best room and only paid 1s. a day. At night I went out alone, without remembering the name of the street, and when I wished to return home I did not know where to go to. I asked a policeman outside the police station if he knew the hotel, and he told me he didn't. So I went quietly into the station, to the office of the Civil Governor, and asked to be informed where the hotel in question was situated. I was not recognized, and thus I escaped being politely asked to leave Spanish soil."

Women Explorers.

From The London Chronicle.

England cannot boast of many women explorers of eminence, though in France the woman of distinction who travels through unexplored districts with or without her husband is the woman of to-day. We have no one, now that Miss Mary Kingsley is gone, to compare exactly with distinguished literary explorers like Mme. Dieulafoy, or Mme. Delarue-Mardus; and to these another has now been added in Mme. Massieu, who has just been decorated with the Cross of the Legion of Honor. Unlike the other two we have named, Mme. Massieu has always traveled alone and in woman's dress, and has never met with the least unfriendliness, though her paths have lain through such regions as Tibet and Siberia.

On Uncle Joe Standing Pat.

From The Louisville Courier-Journal.

Cheer up, Uncle Joe; you cannot help it. The "desire" for a tariff revision "which exists in the common mind" is not of your making. You have made old Roderick Dhu look like a puny babe. "Come one, come all," said Roderick; "this rock shall fly from its firm base as soon as I." He lacked the symmetrical figure, the heroic mien, and athletic training of you, Uncle Joe, and as you stand pat beside the rock of protection and hurl your defi at the world and them that dwell therein, you make a living picture to stir the admiration, feed the imagination, and cause the blood to cut up capers.

Edward VII. Adores Plovers' Eggs.

From Le Petit Journal.

King Edward adores plovers' eggs, which he generally eats spread on a slice of black bread, called Russian bread. When dining with the Prince and Princess Bariatinsky at Biarritz, his Majesty was agreeably surprised to find this favorite dish on the menu. Plovers' eggs are rather rare just now, and the hostess had to send to Paris for them.

SEASIDE PHILOSOPHY.

I met a grizzled fisherman
Upon the stony beach.
'Twas ebb tide and he raked for clams,
Or anything in reach.

His lonely hut was old and gray;
Gray were his lobster pots;
His boat was gray, the sea was gray;
Gray was the sky—in spots.

"A dull and uneventful life
Is yours!" I paused to say;
"In Winter drear, pray tell me, how
You pass the time away?"

REAL SPRING SUNDAY FILLS CENTRAL PARK

Thousands Out to Watch the World Grow Young Again.

THE CARROUSEL IS SWAMPED

And the Children Work the Swings Overtime—Only the "Hippo" Declines to be Gay.

Central Park was a treat to the eye yesterday—not on account of its natural beauties, for the trees have only just begun to bud; nor is the grass as green as it is going to be later on, but the happiness of the thousands of men, women, and children who had gone thither to enjoy the sunshine was good for any one to look upon.

This is the third Sunday that the Park has had real Spring weather, but the greens and fields have not yet been thrown open to the public. The Park Department is always careful about letting the ball players and picnic parties on the greensward before the ground is ready for them. It takes some time for the turf to harden, and if it should be trampled on now it might take a month or more to repair the damage.

At present the ball ground, the "Green" to the west of the Mall, and the tennis field, are all flying the flag which means "Keep off the grass," but when you see a blue flag with a white round centre go up, you will know that the ball players can start the opening game, and if there is a white star in the centre of the blue, then the followers of croquet and tennis may gambol to their hearts' content.

Though the ball ground near the Columbus Circle entrance was not supposed to be open yesterday, the children arrived in such swarms that the two bluecoats ordered to keep them off finally gave up the job. Children were allowed to indulge in tag and prisoner's base, but an eye was kept on the older boys to see that their sports did not become too strenuous for the present condition of the turf.

A little further on the carrousel and swings were crowded, as usual. Old "Joe" Riker, who has been in charge of the swings for twenty years, was on hand to blow his whistle every five minutes, to announce the end of the nickel's worth, and he did his share of the work of standing behind the swingers and shooting them up in the air if they were too small to reach the footboard to propel themselves.

"Just keep 'em out of the way, so's they won't get hurted." This was the cry of the policeman on duty at the carrousel, and he had his hands full to keep back the children who were continually pushing forward to get a better view of the riders as they grabbed for the far-famed brass ring.

"Say, Jimmie, I got er ride fer nuddin'!"

"Gee, how'd yer do ut?"

"Feller in er shiny lid gimme er ticket."

The free ride thus announced was not the only one, as the sight of the boys and girls staring with longing eyes at the gayly painted horses as they sped round to the music was too much for many people to resist. One man bought a dozen tickets, and as soon as he gave the first one away he was almost snowed under by the rush of applicants.

The Mall is always the centre for Central Park fashions, and the walk was crowded all the afternoon with gayly dressed promenaders. The benches were all occupied with those who came to watch the parade. Every fifth man wore a gray coat with a brown velvet collar, and the girl with him was almost sure to be clad in rosy pink.

The donkeys were as popular as in bygone years, and there seemed to be plenty of persons who could brave the atmosphere of the lionhouse. Visitors to the menagerie were disappointed not to find the crocodiles and friend "hippo" out of doors. They were in the lionhouse still, and will not come out until the faintest suggestion of a chill has left the air. Poor old "hippo" looked most disconsolate in his little pool of muddy water. His face was not visible when the reporter called, but his back wore a very disgusted expression.

It will not be long, though, before every sort and condition of man and animal will find things just as he likes them in the Park. The fields will be thrown open as usual to May parties, ball players, and picnickers, and every one who does not go to Coney can have a good, healthy outing right here in the heart of the city.

RUSH TO CONEY ISLAND.

Fine Weather Brings Big Crowd—Coney Aids 'Frisco, Too.

Coney Island welcomed the biggest crowd of the early season yesterday. Those persons that came to the resort early in the afternoon were amply repaid by the fine weather that prevailed, but toward evening a high wind came up, and overcoats were in demand.

The Pike's Peak Railway, a new scenic device, was thrown open to the public, and with the other attractions was well patronized. On the Bowery was a typical Summer crowd, and ballyhoo men and barkers had things their own way. Even along the beaches, as well as the Brighton boardwalk, the throngs surged back and forth, and everything indicates a record season for Coney Island.

Several of the concerts and dance halls had announced that part of their receipts were to be donated to the San Francisco sufferers, and this was a bait that drew many a dollar that otherwise would have remained in the pockets of their owners.

The business men of Coney Island by popular subscription raised over $2,000 at a meeting held Saturday night, and kettles have been placed along all the main thoroughfares where contributions for the relief of the California sufferers may be placed.

BLOCK ON BROOKLYN BRIDGE.

Power Gives Out and Trains and Cars Are Stalled.

Because of a sudden failure of power about 11 o'clock last night trains on the Brooklyn Bridge stopped and hundreds of persons in them found themselves prisoners. The lights went out, and for nearly half an hour the passengers were in darkness and in ignorance of what had happened.

In the meantime crowds gathered at each end of the bridge, and the jam increased every moment until the blockade was lifted. The trolley cars stopped, too.

The cause, it was said, was the placing of extra trains in service without increasing the power.

Four men of a party who had fought with knives and fists all the way up from Ulmer Park were arrested at the Manhattan end of the bridge. The rest of the gang escaped.

Foreign Idea for New Bellevue.

Dr. M. S. Gregory, physician in charge of the psychopathic ward of Bellevue Hospital, will sail for Europe next Thursday on the steamship La Savoie, to be gone two months. Dr. Gregory goes to study sanitary arrangements of noted European and English hospitals to use in the new Bellevue Hospital.

V. FLOYD CAMPBELL DEAD.

Artist Who Drew the Roosevelt Bears for The Times.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, April 22.—V. Floyd Campbell, the artist whose drawings of the Roosevelt bears have appeared in the Sunday TIMES for some weeks, died late last night in Morton, Delaware County, of tubercular pneumonia. He had been ill for months, and had visited Saranac Lake in a vain search for health.

Mr. Campbell began his career as a pen and ink artist through the assistance of Charles B. Lewis, better known as "M Quad." He was born in Port Austin, Mich., the son of a poor blacksmith, and his talent asserted itself early in life. When in school he drew cartoons of his teacher on the margins of his text books. He studied drawing in school and out of it, giving the time he could get from farm work or from his labors with the French-Canadian fishermen of Saginaw Bay.

Following a letter he wrote Mr. Lewis he became a student at the Detroit Museum of Art. His father died and he became a sign and roof painter. Then he was employed by engravers in Lansing.

Finally he became a member of the art staff of a New York paper. He went to Cuba for that paper during the Spanish-American war. In 1899 he came to Philadelphia and had done work for several local papers and magazines.

Mr. Campbell is survived by a widow, who was Miss Alice Rutherford.

BRONSON HOWARD ON ACTORS

Tells Church Alliance the Profession Is Steadily Improving.

Bronson Howard was the speaker at the meeting of the Actors' Church Alliance at All Souls' Church last night. He was introduced by the pastor, the Rev. Thomas R. Slicer, as "the best deserving of our playwrights." Mr. Howard spoke on "The Growing Dignity of the Dramatic Profession."

The low standing of the actor up to the middle of the last century, he declared, as well as that of the dramatist, poet, and literary profession generally was due to their dependence and the corrupt influence of society. He said:

"The men of the stage had to fight for their men and their women, but they finally drove society back. It was forced from the stage, the wings, the dressing room, and finally from the stage door. For a long time it hung about the stage door on the street, and I myself saw the last of it at the old Gaiety Theatre in London, where the young men of society with their carriages near by congregated in a half-circle about the stage door."

From the middle of the last century, he said, the actor had risen steadily in dignity to himself and his profession, and was now as independent as the merchant, manufacturer, lawyer, or sea Captain.

SAY ALLEE PROFITED, TOO.

State Examiners Think Him Belcher's Ally Instead of Victim.

Special to The New York Times.

PATERSON, N. J., April 22.—George W. Allee, the former Secretary of the Manchester Building and Loan Association, has as effectually disappeared from public view as the former President of the association, ex-Mayor William H. Belcher. As the books are closely examined, it is becoming evident to the State Examiners and the officers of the association that Allee, who was forced to pay thousands of dollars when Belcher decamped, and received the sympathy and help of his friends, was an ally of the missing Mayor.

An attempt has been made to show that Belcher was ruined by Allee, but the condition of the association's books, the examiners say, show that Allee and Belcher must have worked hand in hand.

Signatures considered to be forgeries of Allee's name on fake mortgages, resold pass books, and unindorsed loans are now said to be Allee's writing.

The Sheriff has attached everything owned by the missing ex-Secretary.

COLER ON CIVIC HONESTY.

Footpads and Crooked Directors in the Same Boat, He Says.

Bird S. Coler measured the "higher law" by the Eighth Commandment in an address that he delivered yesterday before the People's Institute, Mount Vernon. He said in part:

"The man who takes what is not his is a thief, whether he be a Director or lurks in a dark alley with a blackjack up his sleeve.

"The command 'Thou shalt not steal' is simple. It does not fit in with the recent combination of railroad interests in New York, or with the operations of the insurance companies and the coal barons. For our children we intrust our savings to men paid princely salaries. For years we live in a fool's paradise. Two of them quarrel over the spoils and the revelations come.

"They plead the 'higher law.' But for you and me it would not be right to sell paper and ink as stock, and try to give it value by squeezing an exorbitant car fare tax out of the miserably served public. For you and me it would be murder to slay a man for his money, but for the coal company to quench in blood a purely industrial uprising with a troop of hirelings comes under the 'higher law.'

"The people demand a bill to free the city from the traction combine. It was so mutilated that its author cried out in horror. Distinguished lawyers are the new lobbyists. They do not soil their hands with bribery; they pose as legislative secretaries to the heads of civic organizations. To my mind the difference between Andrew Hamilton and Andrew Fields is only of degree.

"There is a cure for all this. The 'higher law' must go, and the plan command 'Thou shalt not steal' be obeyed."

TROOPS TO SUPPRESS MINERS

Large Force of French Soldiers Sent Into Pas-de-Calais District.

LENS, France, April 22.—Comparative calm prevailed last night throughout the district of Pas-de-Calais. A railroad bridge was destroyed and several stacks were burned at Lievin. In the course of the night 7,500 troops arrived in the district and were quartered in public halls.

The thirteen miners who were rescued from the Courieres Pit No. 2 on March 30, twenty days after the great disaster in the coal mines there, left to-day for Biarritz.

EDWARD VII. ON ARCHAEOLOGY

Glad the American and English Schools Are Working Together.

ATHENS, April 22.—Sir F. E. H. Elliott, the British Minister to Greece, gave a luncheon to-day at the legation in honor of King Edward, who in the course of the luncheon chatted with Prof. Washburn of the American School of Archaeology.

The King said he was delighted to find that the British and American schools were "working harmoniously in the same garden," and expressed pleasure with his visit to the American school last week.

PLAYGOERS IN CONFLICT BEHIND CLOSED DOORS

Lively Times and Hot Words Over Electing Officers.

FIGHTING MISS BINGHAM

Lots of Applicants for Her Job as President, but She Isn't Tired of It Yet.

The disagreements among the American playgoers came to open battle last night when the club met to choose officers in the College Room of the Hotel Astor.

The leaders of the American Playgoers have been at loggerheads for some time, and the members have also been at sixes and sevens. Everybody was a General in last night's fight, and nearly everybody was a woman. The result may be well imagined, for it cannot be described, the reporter having been ignominiously repulsed. Another unhappy man was put asunder from his wife at the door, because she was a member and he wasn't.

"But I'm her husband!" he protested.

"But you are not a Playgoer," said Dr. Landes, the Treasurer.

"Then tell her to come out," thundered the husband. But the message was not carried, and for hours, while the conflict raged inside the college room, he paced the hall, with the grinning bellboys, now and then making a vain plea to be allowed to go to the assistance of his wife.

Miss Amelia Bingham was elected President of the club some time ago. When she first shook the governing reins the horses got restive and finally bolted, deciding that they must have another driver.

The club split up into various factions and every faction nominated its own ticket. To compare the tickets intelligently would have been as easy as taking the kinks out of a Chinese puzzle. The marked differences were for the Presidency, the Vice Presidencies, the Secretaryship, and the Recordership, and these differences surrounded Miss Bingham, Mrs. Dore Lyon, Murray Carson, Eden E. Greville, and William M. Schnitzer. To judge by the noises in the College Room at one time, ten members arose at once, and through the panels, even unto the far hallways, leaked a clamor above which could be distinguished "detrimental to the good—," "disturbing element—," "destructive policy—," then a hush; a woman's cry, "Never did a blessed thing for the club," followed by another onrush of feverish tempest.

Late last night they were still at it. Eden E. Greville came to the door for a moment to breathe cool air.

"My wife!" cried the unhappy husband. Then the door closed and the tempest sank from double forte to pianissimo.

At 11:30 there came a lull in the proceedings. Several members with ballot boxes rushed out of the fray, dashed along the hall, and found refuge in another room behind locked doors.

In the College Room the members returned to discussion of the drama and from that to discussing the discussers. Then a member arose and demanded that an apology be tendered by another member to Mrs. Trow "for scurrilous attacks made."

Then, as somebody in an amendment was remarking that "certain members were quite beneath notice," it was discovered that the door was open. It shut with a bang.

At midnight a scout approached the door of the room where the ballots were being counted. He was informed that the victory would not be to the victor for some time yet.

JUDGE McKENNA QUITS.

Cables His Resignation from the Federal Bench of Porto Rico.

SAN JUAN, Porto Rico, April 22.—Charles F. McKenna of Pittsburg, Penn., Judge of the Federal Court of Porto Rico, has cabled his resignation to President Roosevelt.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—Representative Dalzell said to-night that he had received a telegram from Judge C. F. McKenna of the Federal Court in Porto Rico announcing that he had resigned. Mr. Dalzell said, however, that the telegram did not give any reason for the resignation.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 22.—E. J. McKenna, partner of Judge McKenna in the legal firm of McKenna & McKenna, here, on learning of the resignation of the Judge, said:

"I am dumfounded at the news. It was only last Monday that I received a long letter from the Judge in which he spoke of his pleasant surroundings and made special mention of the nice way in which his judicial duties were being presented. Now, on the heels of this comes the news of his resignation. It is very strange."

A letter from Judge McKenna reached Pittsburg only yesterday, in which he said he was delighted with his surroundings and with his office.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—A slight depression that developed during Saturday night and still persists over Virginia has caused a continuation of the showers in the lower lake region, the Upper Ohio Valley, and the Atlantic States as far south as North Carolina. There were also local rains and snows in the upper lake region, and light local showers in the South Atlantic States. Low temperatures prevail from the Upper Mississippi Valley and upper lake region eastward, except on the coast, the departures from the normal ranging from 5 to 15 degrees. In the Mississippi Valley, the Gulf States, and the West the weather was generally clear, with no temperature changes of consequence.

The rain will cease during Monday morning in the lower lake region, the Middle Atlantic States, and New England, and generally fair weather may be expected Monday and Tuesday over the eastern half of the country. It will continue cool on Monday from the lake region and the Ohio Valley eastward, followed by rising temperatures Tuesday. In the South, Southwest and Central West clear weather will continue, while in the Northwest the prevailing low pressure will probably cause showers Monday or Tuesday. There will also be showers Monday and Tuesday over the northern districts west of the Rocky Mountains.

The winds along the New England Coast and the Middle Atlantic Coast will be fresh northwest to north; South Atlantic Coast, light to fresh north; Gulf Coast, light to fresh and mostly south. Lower lakes, fresh to brisk north to northeast. Upper lakes, fresh north to northeast, shifting to east and southeast by Tuesday.

Eastern New York—Fair Monday; Tuesday fair, warmer; fresh northwest to north winds.

New England—Fair Monday, preceded by showers in east portion; Tuesday fair, warmer in west portion; fresh northwest to north winds.

Western Pennsylvania and Western New York.—Partly cloudy Monday; Tuesday fair, warmer; fresh north to east winds.

Eastern Pennsylvania, Delaware, and New Jersey—Fair Monday; Tuesday fair, warmer; light to fresh northwest to north winds.

The temperature record for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from the thermometer at the local office of the United States Weather Bureau, is as follows:

	1905.	1906.		1905.	1906.
3 A. M.	47	53	4 P. M.	50	62
6 A. M.	42	49	6 P. M.	57	58
9 A. M.	45	48	9 P. M.	50	53
12 M.	51	56	12 P. M.	49	53

The thermometer is 108 feet above the street level. The average temperature yesterday was 54; for the corresponding date last year it was 50; average on the corresponding date for the last twenty-five years, 51.

The temperature at 8 A. M. yesterday was 49; at 8 P. M. it was 54; maximum temperature, 62 degrees at 4 P. M.; minimum, 48 degrees at 9 A. M.; humidity, 67 per cent. at 8 A. M. and 69 per cent. at 8 P. M.

THE LAST OF THE SOCIETY.

Farewell to an Organization That Once Stood for Reform.

Yesterday afternoon from 1 to 6 the funeral taper of the Society of American Artists burnt low, flickered, and went out, leaving a name behind—but a name with a good odor, all the same. For when the society started nearly thirty years ago there was work enough to do convincing the Academy that its exhibitions were puerile and the public that anecdotes in cold, tight painting, were not all there might be in art.

We ought to be grateful to those who suggested and started the rival organization for the sacrifices they made in the cause of what they believed to be sound art. Even long after, when the society reached the dignity of a home in West Fifty-seventh Street, and its power for reform had been shown by betterment in the shows of the Academy, it was still alive only through the will power of its members in the face of the coldness of the public.

That coldness and indifference as expressed by the lack of patronage at its shows did not discourage the exhibitors. Year after year there was a deficit to be filled; year after year the society pluckily returned to the attack. Meantime, if the exhibitions did not pay, they afforded chances to compare work by new men and test that of the older artists, so that the greater number of Americans who are now engaged in monumental painting, in wall painting on a grand scale, have passed through the trials of the society. Many were admitted long ago to the Academy, but it was the spirit they felt and emulated in the younger organization which prevented them from becoming picture making machines.

Among the 184 members of the merging society are not a few to whom this spirit is foreign, because they are painters of the commonplace; but that is true of all bodies of artists. Sufficient if the number of dullards is comparatively small. Among the charter members were the late Olin L. Warner, sculptor, and Swain Gifford, painter, and among those who saw the birth of the Society and are present at its death are John La Farge, Louis C. Tiffany, William Sartain, Augustus St. Gaudens, and Francis Lathrop. Early to join were William M. Chase, Maitland Armstrong, Will H. Low, Albert Pinkham Ryder, and Abbott H. Thayer.

The first to institute a prize in the society was Dr. W. Seward Webb of New York, who gave $300 for the best landscape. It was won in 1887 by J. Francis Murphy, with his "Brook and Fields." It was won this year by Edward W. Redfield, with "The River Delaware." From 1892 to 1900 the Shaw Fund of $1,500 per annum was expended by Mr. Samuel T. Shaw in purchases at the exhibitions. In 1901 this was changed to a prize of $300 for figure pieces, won by William Sergeant Kendall with "A Fairy Tale." In 1902, the $1,500 was re-established. A memorial prize of $300 was founded in 1902 for the best work by an American woman; it was in honor of Julia A. Shaw. In 1901 Mr. Andrew Carnegie founded a prize of $500 for the best oil painting by an American, the donor reserving the right to buy the premiated picture at the catalogue price.

While sales at the annual exhibitions of the society increased somewhat as the years rolled by, they have never been what they would have reached, had New York been a well-knit and patriotic community. Very few of our citizens who make fortunes in New York appear to think it their business to encourage art. They spend their money on costly houses, clothes, equipages, yachts, the opera, motors, balloons—anything rather than such things as are considered naturally to the taste of cultivated people. Unfortunately these people are so greatly in the majority that it is almost impossible for art to leaven the lump of stolid Philistinism.

It is one of the glories of the Society of American Artists that they kept up the fight with undiminished gallantry for nearly thirty years and won their hardest battle among the most difficult of enemies—the Philistines of art intrenched in the old Academy.

PORTRAITS OF OTHER DAYS.

Exhibition of Works by Colonial Painters and Later Men.

The Ehrich Galleries, 8 West Thirty-third Street, have one of those special exhibitions that form the delight of historians and students of the development of painting. It contains portraits of bygone worthies, some of which are sufficiently provided with pedigrees to be surely what they claim to be, while others open vistas of dispute to the genealogist. Portraits are also here concerning which the name of the sitter tells us nothing, such as "Frau von Korbiz" and "Frau von Mordagt," but the dress and jewelry of these forgotten dames of the eighteenth century have some interest for the students of a science comparatively new, that of clothes. Nowadays there are exhaustive books on ancient and mediaeval clothes; Paris and Berlin have special museums devoted to this very human concern, where lay figures are set out, wearing the raiment of different ages and a multitude of nations.

No less than three Washingtons are here by our old friend Pictor Ignotus, another by George Jouett, a fourth by Charles Wilson Peale, a fifth assigned to John-athan Trumbull, though it is more in the manner of Vanderlyn, while a sixth and seventh are credited to Gilbert Stuart. Then we have two more from the easel of Miss Jane Stuart, who took up her father's brush and continued to supply the demand for Washingtons until long after the civil war.

With the head of Timothy Pickering by Gilbert Stuart we come to a picture that shows character in the brushwork as well as character in the sitter. Fine work is also seen in his likeness of Mrs. Lloyd. And so with the Thomas Sullys, of which there are five; the half-length of David Clinton Jones has that air of ease which tells of a success. Henry Inman's portrait of President Martin Van Buren is vivid—a capital piece of color and modeling. Among the Copleys the full-length of David Garrick, dressed for a Shakespearean part, is a picture for a player's club. Harding's likeness of Lewis Cass and Neagle's somewhat theatrical, or, shall one say forensic, full-length of Henry Clay, together with Rembrandt Peale's likeness of the same worthy, are, to say the least, curious; they might well belong to a historical society. To these, being also more agreeable in brushwork, one may add Henry Inman's of Edmund Randolph and Trumbull's likeness of James Madison.

Among interesting portraits of women are the quaint heads of the mother and sister of Fraunces, the New York innkeeper, also a "Lady in White," by Gilbert Stuart, and the likeness of a Miss Page of Virginia, by Chester Harding. Other pictures of men of the past are the likenesses of John Jay, James Lloyd, Judge Daniel Gross, Thomas Jefferson, Judge Nicholas, Andrew Jackson, Timothy Folger, Judge Quinn, and Chief Justice Livingston.

WON'T TELL WHO SHOT HIM.

Bartender Walks Into Bellevue Seriously Wounded—May Be a Burglar.

Henry Wilson, 52 years old, a bartender in a saloon at 59 Stanton Street, walked into Bellevue Hospital yesterday forenoon with a bullet wound in his right temple. Dr. Benedict in the reception ward, found that the bullet had entered near his right ear and lodged in his temple. He was put in the surgical ward, where his condition is said to be serious.

Wilson told the surgeons that he received the bullet wound in a fight in Brooklyn on Saturday night. He would not say where the fight occurred, nor name any of the other participants. He said that one man had fired five revolver shots in the fight, and he received one of them.

Wilson became unconscious last night. The police of the Adams Street Station, Brooklyn, telephoned to the Bellevue authorities asking that the man be held at the hospital. They said there had been two burglaries in the Heights section on Saturday and that a man had been shot there.

ONCE NOTED SINGER DEAD.

Mrs. Florence Terry Expires Suddenly in the Home of a Friend Here.

Mrs. Florence Terry, who lived at South Orange, N. J., and in her younger days was a concert singer of some note, having appeared with the Theodore Thomas Orchestra at Chicago, was found dead in bed early yesterday morning in a room in the apartment of Mrs. Frank Wright, at the Kent Apartments, at the corner of Broadway and 102d Street.

Mrs. Terry died on the seventy-sixth anniversary of her birth, which she had intended to celebrate with Mrs. Wright the next day. Mrs. Terry came to New York on Saturday, and went with Mrs. Wright to a concert in the evening. She retired on their return in good spirits. The burial will be held to-day at South Orange.

PAINTINGS BY HOEBER.

Cloudscapes and Airscapes from Cape Cod and Jersey.

Sixteen landscapes are shown by Mr. Arthur Hoeber in the lower gallery of Clausen's establishment, 381 Fifth Avenue, where they will be visible for the rest of the month. All are oil paintings. They represent the work of last Summer and a part of the Winter season.

They may be divided into landscapes, cloudscapes, and airscapes, according to the predominance of one characteristic or another. Thus as airscapes we may bracket No. 7, "Dawn," with its rain-clouds edged with gold, and its misty atmosphere; also No. 6, "Springtime," in which the clumps of trees beyond the stream are soft blots in the densely vaporous air, and No. 3, "Fog Bound," a stretch of water beyond gray rocks where schooners and steamers show spectral through the moisture-laden atmosphere. To these belongs the unframed and uncatalogued view of meadow and meandering creek with distant and detached tree masses thrusting their rounded outlines into a misty sky.

Cloudscape may serve as a term for such a picture as "Afternoon," in which the water and the marsh of the foreground, depicted in broad shadow, only serve as a foil to the bank of white clouds. And so again in No. 8, "A Tidewater Stream," The heavy shadow of the foreground and the haycart introduced in the darkened middle distance, only call more attention to the fine masses of cumulus suspended above the marsh.

No. 11, "Marshlands," is perhaps the highest note Mr. Hoeber reaches in this collection. There is a subdued richness in the level salt meadows, there is a sure note in the dull turquoise stretch of sea, and color in the ranks of white cloudlets dappling the robin's egg sky. In "The Pond" we have the quiet of twilight with a big white moon—perhaps too white for its nearness to the horizon—standing behind a fringe of trees by the pool. "Salt Marshes" and "Jersey Marshes" are further landscapes which bring out what is best in this painter. In a little picture, almost a sketch, called "Salt Meadows," we see this liking for certain level lines and certain colorful tones very clearly expressed, especially the sweet notes in the sunlit meadows.

The country which Mr. Hoeber celebrates in these unpretentious but well painted scenes is Cape Cod. "Late September," "Autumnal," and "Towards Evening" give the character of this part of the Massachusetts Coast very well.

ROBINSON'S PAINTING HUNG.

Best of the Artist's Work Put in the Museum—Other Notes.

Theodore Robinson's large painting of a girl and a cow, considered an unusually good example of this artist's work, has just been hung in the American Gallery of paintings at the Metropolitan Museum of Art. The picture was a gift to the Museum from William T. Evans, and was much admired by several hundred visitors yesterday.

⁂

Sir Purdon Clarke is much interested in a cast of a ceiling from the Reindeer Inn, Oxford, England, which arrived from abroad several weeks ago.

"The modeling is unusually beautiful in this work," said Sir Purdon yesterday. "I am having it placed in one of the north galleries, and it will be ready for public view in about three weeks."

Sir Purdon is also having the cast photographed for reproduction.

⁂

Speaking of the farewell dinner of the Society of American Artists, where he was a guest on Wednesday night, Sir Purdon remarked, "I don't quite see where the farewell comes in. Instead of riding in a two-horse shay, both societies are now riding in a one-horse shay."

⁂

Gallery 24 at the Museum is being rearranged, and a lot of the more important of the recent acquisitions are being hung there. It will be reopened to the public in about a week.

⁂

Up stairs in a storeroom of the Museum is a collection of models for the statue of Gen. Alexander Macomb, to be erected in Detroit. Owing to the illness of Augustus Saint-Gaudens, the sculptor, who has been confined at a hospital in Brookline, Mass., the meeting of the commission of experts who are to pass judgment on this competition, has been de- [illegible]

Kluczek Wins Cycling Road Race.

In a remarkably close finish Watson J. Kluczek of the Roy Wheelmen of Manhattan sprinted over the tape the winner in the five-mile road race, for the club's championship yesterday afternoon at Valley Stream. Kluczek beat George Gunzer by two inches in 15:48 2-5.

Nearly 1,000 spectators witnessed the contest. Four trial heats at one mile brought together twelve men for the final at five miles. The course was over the famous Merrick Road, starting and finishing at Valley Stream, and turning at Lynbrook. The riders kept well together throughout the final heat, and were all bunched when they were sighted half a mile from the tape. Gunzer attempted to run away from the field in the dash for the tape, but Kluczek beat him, and Charles Nerent was third, a half wheel's length behind. The summary:

First heat, one mile, Watson J. Kluczek first, August Huron second, Herbert Williams third; second heat, one mile, Charles Nerent first, George Gunzer second, Charles Jacobs third; third heat, one mile, Henri Larcheveque first, Emil Wildemuth second, John Wilkins third; fourth heat, one mile, Maurice Stuyck first, B. Soubie second, Frank L. Valiant third.

Final heat, five miles, Watson J. Kluczek first, George Gunzer second, Charles Nerent third, Charles Jacobs fourth, Henri Larcheveque fifth, Herbert Williams sixth. Time—15:48 2-5.

NEW YORKS NOW LEAD IN NATIONAL LEAGUE

Displace Pittsburgs, Who Are Beaten by Chicagoans.

QUAKERS IN FIRST PLACE

Clevelands Defeated and Drop Back to Third—Greater New Yorks Sixth in List.

The games in the West yesterday made conspicuous changes in the championship standing of National and American League clubs. The defeat of Pittsburg at the hands of the Chicagoans places the champion New Yorks in the lead in the National League, with the next four teams within easy distance. In the American League, Cleveland not only lost the premier position through dropping a game to Chicago, but fell back to third place. Detroit now occupies the second position, while Chicago's success compels the Greater New Yorks to drop back.

CHICAGO BEATS PITTSBURG.

Wicker Keeps ex-Champions' Hits Scattered and They Lost, 3 to 1.

CHICAGO, April 22.—Chicago won its first game from the ex-champion Pittsburgs to-day by 3 to 1 in the presence of 14,000 persons. It was a well-played game in the field, but the principal feature was the pitching of Phillippe and Wicker. A few substantial hits were made, but generally both pitchers were effective, especially Wicker. Wagner is credited with two errors, both rather difficult. The outfielders of the Chicago Club did fine execution. The score:

BASEBALL FOR SUFFERERS.

Receipts at Washington Park for Homeless at San Francisco.

The Brooklyn Baseball Club officials to-day will turn over about $1,200 to the fund for the relief of the San Francisco sufferers, that amount representing the money placed in the contribution boxes at Washington Park yesterday by about 5,000 persons who attended the game between the regular team of the Brooklyns and the balance of the club's players, who were designated the Yannigans. The latter were reinforced by "Sammy" Strang of the champion New Yorks, and Hagen, a semi-professional player of Brooklyn, while "Hank" O'Day volunteered his services as umpire. Doescher for the regulars, and Pastorious, for the Yannigans, both left-hand pitchers, were pitted against each other, but Pastorious carried off the honors and his team won a ten-inning game by 3 to 2. N. Y. AMERICANS, 3; NEWARK, 2.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, N. J., April 22.—The New York Americans defeated the Newark Eastern League team at Wiedenmayers' Park, Newark, to-day by 3 to 2. It was a pitcher's battle, in which young Keefe had the better of Pardee. Keefe struck out the Newarkers in quick succession until the fifth inning, after which the fielding of the visitors prevented the Newarks from making any runs. Hahn distinguished himself in the fifth inning by catching Foster's fly to left centre "bleachers." With two men on bases, "Kid" Elberfeld made a sensational catch that resulted in a double play. OLYMPIC GAMES BEGIN.

King George of Greece Formally Opens Carnival in Athens.

ATHENS, April 22.—King George of Greece formally opened the Olympic games here to-day with simple, appropriate ceremony in the great stadium. The weather conditions were perfect, following a showery morning, and the huge amphitheatre was packed to its utmost capacity.

The royal procession arrived to the strains of the Greek and British anthems, headed by King George and Queen Alexandra in their royal carriage, followed by the distinguished guests, King Edward and Queen Olga, the Princess Victoria, and the Prince and Princess of Wales. The members of the Greek royal family followed, attended by brilliant suites, and then came representatives of the various European Courts.

The procession traversed the whole length of the stadium amid vociferous cheering, and the dignitaries took seats in a semicircle. Then Crown Prince Constantine, the Duke of Sparta, who is the President of the games, moved from the centre of the arena, saluting King George, and read an address stating the objects of the meeting, and expressing the hope that the victors, whatever their nationality, would remember that their victory had been acclaimed on the sacred soil of Athens by descendants of the ancient Hellenes. In concluding he begged King George to proclaim the opening.

King George arose and briefly declared the games opened. All the participants, Greek and foreign, then moved in procession around the stadium, headed by bands of music. As the 900 picked athletes of the world filed past the royal family dais they presented an imposing display, and were cheered to the echo. Passing the royal presence, the standard bearer of each team impressively lowered the flag of his country, King George gravely returning the salute.

The games began with gymnastic displays and contests. No Americans participated in these. They continued until late, the members of the royal family remaining to the finish. The Acropolis was brilliantly illuminated to-night.

The Americans are still confident of victory in the games beginning Friday. The four invalids, E. B. Parsons, Yale University; Fay R. Moulton of the Kansas City Athletic Association, James S. Mitchel and H. L. Hillman of the New York Athletic Club, are steadily improving and will doubtless be able to compete in the games.

Ready for the Military Show.

The Annual Military Show will open to-night at Madison Square Garden and continue with two sessions daily throughout the week. In the programme to-night the athletic events will be called promptly at 7:30 o'clock. Following the athletics, Col. W. F. Morris, President of the Military Athletic League, will command the Grand Review, with Controller Metz as the reviewing officer. The command will represent United States Army, Navy, and Marines, Old Guard, Naval Militia, city regiments, and First, Second and Third Batteries. The Cadet Battalion from the Deaf and Dumb Institute will parade, and Troop C will follow with a musical ride, company, and riding drills, volley firing, rough riding, bayonet exercise, and various other manoeuvres will complete the programme.

Troop G, Fifteenth United States Cavalry, after a night's ride, arrived at the Garden from Fort Ethan Allan yesterday afternoon, and the Third Battery reported early last night. The remainder of the United States troops will arrive this morning. They will all be quartered at the Garden.

It has been decided by the Executive Committee of the League to donate the proceeds of to-morrow night's performance to Mayor McClellan's fund in aid of the San Francisco sufferers, when a special programme will be arranged.

BILLIARD BENEFIT PLANS.

Notable Programme Arranged to Aid San Francisco To-morrow Night.

Arrangements were yesterday completed for the big benefit to aid San Francisco, in which all the crack billiardists will compete. It will take place in the concert hall of Madison Square Garden to-morrow night. It is intended besides having the various players contest and give exhibitions of fancy shots, to secure the consent of Mark Twain to make a brief address. He will probably relate the story of the first billiard table in San Francisco during the days of '49.

Two one-hundred-point matches will be played. Champion Willie Hoppe will engage Jacob Schaefer in an 18.1 game; Champion Slosson will meet his challenger, George Sutton, in an 18.2 game, and Cure, Cutler, and Morningstar will play 15 points at three-cushion carroms. Fancy shots will be exhibited by Prof. Karlus, Maurice Daly, Edward McLaughlin, Hoppe, and Schaefer, and a four-handed game of 100 points will be played at 14.2 by the amateur champions, Calvin Demarest, J. Ferdinand Poggenburg, Dr. L. L. Mial, and the present title holder, E. W. Gardner.

The match for second place in the international tourney between Jacob Schaefer and George Sutton, who are tied for the place, will be played to-night. Second money will probably approach $5,600.

Champion Slosson will probably accept George Sutton's challenge for a special match which is likely to take place at the Metropolitan Opera House. Slosson has fifteen days to answer the challenge, and sixty days before he must name the date and place. The date will probably be the latter part of May or the first of June. Seven telegrams were received yesterday from Chicago offering various inducements for the match to be held in that city. Five of the players of the recent tournament, Champion Slosson, Sutton, Schaefer, Hoppe, and the Frenchman, Cure, will leave for Chicago this week to contest a tournament at 18.2 in the Theodore Thomas Memorial Hall, to start Saturday, May 5.

In the tournament just ended Slosson's grand average was 18.47. Sutton, Hoppe, and Schaefer exceeded this. Sutton, because of his world's record single average of 100 performance, attained the best grand average of 24.13. Next to him was Schaefer, with 22.94, and third, Hoppe, with 20.44. Cure's grand average was 15.22, Cutler's 14.46, and Morningstar's 10.91.
